preme Court (whether right or wrong it is not for me to say) have held that no action of ejectment could be maintained upon a title in California, no matter how good it was. The best title that that treaty describes will not sustain an action of ejectment or an action of trespass in favor of the owner of the land until the Government of the United States has given its sanction to that grant in California.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator from Nevada a little while ago made the explanation that in that very case the courts had recognized the hardship which might arise under it, but declared that they were bound by the provision of the statute, whatever the provisions of the treaty might be.

Mr. MORGAN. That is to say, I suppose, that they were bound to consider that Congress in passing that statute had repealed the treaty. Now, Congress can not do that as to a treaty which gives vested rights. We all know that. It can repeal an executory treaty, one moving along with current events, but it can not repeal a treaty so as to take from a citizen vested rights under the treaty. I think every one knows that; and yet Congress has done it, according to the interpretation that is given here to the Dominguez case, in cases where a perfect grant had been made by Mexico, a perfect title conveyed to a citizen of California under the laws of Mexico. Congress by passing an act requiring the assent of the Government of the United States, has deprived that person with that perfect title of his right to his property, so that he can not bring an action of ejectment or trespass upon it until he comes to Congress or to some tribunal of the United States Government and gets a confirmation.

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him on that matter?

Mr. MORGAN. I think I had better yield the floor and let other Senators discuss this question, because it seems I am only provocative of disputation instead of giving any light upon it.

Mr. RANSOM. I should be sorry to appear in that character.

Mr. MORGAN. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. RANSOM. Having recently read the very famous case of the Mariposa grant, which I have just sent for to refer my friend from Alabama to, I will state that the Supreme Court held that if Congress, in passing that commission bill in 1851, in any way contravened the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, that was not a question between Congress and a co-ordinate branch of the Government, the Supreme Court, but it would be a question between the United States and Mexico, and they would consider it; that the Supreme Court, being part of this Government, could not oppose the action of Congress in reference to that matter. I have just sent for the report and will read it to the Senator when it comes.

Mr. MORGAN. I know what it says exactly. I am not in default about that in the slightest degree. But, after all, it is bound to be held by Congress that until a grant in California is confirmed by statute it is no grant at all to maintain an action of ejectment upon.

Mr. RANSOM. The Supreme Court expressly says that but for the act creating the commission, declaring that no title could be good and effective until it went before that commission, it would be the duty of the court to consider every complete or perfected title in California, as was done in Louisiana and Missouri and Florida.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no question about that. It would be the duty of the court, but for that, to consider every case. At the same time there stands that law, and it implies necessarily that the Government of the United States has jurisdiction and power enough over a title acquired under the Mexican treaty to defeat a good and valid title under that treaty unless it gets the sanction of Congress or some tribunal of the United States. That is settled. No matter how they arrived at their decision, that is concluded by the case of Dominguez.

Now, what are we trying to do here? We are trying some new legislative invention for the purpose of killing fraud in these land grants. Instead of leaving this question of fraud where every question of fraud about titles ought to go, to the judiciary, we are trying to make a legislative question of it here in Congress and to settle it by law. We can not do it. We are doing extreme injustice in the effort to do it. How easy it is to leave every one of these grants, no matter whether perfect or imperfect, to the adjudication of a court. Can we not trust our tribunals to do justice? The courts could turn around upon us and say, "You have confirmed eight or ten cases from California, and not less than four of them are arrant and flagrant frauds, and the world knows it;" and that comes out after the confirmation. There the fact stands. We are not as good judges in cases of fraud as any legal tribunal composed of ordinarily honest men that we can select in the United States, who have been sworn and put upon their oaths and their honor.

My judgment is, Mr. President, that the only thing we can do here in order to secure justice to everybody is to open the doors of this jurisdiction to any man's complaint who wants to go there. Put a bar or statute of limitation in and say to him, "If you do not come in a certain time you must lose your property; if you do not come in a certain time and present your claim you shall be considered to have abandoned it in favor of all these settlers who are there."

There is a class of people in that country for whom I have a great deal more sympathy than I have for the large holders of these claims; in fact, I have no sympathy for them at all. But the people who have gone there and been living there, some for twenty-five years, some for forty, some for fifty, some for one hundred and fifty years, they and their ancestors before them, who have settled down and built up little villages and have little possessions upon these grants made by the Government of Mexico, are entitled to protection. To that class of people we ought to give protection. I am perfectly willing to vote for a bill here now that a five years' possession shall be considered as conclusive of title in respect to that class of people who are living in these villages and have these little holdings. I am perfectly willing to do that. I am willing to put it in the power of the courts to say that they shall not be ousted if they have been holding in good faith for twenty years or five years, any time that the Congress of the United States may see proper to prescribe. But those people are to be taken care of.

Every man who has a claim to one of these grants, I care not how big it is or how little it is, ought to have an equal right to come into the court and have his claim adjudicated, whether it is called a perfect title or whether it is called an imperfect title. I do not believe that there is a lawyer on this floor to-day who can sit down and describe upon paper what is a perfect title under Mexican law and what is an imperfect title, and state all the facts that are requisite to constitute a perfect title, and what are necessary to constitute an imperfect title or a mere equity. We do not do it in this bill. We leave that whole question in the air, undecided, unprovided for in the bill. Let the court decide it. Let the court say whether the title is a good one, and if it is give the man a decree for it. If it is a perfect equity or an equity that the court can enforce pro tanto or in full, let the court decide it and give a decree for it. If the party has neither a perfect legal title nor a perfect equitable title, turn him out of doors and conclude his title forever by that decree. Do not say to him, "I will dismiss your petition because on the face of it you have got a good title," at the same time deciding nothing in his favor that he can establish in any other court or against any person for any purpose whatever.

I can not go into this court of equity and file a bill against a claimant or a supposed claimant of a piece of property I may have in this city and affirm that I have got a perfectly good title and the other man has got no title, but that he is merely saying he has a title; that he is not insisting upon it at all, but is merely saying that I can not get a decree of affirmation of perfect title upon a bill like that. I must go into controversy with the real defendants. I must have a litigation. The issues must be made up; the evidence, if any, must be taken; the demurrer must be interposed, and whenever it turns out that I come into a court of equity with a title to a piece of property that is undisputed and indisputable I am to get nothing whatever decided in my favor.

That would not be any more than the mere presentation of a petition to Congress if it comes in affirmation of a grant that a man should go into a court under this bill and say, "Here, I have got a clear title to this piece of property;" and the court is to say, "If you have, we have no jurisdiction of your case; you must go somewhere else to enforce it." That decides nothing, no more than if you were to reject a petition or put it in a pigeon-hole in the archives of the Senate. While we have the subject up, let us give that court jurisdiction to decide any sort of a case that may come up. I am willing to trust them, as much so as I am to trust myself or my brother Senators.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That of the Sixth Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission for the year ending June 30, 1889, there be printed 31,000 copies, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the House of Representatives, and 25,000 for the United States Civil Service Commission.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4411) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the Army of the United States as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5939) for the relief of settlers on Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1840) granting a pension to Sallie Douglass Hartranft.

DISTRICT PUBLIC PARK.

Mr. INGALLS. I rise to a privileged question. I present the report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 4) authorizing the establishing of a public park in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAY in the chair). The conference report presented by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

Mr. INGALLS. I would suggest for the convenience of Senators that this report is somewhat long and will take perhaps ten or fifteen minutes to read. I will ask, if there be no objection, that it may be considered to-night.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4) authorizing the establishing of a public park in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives, and agree to the same with an amendment in the nature of a substitute as follows:

"That a tract of land lying on both sides of Rock Creek beginning at Klinge Ford Bridge and running northwardly, following the course of said creek, of a width not less at any point than 600 feet nor more than 2,000 feet, including the bed of the creek, of which not less than 200 feet shall be on either side of said creek, south of Broad Branch road and Blagden Mill road, and of such greater width north of said roads as the commissioners designated in this act may select, shall be secured, as hereinafter set out, and be perpetually dedicated and set apart as a public park or pleasure ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States, to be known by the name of Rock Creek Park: Provided, however, That the whole tract so to be selected and condemned under the provisions of this act shall not exceed 2,000 acres, nor the total cost thereof exceed the amount of money herein appropriated.

"Sec. 2. That the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, and three citizens to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be, and they are hereby, created a commission to select the land for said park, of the quantity and within the limits aforesaid, and to have the same surveyed by the assistant to the said engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia in charge of public highways, which said assistant shall also act as executive officer to the said commission.

"Sec. 3. That the said commission shall cause to be made an accurate map of said Rock Creek Park, showing the location, quantity, and character of each parcel of private property to be taken for such purpose, with the names of the respective owners inscribed thereon, which map shall be filed and recorded in the public records of the District of Columbia, and from and after the date of filing said map the several tracts and parcels of land embraced in said Rock Creek Park shall be held as condemned for public uses, and the title thereof vested in the United States, subject to the payment of just compensation, to be determined by said commission and approved by the President of the United States: Provided, That such compensation be accepted by the owner or owners of the several parcels of land.

"That if the said commission shall be unable by agreement with the respective owners to purchase all of the land so selected and condemned within thirty days after such condemnation, at the price approved by the President of the United States, it shall, at the expiration of such period of thirty days, make application to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, by petition, at a general or special term, for an assessment of the value of such land as it has been unable to purchase.

"Said petition shall contain a particular description of the property selected and condemned, with the name of the owner or owners thereof, if known, and their residences, as far as the same may be ascertained, together with a copy of the recorded map of the park; and the said court is hereby authorized and required, upon such application, without delay, to notify the owners and occupants of the land, if known, by personal service, and if unknown by service by publication, and to ascertain and assess the value of the land so selected and condemned by appointing three competent and disinterested commissioners to appraise the value or values thereof, and to return the appraisement to the court; and when the value or values of such land are thus ascertained, and the President of the United States shall decide the same to be reasonable, said value or values shall be paid to the owner or owners, and the United States shall be deemed to have a valid title to said land; and if in any case the owner or owners of any portion of said land shall refuse or neglect, after the appraisement of the cash value of said lands and improvements, to demand or receive the same from said court, upon depositing the appraised value in said court to the credit of such owner or owners, respectively, the fee-simple shall in like manner be vested in the United States.

"Sec. 4. That said court may direct the time and manner in which possession of the property condemned shall be taken or delivered, and may, if necessary, enforce any order or issue any process for giving possession.

"Sec. 5. That no delay in making an assessment of compensation or in taking possession shall be occasioned by any doubt which may arise as to the ownership of the property, or any part thereof, or as to the interests of the respective owners. In such cases the court shall require a deposit of the money allowed as compensation for the whole property or the part in dispute. In all cases as soon as the said commission shall have paid the compensation assessed, or secured its payment by a deposit of money under the order of the court, possession of the property may be taken. All proceedings hereunder shall be in the name of the United States of America and managed by the commission.

"Sec. 6. That the commission having ascertained the cost of the land, including expenses, shall assess such proportion of such cost and expenses upon the lands, lots, and blocks situated in the District of Columbia, specially benefited by reason of the location and improvement of said park, as nearly as may be, in proportion to the benefits resulting to such real estate.

"If said commission shall find that the real estate in said District directly benefited by reason of the location of the park is not benefited to the full extent of the estimated cost and expenses, then they shall assess each tract or parcel of land specially benefited to the extent of such benefits as they shall deem the said real estate specially benefited. The commission shall give at least ten days' notice, in one daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, of the time and place of their meeting for the purpose of making such assessment and may adjourn from time to time till the same be completed. In making the assessment the real estate benefited shall be assessed by the description as appears of record in the District on the day of the first meeting; but no error in description shall vitiate the assessment: Provided, That the premises are described with substantial accuracy. The commission shall estimate the value of the different parcels of real estate benefited as aforesaid and the amount assessed against each tract or parcel, and enter all in an assessment book. All persons interested may appear and be heard. When the assessment shall be completed it shall be signed by the commission or majority (which majority shall have power always to act) and be filed in the office of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. The commission shall apply to the court for a confirmation of said assessment, giving at least ten days' notice of the time thereof by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, which notice shall state in general terms the subject and the object of the application.

"The said court shall have power, after said notice shall have been duly given, to hear and determine all matters connected with said assessment, and may revise, correct, amend, and confirm said assessment, in whole or in part, or order a new assessment, in whole or in part, with or without further notice or on such notice as it shall prescribe; but no order for a new assessment in part, or any partial adverse action, shall hinder or delay confirmation of the residue or collection of the assessment thereon. Confirmation of any part of the assessment shall make the same a lien on the real estate assessed.

"The assessment, when confirmed, shall be divided into four equal installments and may be paid by any party interested in full or in one, two, three, and four years, on or before which times all shall be payable, with 6 per cent. annual interest on all deferred payments. All payments shall be made to the Treasurer of the United States, who shall keep the account as a separate fund. The orders of the court shall be conclusive evidence of the regularity of all previous proceedings necessary to the validity thereof, and of all matters recited in said orders. The clerk of said court shall keep a record of all proceedings in regard to said assessment and confirmation. The commission shall furnish the said clerk with a duplicate of its assessment book, and in both shall be entered any change made or ordered by the court as to any real estate. Such book filed with the clerk, when completed and certified, shall be prima facie evidence of all facts recited therein. In case assessments are not paid as aforesaid the book of assessments, certified by the clerk of the court, shall be delivered to the officer charged by law with the duty of collecting delinquent taxes in the District of Columbia, who shall proceed to collect the same as delinquent real-estate taxes are collected. No sale for any installment of assessment shall discharge the real estate from any subsequent installment; and proceedings for subsequent installments shall be as if no default had been made in prior ones.

"All money so collected may be paid by the Treasurer, on the order of the commission, to any persons entitled thereto as compensation for land or services. Such order on the Treasury shall be signed by a majority of the commission and shall specify fully the purpose for which it is drawn. If the proceeds of assessment exceed the cost of the park the excess shall be used in its improvement, under the direction of the officers named in section 8, if such excess shall not exceed the amount of $10,000. If it shall exceed that amount that part above $10,000 shall be refunded ratably. Public officers performing any duty hereunder shall be allowed such fees and compensation as they would be entitled to in like cases of collecting taxes. The civilian members of the commission shall be allowed $10 per day each for each day of actual service. Deeds made to purchasers at sales for delinquent assessments hereunder shall be prima facie evidence of the right of the purchaser, and any one claiming under him, that the real estate was subject to assessment and directly benefited, and that the assessment was regularly made, that the assessment was not paid, that due advertisement had been made, that the grantee in the deed was the purchaser or assignee of the purchaser, and that the sale was conducted legally.

"Any judgment for the sale of any real estate for unpaid assessments shall be conclusive evidence of its regularity and validity in all collateral proceedings except when the assessment was actually paid, and the judgment shall estop all persons from raising any objection thereto, or to any sale or deed based thereon which existed at the date of its rendition and could have been presented as a defense to the application for such judgment.

"To pay the expenses of inquiry, survey, assessment, cost of lands taken, and all other necessary expenses incidental thereto, the sum of $1,200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That one half of said sum of $1,200,000, or so much thereof as may be expended, shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in four equal annual installments, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum upon the deferred payments: And provided further, That one half of the sum which shall be annually appropriated and expended for the maintenance and improvement of said lands as a public park shall be charged against and paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in the manner now provided by law in respect to other appropriations for the District of Columbia, and the other half shall be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States.

"Sec. 7. That the public park authorized and established by this act shall be under the joint control of the commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable, to lay out and prepare roadways and bridle paths, to be used for driving and for horseback riding, respectively, and footways for pedestrians; and whose duty it shall also be to make and publish such regulations as they deem necessary or proper for the care and management of the same. Such regulations shall provide for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, animals, or curiosities within said park, and their retention in their natural condition, as nearly as possible."

JOHN J. INGALLS,
ANTHONY HIGGINS,
ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate,
LOUIS E. ATKINSON,
JOHN J. HEMPHILL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. GORMAN. Does the Senator from Kansas desire this report to be acted upon now or will he permit it to be printed and go over until to-morrow?

Mr. INGALLS. I should prefer, unless there is some reason to the contrary, that it may be now considered.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Kansas will favor us with an explanation of the report.

Mr. INGALLS. Its provisions are generally known, and they are simple. It provides for the acquisition of a tract of land not exceeding 2,000 acres in the valley of Rock Creek, at an expenditure of not to exceed $1,200,000, one-half of which is to be paid by the Government of the United States and one-half from the revenues of the District, in four equal annual installments. It has been discussed in both Houses. The provisions have been generally disseminated through the press, and I believe that the measure, while not all that can be desired and in some respects not in accord with my own views, is generally approved. I think, unless the Senator from Maryland has some particular reason why further inquiry should be made, that I should prefer to have the report acted upon to-night.

Mr. GORMAN. I am very heartily in favor of the general proposition, but in the reading of the report one or two things struck me as rather novel to be introduced in the District in an enterprise of this sort. The first was the fact that you assess, by a commission to be named by the bill, the benefits that accrue to the adjoining property.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not like that. That was not in accord with my own views, but agreeing to it was the result of a compromise.

Mr. GORMAN. I am perfectly well aware that in quite a number of the large cities of the country such is the rule in the opening of streets and other improvements within the corporate limits, where the property advances in value rapidly and where the owner derives benefit from it, but, as I understand, this park is out some distance from the city of Washington, in the country.

Mr. INGALLS. In the valley of Rock Creek.

Mr. GORMAN. The valley of Rock Creek, and it extends to the Maryland line.

Mr. INGALLS. It will extend to the District line, if the money holds out.

Mr. GORMAN. Very good, but the whole of it is located outside of the limits of the city of Washington, and the surrounding country consists of farms and dwellings and property not of very great value to-day. It does seem to me that to choose a commission of our own selection for the purpose of ascertaining what benefit the park will be to the farming country that adjoins, without the right of appeal, as I understood from the reading, is a very extraordinary provision to introduce into a measure here. It is rather a hardship to these people, who practically have only farms and gardens.

The other provision to which I allude is that we are not only to have the engineer officer of the District of Columbia, who is an Army officer, but we add to the military government of this District, at least so far as this park is concerned, and intrust the expenditure of the money of the people of the District to another Army officer, the Chief of Engineers, a gentleman for whom I have the highest regard, and who, I believe from what I have seen of him, is probably the most capable officer I have ever known to occupy that position, and we all have perfect confidence in him. But to put the money, one-half of which is to come from the tax-payers of the District of Columbia, practically under two Army officers, appointed for life, with no control of it by the people of the District and no way to reach it, is going beyond anything heretofore contemplated. I had hoped we would in the course of time, and in a very short time, eliminate that military feature from the management of the affairs of the District of Columbia and put it all in the hands of civilians; but under the provisions of this report we are adding to and extending their power and authority.

As I caught the reading of the report, these are the two prominent features in it, and I suggest to the Senator from Kansas, as it is late in the evening, for it is now twenty minutes past 5 o'clock, that he let this matter go over until to-morrow morning and have the report printed, so that we may have an opportunity to look into it. Probably it is true that at this late day in the session, after the long conference which has been had, nothing better can be done; but with no disposition in the world, as the Senator understands perfectly well, to obstruct the adoption of the report, I think it is due that the Senator should permit us to look at it in print to-morrow morning.

Mr. HARRIS. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that the report is already printed. It was printed by order of the committee. By sending to the room of the District Committee I doubt not we can get any number of printed copies that Senators may desire to see.

Mr. GORMAN. I was not aware of that. I suggest to the Senator to let the report go over until to-morrow morning, so that we may have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. INGALLS. The request of the Senator from Maryland is reasonable, and if he desires to familiarize himself further with the provisions of the report I can not object. I can only add, however, that the report is in many particulars more obnoxious to me than it can be to the Senator from Maryland. I believe that the provision that imposes one-half of the cost of the improvement upon the people of this District is wrong in principle and pernicious in practice. I think it is an unjust burden upon the already overtaxed resources of this people.

The other points the Senator makes are somewhat in accord with my own views, but the report, as is usual in such cases, was the result of a compromise. I do not think anything else can be done.

I may add that the provisions of the report have been submitted to the people through the newspapers and have been the subject of consideration and discussion for a number of months, the conferees having agreed, I think, in July last. There has been, so far as I know, no protest on the part of the people of the District against the report; on the contrary, it has been generally approved, and the decision has been regarded with favor and cordially acquiesced in by those most nearly interested.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator as to the extent of the surface that is appropriated by this bill?

Mr. INGALLS. The quantity of land is not to exceed 2,000 acres and the expense not to exceed $1,200,000.

Mr. BLAIR. Can the Senator indicate the general form of this piece of land?

Mr. INGALLS. It follows the sinuosities of Rock Creek, beginning where the Zoological Park ends, and thence extending westward along the windings of the creek, comprising the banks and cliffs, if you may so describe them, on both sides of the creek to the line of Maryland.

Mr. BLAIR. With something like a uniform width of park?

Mr. INGALLS. Not to exceed a certain amount on each side, the object being to exclude improved property as far as possible and establish a park that shall be limited to the valley of the creek, along which a road is to be maintained that shall run as at present and be protected from any further change in the natural aspect of the region.

If there is objection to the present consideration of the report, of course I consent that it may go over; but I ask that it may be printed, giving notice that at the earliest opportunity to-morrow morning I shall ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask that the report be printed?

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that it may be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose that there are printed copies in the committee-room?

Mr. INGALLS. It can be printed without delay.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose so. I have no objection to the printing, but I should like, if the report goes over, that it be the understanding that we proceed with it early to-morrow morning.

Mr. INGALLS. I have given that notice.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope it may be, as the Senator suggests, at the very earliest opportunity in the morning hour.

Mr. INGALLS. I shall move the consideration of it at the close of the formal morning business, being allowed to do so under the usages and precedents and in accordance with the understanding of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the further consideration of the conference report will be postponed until to-morrow morning immediately after the morning business, and the report will be printed.

UNITED STATES LAND COURT.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. INGALLS. Why can not we vote on the pending amendment to the private land claims bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. If there is a quorum, I hope we may vote upon it.

Mr. SAWYER. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1042) to establish a United States land court and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], which will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 13, page 18, it is proposed to strike out subdivision 7 and insert in lieu thereof:

Seventh. No confirmation shall in any case be made or patent issued for a greater quantity of land than was originally granted by the Government under which the claim had inception, or for any greater quantity of land than was legally granted by such Government when the same was made.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was very anxious this morning, when the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] was discussing this subject, to ask him a question in order to ascertain from him what had been done in the private land claims in California in regard to any claim based upon a grant prior to 1824 and for a greater amount than 11 leagues. He did not desire to be interrupted just at that time. If there is any Senator who is a member of the committee, who can answer that question, I should like to know whether in the State of California there was in contest any private land claim based upon a grant of the Spanish Government prior to the independence of Mexico in 1824 and for a greater amount of land than 11 leagues, and, if there was, what was the action in regard to it?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, in order that the chairman of the committee may have ample opportunity of giving the information asked for by the Senator from Missouri, I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator be good enough to change that to a motion for a brief executive session?

Mr. HARRIS. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, September 26, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, September 25, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. SAMUEL H. GREENE, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing on the resolution referred to that committee providing for printing the sixth annual report of the Civil Service Commission.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That of the sixth annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission, for the year ending June 30, 1890, there be printed — copies; of which — copies shall be for the use of the Senate, — for the use of the House of Representatives, and 25,000 for the United States Civil Service Commission.

The committee recommend to amend the resolution so as to make it read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That of the sixth annual report of the Civil Service Commission, for the year ending June 30, 1890, there be printed 31,000 copies; of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the House of Representatives, and 25,000 for the United States Civil Service Commission.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was adopted.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS UNDER THE BOWMAN ACT.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report, and if the matter is to take any time I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it will not take much time.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the Army of the United States, as reported by the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined, investigated, and reported favorably by the Court of Claims of the United States under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," namely:

To Jesse K. Vawter, of Jennings County, Indiana, $175.

To David Hicks, of Hamilton County, Ohio, $340.

To George Keel, of Hamilton County, Ohio, $300.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I object; but will ask that the report be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the amount involved is only about $700 or $800, and as this is a unanimous report I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. There are eight pages in the report of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the report is so long, I will not insist upon its reading.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND-FORFEITURE BILL.

Several members sought recognition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to recognize the gentleman from Illinois for the presentation of a conference report.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. The question of privilege is this: On the 11th day of September, more than two weeks ago, I introduced a resolution the purpose of which was to ask information from the Interior Department regarding affidavits and papers affecting this bill. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

The resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the House what number of cases are now pending in his Department in which the claims of settlers are antagonized by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company or by other companies whose roads were not constructed within the time required by the granting acts. And whether said Northern Pacific Railroad Company is now seeking a reversal of previous decisions of the Department of the Interior favoring settlement claims. And whether said Northern Pacific Railroad Company has at different times filed different maps of general route for any portion of its line through the same part of the country, and, if so, whether public lands have been withdrawn from settlement and entry along each of said lines as the same was changed, or along additional routes, prior to the definite location of the line of such portion of road, and whether the Department of the Interior maintains or has maintained such withdrawals as an exclusion of the right of settlement and entry, prior to definite location. And, specifically, what are the decisions of his Department upon the point of the legality of withdrawals on second or subsequent maps of general routes, so filed, and of the validity of such indemnity withdrawals as against settlement rights under the terms of the grant to said company. And whether said company is seeking the reversal of previous decisions of the Department upon said points.

And he will further inform the House whether said Northern Pacific Railroad Company failed to definitely locate any portion of its road during the period within which, by the conditions of its charter, the road was required to be constructed, and what the decisions of his Department are upon the point of the legal right of a railroad company to definitely locate a line of road after the period when, by law, the entire road was required to have been completed. And whether the decision of Mr. Secretary Chandler upon this point has ever been overruled by subsequent departmental decisions or by the courts, and, if not, whether the principle of said decision is applied in the practice of the Department to said Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

After more than seven days had elapsed, on September 19, I introduced resolutions under clause 5 of Rule XXII. This was done after I learned that no action had been taken by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Alabama that the bill has been brought back for re-reference, and owing to the absence of a quorum in times past the bill was not brought up and the re-reference was not made.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I introduced the resolutions six days ago—and they have been printed in the RECORD—asking to have the committee discharged from its further consideration and have immediate action. My reason for doing that is because it is of the utmost importance that information which is now on file in the Interior Department shall be before this House before this bill is considered.

No report whatever had been made on September 19 nor had the resolution been brought back for re-reference.

Besides, the matter was of such great importance that I introduced two resolutions, one of which was referred to the Committee on Rules and the other to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

The resolutions are printed on page 11201 of the RECORD. They are as I will read:

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolutions were introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama:

"Whereas on the 11th day of September, 1890, a resolution of inquiry was introduced in this House and was on that day referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads; and

"Whereas more than a week has elapsed since the reference of said resolution to said committee and no report has been made thereon by said committee: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Pacific Railroads be, and they hereby are, instructed and directed to report said resolution back to the House without delay;"

to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads.

The other resolution was in a little different form, so that I could meet any possible objection or point of order, and was referred to the Committee on Rules:

"Whereas on the 11th day of September, 1890, a resolution of inquiry was introduced in the House and was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads; and

"Whereas more than a week has elapsed since the reference of said resolution to said committee and no report has been made thereon by said committee: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Pacific Railroads be, and they are hereby, discharged from the consideration of said resolution, and that the same be now brought before the House for immediate consideration;"

to the Committee on Rules.

This is the first opportunity that I have had to ask that these resolutions, or at least one of them, be considered.

Under the rules of parliamentary law and the decisions of this House they are privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not consider that question superior to a conference report, which by the rules of this House is given preference even over a motion to adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. But, Mr. Speaker, will you let me read one little paragraph from the rules?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think it takes precedence over a conference report?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I think that the resolution is essential.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think it takes precedence over a conference report?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I think so; and I think I can show the Speaker that it does. On page 511 of the Manual it decides:

A motion to discharge a committee from the further consideration of a "resolution of inquiry" not reported within one week from the date of its reference is a "privileged question."

Two decisions by the Chair are cited on that point—one by Speaker Keifer and one by Speaker CARLISLE. In both cases it was held to be privileged; and it is privileged when the information that is sought to be obtained—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman say that it takes precedence over a conference report?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. It is privileged over a conference report in a case like this. We are proposing legislation upon a question, and in order to act with intelligence on the subject certain information contained in the Interior Department is absolutely essential.

We are informed that more than a thousand affidavits made by miners and settlers in the Northwest are on file in the Interior Department, and that they show that the bill proposed to be considered will do these poor miners and settlers great injustice unless it is modified.

The rulings upon this matter can be found in the Journal of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, pages 1120-1125.

The Speaker will recollect that Speaker Keifer decided that a similar resolution by Mr. Robinson, of New York, was privileged.

Another case appears in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, page 1420, where Mr. CARLISLE decided that a case in which Mr. Taul-bee had introduced a resolution of inquiry regarding substitutes in Departments was privileged.

WHY THE QUESTION IS PRIVILEGED.

The reason why a resolution like this is declared by parliamentary law to be privileged is solely for the very purpose that it is now invoked.

It requires no argument to prove such a proposition. Take the case before us. A bill is pending affecting the status of vast tracts of land. The occupants of the lands suddenly learn of the bill and find it will be very detrimental to their interests. They hold meetings and conventions and forward to the Interior Department petitions and affidavits signed by thousands upon thousands of poor settlers and frontier miners.

I promptly introduce a resolution asking that these papers be laid before Congress. It is ignored. I wait seven days and the rules say that after seven days the question is privileged. I rise to demand that this privileged question be heard immediately, so that Congress can have this important information before it considers the bill, which, I contend, should not be acted upon until the evidence is examined and understood. Mr. Speaker, we are about to try a case which affects the petitioners' rights. The evidence I demand is necessary to the defense. The rules say that my demand for the production of the evidence is privileged. Illustrate this with a parallel case.

The Constitution provides that a man accused of crime shall—be confronted with the witnesses against him, and have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor.

Now, according to the Speaker's view, that provision could be complied with by issuing process for the accused witness after his trial and conviction, and possibly after his execution.

The Speaker would argue that the Government's privilege to try the man was higher than the constitutional privileges of the accused, and that sort of argument would be just as sound as the Speaker's decision in this case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will overrule the point of order. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PAYSON. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

VACANCY IN THE SECOND DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to transmit to the governor of Arkansas a copy of the resolution declaring a vacancy in the Second district of that State, adopted on the 5th day of September, 1890.

The resolution was agreed to.

LAND-FORFEITURE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, this report was read at length last week when the matter was presented, and I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading.

The SPEAKER. There is no necessity for asking to dispense with the reading if the report has already been read.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I object. I insist that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the objection, as the report has been read.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. It has not been read lately. [Laughter.] I think there was an effort to read the report or some part of it a week or more ago. Here is a very important matter brought before the House when few members were present, and I think that no attention whatever was paid to it.

There was considerable confusion in the Hall and excitement about the election case which it was understood would be taken up. The reading of the report was interrupted by messages from the Senate and other business. Members very seldom pay attention to the reading of a bill or report which it is known is not then to be acted upon. It was understood that it would not be taken up at that time and there were but few members in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. Precisely; but they should have been present.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. The most of those who were away were Republicans, who were attending to their elections. When this bill was read I think there were more Democrats than Republicans present.

The SPEAKER. That, according to the gentleman's idea, must be best.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I desire that it should be read now, so that members present may understand it. An important matter like this should be conducted in a parliamentary manner. I am confident that the members of the House desire to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not entitled to have it read except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to have the report read.

I desire to say to this side of the House that this bill was denounced by the Democratic conferees of both the House and Senate. All of them refused to sign it and more than that every Democratic Senator opposed the bill, not a single one voting for it.

Mr. PAYSON. Is this proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It seems to be.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to be recognized?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. PAYSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for a few minutes—

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Will the Chair put my request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] requests the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. It is too late.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Then I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has the floor.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] will kindly give his attention, so that this matter can proceed, I think he will be satisfied with what I shall be glad to attempt to secure for him.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois how much time he is going to allow for debate.

Mr. PAYSON. It is my purpose to conclude this matter within the hour, if that shall accord with the judgment of the House. I will say to the gentleman that the members of the Committee on Public Lands agree to that course, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who was on the conference committee, is content with my yielding out of my own time five or ten minutes, or so much time as he may desire to occupy, and it is my purpose to ask before commencing the discussion—if the gentleman from Alabama will give his attention.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I am listening very attentively.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, I notice that the gentleman is. [Laughter.] I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that it is my purpose before commencing the discussion to ask unanimous consent to close the debate in one hour, and if the gentleman from Alabama desires to say something upon this subject I am willing to yield him a part of my own time.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I would like some time. I think, however, the gentleman is mistaken in saying that the members of the Committee on Public Lands agree to cutting off debate in this way, because one of the gentlemen on the committee has promised me an hour's time. [Laughter.] And another member of the committee promised me part of his time, which he understood would be fully half an hour.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman has any other query that he desires to put I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. The gentleman has not stated how much time he proposes to allow for discussion.

Mr. PAYSON. I have stated that it is my purpose to conclude the discussion within the hour. If it meets the approval of the House I hope the discussion will be confined to one hour.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to let me have an hour.

Mr. PAYSON. I will be willing to yield to the gentleman from Alabama ten minutes of my own time, which is more than I shall occupy myself, if he will be content with that.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I will not be content with that.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I shall take the usual course.

Mr. Speaker, it would be an assumption of egotism, I think, if I should assume that anything new could be said upon the subject which is embraced in this conference report. The matter which it includes has been debated in every phase, so far as I know, for the past seven or eight years. When the bill was under discussion in the House the whole subject was very thoroughly considered. As gentlemen about me will remember, no gentleman who desired to speak was denied an opportunity. This conference report covers the general subject of the forfeiture of railroad land grants and embraces within its provisions every acre of the public land about which there is no dispute which is the subject of forfeiture under existing law. The bill when it was considered in the House was very thoroughly discussed. As I have already said, no member of the House who desired to speak upon it was denied an opportunity so to do. Every amendment which was desired to be offered was offered in Committee of the Whole and voted upon, and upon the subjects of disagreement between the two Houses which went to the conference there was no disagreement in the conference.

In a general way I may perhaps be justified in saying that, while the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] did not sign this report, it was because he did not believe in the principle embraced in the first section of the bill, which was passed here by an overwhelming majority, but he did not dissent on any question of difference between the two Houses. The first section of the bill provides that all lands lying opposite road not constructed and in operation, for which public land was granted, are, by this bill, forfeited and restored to the public domain and made subject to settlement under existing law. The other provisions of the bill, as appears in the conference report, are in substance as they passed the House, except two sections, one relating to the Mobile and Girard Railroad, in the State of Alabama, and the other relating to the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, in the State of Mississippi.

Section 7 of the original bill, which provided that nothing in this act contained should be construed to prevent any subsequent Congress from declaring further or other forfeitures if it should be deemed desirable, has been stricken out of the bill by the action of the conference. That proposition was offered in the Senate, and by a ye-and-nay vote was rejected by a large majority. In the House it remained in the bill, but the conference committee agreed that it might be omitted for the reason that the bill without it was exactly as strong as with it, as the provision gave no rights to Congress which Congress did not already have. Upon this the conferees are all agreed. The bill on its face proposed to deal only with land lying opposite road not constructed; and, being desirous then, as we are desirous now, of having all questions connected with unconstructed road and land lying opposite unconstructed road out of the way and put behind us, we have agreed upon the bill in this form. Not an acre of land lying opposite constructed road is confirmed or in any way affected by this report. Congress has every right that it now possesses to act as it may choose hereafter. To this all the conferees agree. This is all I care to say as to this phase now.

The propositions as to the Mobile and Girard Railroad were substantially the same as those which were placed upon the bill by an amendment here in the House. By the House amendment certain tax titles were recognized, which had accrued upon some of the lands in the Mobile and Girard grant, but upon investigation we found that most of those tax titles had been acquired for a merely nominal sum, in some cases not exceeding one-half of 1 cent per acre, and therefore we concluded unanimously that that provision should be struck out of the bill and the tax claimants be left to whatever remedy or rights they might have at law. We also provide, as a condition of the Mobile and Girard Railroad being allowed for lands that it has earned by the construction of a certain portion of its road, 84 miles in length, that the company shall, within ninety days from the passage of this act, make formal relinquishment of title for the benefit of persons who have settled upon lands within the limits of its grant.

That is the only change made in this report with reference to the Mobile and Girard grant.

I now desire to call attention to a provision with reference to the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad. By a section which we now make a part of the bill we provide that the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad Company shall have one year within which to complete its road from the port of Ship Island, on the Gulf of Mexico, northward to the point of intersection on the Northeastern Road running across from Mobile, a distance of about 75 miles, and shall be entitled to such lands as it shall earn within that time, provided its road shall be constructed to that point within a year.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, that by consenting to this proposition we make a departure from the practice in this House for years past with reference to this subject. But the appeal with reference to this road was made on the floor of the House eloquently and truthfully by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], and the same argument was advanced in the conference committee. It was urged that the State of Mississippi was left poor by the results of the war, having but one seaport upon its borders, Ship Island, on the Gulf of Mexico; that its railroad facilities were few and inadequate; that the people there were unable to build this needed improvement for transportation in that State without some help from some source, and remembering that under the general land-grant policy which was adopted so many years ago the great and overwhelming preponderance of benefit has been given to the extreme Northwest, we were willing for the sake of a local improvement of vast advantage to the people of Mississippi to allow the railroad company there the benefit of one year's time within which to complete this road and to give them something like 120,000 acres of the public land to aid in that improvement under the old act passed in 1856.

But we couple with this provision the condition that the railroad company shall within ninety days from the passage of this bill, if it should become a law, file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior a formal relinquishment of every acre of land within the limits of that grant which is now in possession of any actual settler and to which the railroad company might otherwise be entitled; and we impose the additional requirement that whenever any land within the limits of this grant, which was made in 1856, prior to the war, has been sold by the officers of the General Government and the money paid into the Treasury and still retained by the Government, this railroad company shall relinquish all rights as to such land.

In our judgment, Mr. Speaker, this is an equitable arrangement. It was a matter of duty, as we thought, to protect and mature the titles of these settlers upon the public lands within the limits of this grant within the area named, aggregating, according to my recollection, about 80,000 or 90,000 acres.

By this amicable arrangement we reach three results. In the first place, where parties have purchased public land in good faith and the Government still retains their money, their title is to be made good by a relinquishment of the land on the part of the railroad company; in the second place, the title of every settler upon the land is to be made good; and, thirdly, a necessary public improvement is aided to this trivial extent by the generosity of the National Government toward the State thus benefited.

These, Mr. Speaker, are in substance all the changes that have been made in this bill since its passage by the House; and we now submit it in the hope that it will receive favorable consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to know how much time I have occupied.

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. Reserving the remainder of my time, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] ten minutes of it or so much as he may desire; but before yielding I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who may desire to print remarks in the RECORD with reference to this question may have leave to do so. Several gentlemen have intimated to me their wish that this privilege be granted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] asks unanimous consent that members may print in the RECORD remarks on this conference report. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYSON. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana ten minutes of my time or so much as he may desire.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that the gentleman from Illinois will not limit me to ten minutes. I desire, with the consent of the gentleman, to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE].

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I can not, of course, undertake to discuss this bill in five minutes. I did hope that we would have sufficient time to debate this conference report somewhat at length; and I would have been glad to yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER]; but, of course, both of us will not be able to make speeches in five minutes.

In the brief time allowed me I wish simply to call the attention of the House to the omission by this conference report of the seventh section of the House bill and to remind gentlemen of the circumstances under which this bill passed the House. When some of us on this side of the House, comparing the House bill with the Senate bill, insisted that we should forfeit all lands earned out of time, the chairman of the committee [Mr. PAYSON] and gentlemen who followed him pointed us by way of answer to section 7 of the House bill; and it was an argument which was very hard to overcome. They said, "We will forfeit that about which there is no question; and by section 7 we reserve the right to make further forfeitures in the future."

But this conference report omits that section, and whatever we may now do will, in the language of the gentleman from Illinois, be a finality. Not only will that which you forfeit be put behind you, but all the lands continuous on roads built out of time will also be behind you. It would have been much better if this section had never been in the bill than that it should have been adopted and now be stricken out. There is, I believe, a purpose in striking it out, and it ought not to be struck out.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MCRAE. Certainly.

Mr. HERMANN. Assuming that there is at present no reservation in the bill of the power of Congress in the future to make further forfeitures of granted lands, I ask the gentleman whether that of itself takes away the power which is inherent in Congress to do that.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a good deal from time to time about inherent powers, but the inherent powers of which gentlemen speak have not been much invoked in dealing with the railroad companies throughout our legislation heretofore. But it is manifest that when you undertake to forfeit a land grant and stipulate expressly what lands shall be forfeited the courts will hold that you can not afterwards forfeit anything beyond that; at least that was the theory on which the House bill was drawn. On that argument the bill was forced through the House. That was the sentiment prevailing in the House at the time of the passage of the bill, and I do not believe that at any time since I have been a member of this House would they have passed a bill if that provision had not been embodied in it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that this same proposition was made in the Senate as an amendment to the bill in the Senate (the same proposition that was in the bill when it passed the Senate two years ago) and was voted down?

Mr. MCRAE. Yes, sir; that is true. Two years ago this amendment was moved by Senator Beck, who proposed it as an amendment on the floor of the Senate. It did not come from the Committee on the Public Lands of that body, but was adopted as an amendment when the bill was under consideration, and the minority of this House then—the majority now—seized upon that fact and insisted that it was sufficient protection to the people, and the bill was passed in this session of Congress under the belief that the people would be protected and that at any time in future when a Congress might assemble disposed to forfeit the lands they would have the power.

Now, I desire, if I can be permitted to do so, to move to instruct the conferees to restore this section to the bill, and if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois I would like to know if he will give his consent that I may have that right? I see the gentleman shakes his head.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not know that I understand the proposition of the gentleman, but of course he will understand that this bill is being considered in the ordinary way of considering conference reports.

Mr. McRAE. Of course if I had the power to do so I would make the motion in my own right, but being restricted I must ask consent to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McRAE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to lodge the motion to instruct the conferees to restore section 7 to the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. I object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has still five minutes remaining.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my friend will allow me a little more than five minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. Before the gentleman begins, I will yield him ten minutes. There are several gentlemen on the list to whom I desire to yield, and I have probably promised more time than I can control.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I want simply to state to the gentleman that this is an important matter and ought not to be gagged down in one hour. He had better not insist on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The arrangement as to time has been already made.

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been no understanding, Mr. Speaker, on that subject on the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I trust the House will at least understand the state of this question and the importance of the action which we are now called upon to take. I have talked so much to the House of what forfeiture of these grants ought to be declared that I should not feel justified now in occupying any time if it were not for the fact that I desire the real issue to be fairly and fully presented before the vote is taken upon this report. As one of the House conferees, I have not signed this report for reasons I will state.

The House is aware of the fact that two different propositions have been presented with regard to the forfeiture of these land grants, beginning with the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress. The House has declared over and over again in every Congress until this Congress that the least forfeiture that ought to be made would be all of the lands not earned by the railroad corporations within the time prescribed by law; and gentlemen will understand that the amount of land involved in that proposition is now 53,741,596 acres, in addition to the 50,987,840 acres declared forfeited by the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses. The House never varied from that position until the present session of Congress. Gentlemen, of course, understand all that.

The Senate repeatedly insisted that the forfeitures should be limited to lands "not now earned" and to which the railroad companies have no pretense of claim—lands opposite portions of the roads never constructed and as a general rule never intended to be constructed. When this subject was discussed in the last Congress, the seventh section of the present House substitute was in the bill of the Senate, reserving expressly the right of Congress to declare further forfeitures; I stated then that it meant nothing; that if you passed the bill declaring the forfeiture of the lands "not then earned" it would be the end of the controversy, and the patents would be issued; that the General Land Office would proceed at once to close the accounts and issue the patents to the corporations for all the lands not embraced in the bill. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], in answer to a question, stated distinctly that this provision was of no real value; that as a matter of course Congress, if it had the power to declare further forfeitures, would do so if it thought proper to do so thereafter.

I stated distinctly then, and I state now, that if the bill should pass with this seventh section in it no actual rights would be reserved, and the effect of the passage of the bill would be the same; that it would still confirm the whole of the more than 53,000,000 of acres of land which this House has declared over and over again, up to the close of the last session, ought to be forfeited by Congress. Now, I wish to call the attention of the House for a moment to the history of this provision. The Senate and the House both agreed to it in the last Congress. It is as follows:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have any lands granted by them as recited in the first section forfeited for any failure, past or future, to comply with the conditions of the grant.

That section was in the Senate bill and in the House substitute.

Mr. HOOKER. That is the seventh section.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, that was the seventh section of the present House substitute. It was in the House bill and it was urged as an argument before the House for the passage of the substitute that all rights to make further forfeitures were expressly reserved. I was very glad to see, when the bill passed the House some time ago as a substitute, reported by the gentleman from Illinois, that the gentleman considered that that provision of itself did not reserve any other right than those which would exist anyhow. That had been my own position in the last Congress, as an argument against the House attaching any importance to that provision. So both Houses consented to that proposition in the last Congress. It was in the Senate bill and House substitute.

The House insisted upon it at the present session of Congress and the Senate refused to agree to it and struck it out. Upon what principle? Upon the ground expressly stated that it would leave "a cloud upon the title of the corporations to the lands not forfeited," that is, to the 48,619,760 acres of land not declared forfeited by the bill, and which this House has for years over and over again declared that Congress ought to forfeit. That section was stricken out, and the RECORD will show it, for the purpose of removing any "cloud that might otherwise rest upon the title of the railroad corporation to these lands." A majority of your conferees have now agreed to strike out this seventh section, so that the title of these corporations to 48,619,760 acres will be confirmed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a mortifying position for this House to be placed in. That section carried the substitute, and now you are asked to adopt a report that strikes it out.

What is the real propelling force behind this bill? It is the Northern Pacific Railroad corporation. I have stated to the House on a former occasion that that corporation has been lobbying even on the floor of the House for the passage of this bill. And why? Well, for several reasons. Among others, the passage of this bill is known to be the end of this legislation. Whatever you declare forfeited now will terminate every effort to declare forfeitures. If you pass this bill in its present form, with this history as to the seventh section, that section being expressly omitted to relieve these corporations from a cloud on their title to the unforfeited lands, then what follows? Why, as a matter of course, your General Land Office will at once proceed to issue the patents to these 48,619,760 acres, and what is the effect of that? To confirm their titles to imperial landed estates. The effect of that is that in the single State of Montana—and I hope I have the ear of the gentleman representing that great young State [Mr. CARTER]—that in the single State of Montana it is asserted by gentlemen well informed, if not by the gentleman representing that State himself, that there are at least 5,000,000 acres of valuable mineral land which were not granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad corporation, and which will only become vested in that corporation when the patents shall be issued; for it is now understood to be the law that until a patent does issue the discovery of mineral lands, gold and silver and the like, prevents the land from passing to the railroad corporation.

If the patent is issued before the discovery the title vests absolutely in the corporation.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman permit a single interruption?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman from Indiana, of course, desires to be accurate with reference to all his statements here.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; I wish to be accurate.

Mr. PAYSON. I want to correct the statement of the gentleman from Indiana as to what the holding of the Department is. This Administration, by Secretary Noble, has held explicitly that, under the act of Congress making the grants to the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Atlantic and Pacific, and the Southern Pacific Railroads, not an acre of mineral land can pass under any condition whatever. He has made a recent decision at great length, holding exactly the opposite view from that which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has stated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, does the gentleman entertain the least hope that after the patents shall issue the courts will go behind the patents?

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman seems to misapprehend what I say. The patent can only issue upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and he has made a recent decision, to which the attention of my friend, I think, has not been called, that no patent will issue as to any land that contains an ounce of mineral, and any patent that does issue will contain a reservation as to everything of that kind.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend is clearly right about that. If it is known that the land is mineral land, if the fact has been demonstrated by actually delving into the earth, then the patents will not issue, but if the patent shall issue—and it will promptly on the passage of this bill—does my friend from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] pretend that the courts will go behind that patent and declare the patent null and void because subsequently the lands were discovered to be valuable mineral lands?

I wish to repeat that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYSON. I yield the gentleman another minute, as I was not listening to the gentleman on account of answering inquiries of other gentlemen. I yield the gentlemen five minutes more.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company, the corporation that is pressing this measure ahead, has no claim upon the generosity or bounty of Congress. You are about to confirm to the foreign owners of this Northern Pacific Railroad a body of wealth beyond the dream of the most greedy avarice.

Mr. HEARD. Will not the practice, as remarked by the gentleman from Illinois, be to this effect: That under the present rule any patents that issue hereafter to these lands will contain a reservation protecting the lands on which mineral discovery is made?

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, it will if a law to that effect is passed. Is such is the purpose, why is it not expressed in this bill?

Mr. PAYSON. That is the holding of the Department now.

Mr. HOLMAN. If such a provision be ingrafted upon the patent by authority of law it will be; otherwise it will not. If not so ingrafted in conformity with law it will be a mere nullity. I think I have the ear of the gentlemen representing Montana and South Dakota, and those gentlemen certainly have investigated this subject and have learned the fact that when the patents are issued—and these patents will be promptly issued when this bill becomes a law—the title is irrevocable out of the United States and in the railroad corporation.

Now, if there were any equity in this matter I should not complain; but here is a corporation that never threw a spadeful of earth until eight years had elapsed after the grant was made, and that an enormous grant of more than 42,000,000 acres of land—the most valuable ever made by a government, even a monarchy, and made upon the theory of their opening up the country. Yet until the 2d day of July, 1872, eight years after the grant was made, not a spadeful of earth was thrown. When the time finally expired, after it had been twice extended, on the 2d of July, 1879, there were over 1,600 miles of the railroad uncompleted; and it is land to that amount, over 30,000,000 of acres of this grant alone, that ought to be forfeited, and the House ought to demand that, if nothing more, in the interest of common honesty and justice, and demand it until the people compelled the Senate to agree to it.

Here is a corporation entitled to no favors. Railroads were building westward and eastward from Portland on the one side and from Minneapolis and other points east, converging together before this railroad got fairly under way, and the railroad simply stood in the way of progress, interposing obstacles to the construction of railroads between the Mississippi and the Pacific. Under these circumstances it seems to me remarkable that Congress shall deliberately go back upon its own record and declare a forfeiture of only 2,000,000 acres which the railroad corporation does not want, because another railroad, built by private enterprise, had been constructed over the same territory of land.

Now, sir, while it is not my purpose to vote against a bill forfeiting even a single acre of the land granted to these corporations, I must declare this measure a deliberate abandonment of the rights of the people, and that, too, at the dictation of a powerful corporation.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me a question for information? Do I understand you to take the position that because this bill forfeits a certain quantity of the public lands granted to railroads therefore Congress can not hereafter forfeit other lands not earned by them?

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend think that a bill will be introduced for that purpose?

Mr. HOOKER. I do not know about that. I am speaking of the power of Congress over future forfeitures.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not pretend that the power of Congress would be affected, except as clearly abandoned; but does any gentleman indulge the slightest hope that after the "patents are issued" Congress will go behind the patents and declare the forfeiture of lands for which patents have been authorized? When this bill is passed your Department will promptly issue these patents, and these lands are turned over to corporate monopoly.

Now, sir, when the railroads were not even located and after the time for their completion had expired, thousands and tens of thousands of people had settled within their vast strips of land, 60 and 120 miles wide, including their indemnity limits, when the railroad company was not even in progress of construction, and within the time in which the construction was to be completed had expired. These claimants are now before you, and a bill is ready to be reported indemnifying four hundred of them for losses sustained by them for lands settled within the second indemnity limit and who had settled at the time when no railroad was even in progress of construction.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. And this bill does not provide for these people at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill does not; but there are bills pending that do. There are tens of thousands of people who are affected by it and for whom relief will have to be given. You have allowed these parties in many instances to enter upon the land. There have been thousands of patents issued for lands opposite unearned railroad grants, and you will turn these lands over to these corporations and make reparation from your Treasury for the injustice done these settlers.

I protest against this act of flagrant injustice to the American people, and yet there is no remedy, for gentlemen will hesitate before voting against any measure of forfeiture, however partial.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I had agreed to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] and he desires an extension beyond that, and I ask unanimous consent that he be granted fifteen minutes additional.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the great corporation Congress of the nineteenth century is about drawing to a close, and I suppose it might as well end by passing this measure, falsely called a forfeiture bill, as to devote its time to other iniquities which encumber the Calendar. Members of this House who are disposed to defend the right of the people are powerless to resist the influences which are now controlling this body. I suppose this bill has been selected for consideration because it does more harm to the people and is of more benefit to corporations than any other bill on the Calendar. I have not the remotest conception that I shall succeed in preventing the passage of the bill, but I shall present some of its hideous features not only to this body, but to the people.

I will begin by submitting the following propositions:

I. That the Speaker erred in expressing his desire to recognize Mr. PAYSON when I was on the floor demanding the consideration of a privileged question.

II. That he erred in deciding that my resolution calling for information was not privileged.

III. That he erred in refusing my demand that the bill be read.

IV. That he erred in refusing to submit to the House my request that the bill be read by unanimous consent.

V. That he erred in refusing to submit to the House my request for an hour's extension of time to debate the bill.

I shall endeavor to show—

1. That the unwarranted and injudicial action of Mr. REED, exercised in the interest of the Northern Pacific Railway, went very far to surrender and possibly to confirm to that corporation 40,000,000 acres of land which belongs to the people.

2. That he reversed his legal decision in his report which declared a forfeiture of a rival road to the Northern Pacific.

3. That this is the first time that a forfeiture bill has been presented to this body framed so as to seek to prevent further forfeitures.

4. That the bill in conjunction with the Sawyer decision will despoil miners and other frontier settlers of their lands.

5. That the efforts of the Northern Pacific to resist forfeiture, which efforts were championed in this House by Mr. REED, exasperated Mr. PAYSON so that he denounced this corporation as a "briber and thief."

6. That now Mr. PAYSON brings in and champions a bill which leaves said railroad in possession of 40,000,000 acres which he insisted four years ago belonged to the people.

7. That Mr. REED and Mr. PAYSON after years of warfare on this question, tenderly embrace in this grand tableau, a corporated wealth is triumphant.

8. That Mr. PAYSON objected to the bill being read, thus keeping the members of this body in ignorance of its provisions.

9. That the bill leaves the rights of settlers unguarded.

10. That the rights of the Government are unprotected by the bill.

11. That the bill is unconstitutional.

12. That every Democrat on all committees and in the body of both the House and Senate has denounced the bill and voted against it.

POWER EXERCISED BY CORPORATIONS IN CONGRESS.

For eight years I have looked with alarm at the increasing tendency to allow corporations to exercise their power in legislation, both State and Federal. They have been here demanding the passage of laws of nearly every character, but this is the first time in the history of Congress that a corporation has appeared before it and asked a forfeiture of land heretofore granted to them.

There are 40,000,000 acres of land which belong to the people of the United States which a corporation has within its grasp, and that corporation comes and says to Congress: "Forfeit 4,000,000 acres which we do not want, which we never will earn and never can earn, because the country through which the road would run has been occupied by another railroad, and, in consideration of your forfeiting those lands which we do not want, we ask you to confirm to us 40,000,000 acres of land, worth $200,000,000." And that proposition, Mr. Speaker, is sought to be crowded through this House with one hour's debate, half of which time is to be occupied by the gentleman who reports this bill. And had it not been for my urgent protest they would have accomplished their purpose. It is not surprising that the advocates of this bill feared the effect of a discussion of its features.

There is no member of this House more determined than myself in demanding that a bill should be passed forfeiting all the unearned lands which have been heretofore granted to railroads, but this bill does nothing of the sort. So far from forfeiting lands it is little more than an effort to make a regnant or free gift of millions of the people's domain to the corporations who are demanding the passage of this bill.

AMENDMENTS ABSOLUTELY ESSENTIAL.

Now, sir, there are three amendments which ought to be made to this conference report, and if the gentleman in charge of the bill will consent to make these three changes I will then most gladly give the bill my most hearty support. First, the bill should be amended by inserting the same provision that has been in every forfeiture bill heretofore brought into this House.

No one appreciated the necessity for the incorporation in the bill of section 7, which provided for future forfeitures when it should be found that the lands belonged to the Government—no one, I say, appreciated more highly the necessity for that provision than the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] who has charge of this bill. Two months ago, when the bill was brought into this House, an inquiry was made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] whether the bill would have the effect of confirming the title of any lands to railroads. It had been said on this floor that this bill does not forfeit one-tenth of the lands that ought to be forfeited, and he asked if there was a provision to authorize Congress to make further forfeitures and restore to the people the land that belongs to them and that is now in the hands of these corporations.

In reply to that, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] said that there was. I will read the language of Mr. HEARD and Mr. PAYSON. I read from page 7525 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Mr. HEARD. Now the other inquiry—as to whether it will have the effect of confirming any title in a railroad to such lands where the road was finished out of time.

Mr. PAYSON. Now, I am coming to the inquiry of my friend as to whether it will have the effect of confirming any title or whether it shall prevent Congress from acting hereafter if it desired. That is covered by the seventh section, which I will read.

Then section 7 was read, which provided that, if lands should be found hereafter that ought to be forfeited, Congress should have the power to declare further forfeitures.

Section 7 is in the following words:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them, as recited in the first section, forfeited for any failure, past or future, to comply with the conditions of the grant.

Mr. PAYSON then proceeded, as I will read:

That is reserving the right on the part of Congress to do anything it may choose hereafter in any other form it pleases with reference to this very character of land.

Then the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] said: "That is satisfactory, Mr. Chairman."

Thus it will be seen that the gentleman from Illinois admitted that a provision of that kind was eminently proper, if not absolutely necessary, in order to save the rights of the people.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption at that point?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Certainly I will.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman will follow the remarks that he holds in his hand he will see that I asserted there, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has asserted to-day, that the seventh section was absolutely worthless for any purpose, because Congress had just as much power without it as with it; and the gentleman from Alabama entirely misrepresents me when he says that I made any such statement as that it was necessary, and he holds in his hand the evidence that his statement is incorrect.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I have simply read the gentleman's remarks from the RECORD. I have read every word that he said in reply to this question of Mr. HEARD or in any way referring to the section which is now omitted. I construe his statement as unequivocally asserting that section 7 is a reservation of the right on the part of Congress to deal with lands in the future which ought to be forfeited. However it may hurt, he can not escape the force of his own language. He was answering inquiries as to whether the bill—will have the effect of confirming any title or whether it shall prevent Congress from acting hereafter if it desired.

Mr. PAYSON then says:

That is covered by the seventh section.

Now, the section which covered that important point is gone. It has been omitted from the bill; and I demand and the friends of the Government and people demand that the friends, I might say the almost slaves, of corporations which are dominating this Congress restore that section. I demand this in the interest of the people. I am not surprised at the gentleman's embarrassment and his great desire to make it appear that he is misrepresented, because his omission of section 7 from this bill in connection with his reply to Mr. HEARD shows that he must know he is doing the people the greatest injustice.

I think the gentleman is mistaken, too, regarding what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has just said on this subject. The gentleman from Indiana refused to sign the conference report because he regarded this bill as an abomination.

The gentleman from Indiana stated that the Senate insisted on striking out this section upon the ground that if it was allowed to remain in the bill—it would leave a cloud upon the title of the corporations to the lands not forfeited—and later on the gentleman asserted that the RECORD would show that the section was stricken out—for the purpose of removing any cloud that might otherwise rest upon the title of the railroad corporation to these lands.

I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] fully concurred with the Senate, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] concurs with me that this action of the conferees was intended to and does confirm the title to 40,000,000 acres of lands to the Northern Pacific, every acre of which belongs to the people. The whole affair is one of the most disgraceful proceedings ever enacted by a parliamentary body.

Again I want to call attention here to the fact that every Democrat, both in the Senate and House, refused to sign the conference report and every one of them denounced the bill. I also want to call attention to the fact that every Democratic Senator voted against the bill, not a single one voting for it, and, in the face of these facts, it is shocking to see Democrats rise on this floor and say they are willing to take this bill because it is the best they can get.

I desire to ask how any Democrat can reconcile himself to vote for this fearful corporation bill. The platforms of our State and National Conventions have all demanded that these unearned lands held by the Northern Pacific and other railroads shall be forfeited; and the purpose of this bill is to do precisely the reverse. It seeks to confirm grants of unearned lands, not to forfeit them. The platforms of the Democratic party of 1876 and 1880 denounced this waste of the public lands and their diversion from actual settlers. The platform of 1884 said:

We believe that the public land ought, as far as possible, to be kept as homesteads for actual settlers; that all unearned lands heretofore improvidently granted to railroad corporations by the action of the Republican party should be restored to the public domain.

THE HOUSE IGNORANT REGARDING THE BILL.

The truth is there are not six men on this floor that know much about the provisions or anything at all about the effect of this bill. For some reason copies of the bill have not been brought in the House for distribution to the Members. I have not seen a single copy of the bill in the House to-day, and for some inexplicable reason the Speaker refused to allow the bill to be read when it was called up this morning.

I used every effort in my power to have the bill read to the House.

Every member of this body knows that under the rules all bills are required to be read when brought before the House.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] so fully understood this rule that he asked unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill. I objected, and the Speaker decided that it was not necessary to ask unanimous consent and overruled my objection. I then demanded the reading of the bill, and the Speaker decided that I had no right to demand it. I asked unanimous consent to have the bill read. The Speaker refused to submit my request for unanimous consent to the House and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] proceeded with his speech in favor of the bill. I regard the whole proceeding as one of the most high-handed violations of parliamentary law that have occurred in this extremely high-handed Congress. The Speaker and Mr. PAYSON together have succeeded in keeping the House quite ignorant of the provisions of the bill.

But, Mr. Speaker, if that section will do no harm why take it out? Why not leave it in the bill? We think it will do good. Suppose this matter were before a court, and the court should have the fact brought before them that the highest legislative body in the world struck out that provision, would not the court say that that was a legislative declaration on the part of this body intended to cut off any further effort at legislation on the subject?

And, even if the court would not, Congress hereafter would. The argument will be made in the next Congress that the striking out of section 7 was a legislative declaration on the part of this body that we ought not to go further in this matter of the forfeiture of land grants.

Now, Mr. Speaker, who are the persons affected by this bill? Here is a domain of land seventy-five times as large as the State of Rhode Island, to which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company has not one scintilla of title more than you have or more than I have, and yet, in discussing a question which is connected with that and with no other corporation, that section is stricken out. I have here letters and petitions and proceedings of conventions of the people interested which I have not time to read, calling upon Congress to do them justice.

MINERS AND MINERAL LANDS NOT PROTECTED.

There is another point I want to allude to in connection with the same matter. Congress knows that the mineral lands were excluded from this land grant. Congress also knows that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company has seized upon valuable mines in that region and has commenced suits of ejectment against persons who are engaged in opening and working those mines, and Judge Sawyer in some of those suits has decided—I have the decisions here—that mineral lands which were not known to be mineral lands at the time the grant was made go to the railroad the same as the agricultural lands. There are two of these decisions.

The gentleman from Montana [Mr. CARTER] introduced a bill to correct this great wrong, but that bill has slept in the room of the Committee on Public Lands ever since the 17th day of April last, and while it has been kept in that room and has never been brought before the House, while the people of the Northwest are ignorant of this momentous question, this present bill is railroad through this House, the effect of which will be to enable the railroad company to eject the miners from the works which they are now carrying on.

One gentleman says they can appeal to the courts; another gentleman says that these opinions of Judge Sawyer will not stand the scrutiny of the Supreme Court; but all the gentlemen from the Territories and from the new States know full well that the miners are mostly poor men and can not afford to appeal their cases to the Supreme Court of the United States; and, even if they could, how can they contend with a corporation which is worth a hundred millions and which has in its coffers two hundred millions of the people's money? I have insisted that the bill of the gentleman from Montana be acted upon, and I insist now that this bill under consideration never ought to pass this House without being recommitted and having incorporated in it the provisions contained in the bill of the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. STOCKDALE (to Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama). Can you not make that motion?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. No, sir; the previous question is ordered, cutting off everything. This is a robbery of the people; and robbers never keep open any question by which their booty can be taken from them.

THE BILL UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

There is another question in connection with this bill. The bill on its face is a violation of the Constitution. In all the early grants provision was made for granting 120 sections of land per mile to every railroad in presenti to enable the railroad to run its preliminary surveys and incur the necessary expenses before laying the track.

This bill seeks to forfeit those lands; and if it passes in its present form the effect must be that it will be a nullity and will still further postpone the restoration of the lands which belong to the people to their rightful owners. I have decisions here from the Supreme Court of the United States—in the Courtwright case, in 21 Wallace, and other cases—which decide positively, emphatically, and without question that these grants are gifts in presenti and that they can not be forfeited. Some of these lands were patented to the States thirty years ago; and to attempt to forfeit them now is simply an effort to take back and restore to the public domain lands which were granted years ago and earned in the manner the court say they were intended to be earned. I will read very briefly from one of those decisions.

Mr. HOOKER. Are you now speaking of the grant to the State of Alabama?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. No, sir; I am speaking generally of grants of this character. I am speaking of land grants located in many Southern and in many of the new States.

The bill in question has very little effect upon lands in Alabama, but so far as it does affect Alabama lands I am emphatically in favor of their forfeiture. I am in favor of the immediate forfeiture of every acre of granted land which has not been earned as required by the grant. I am in favor of the forfeiture of the Alabama lands so that they can be entered and occupied by the people.

In the Courtwright case the court says:

It was the evident intention of Congress to furnish aid for such preliminary work as would be required before the construction of any part of the road.

The courts have decided that the first 120 sections granted for the purpose of preliminary surveys and laying out lines if acquired in that manner are just as effectively earned as that portion of the land lying parallel to a completed road. But the bill which gentlemen propose to pass to-day says that all lands which lie parallel to lines laid out where the road is not completed and in running order shall be forfeited. Now here are lands granted unconditionally to States and claimed to have been earned by corporations acting under authority of said States, and you seek to forfeit them, while you do not seek to forfeit lands that have never been earned. The bill attempts to do that which it has no right to do, and it fails to do that which ought to be done, and "there is no health in it."

My contention is that the bill should require the Government to bring a suit against the grantees in cases of this character so that the court can declare a judicial forfeiture and thus save the settlers who have purchased homes on such lands from annoyance, loss of time, and, in some cases, absolute ruin by being thrown into litigation with wealthy corporations.

IMPORTANT PROVISION OMITTED.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say one word regarding the mineral lands, because since this argument commenced in the Senate two weeks ago letters and resolutions have been sent to this body calling upon Congress to insert in this bill the proviso suggested by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. CARTER], the purpose of the proviso being to save the mineral interests from going into the hands of the Northern Pacific Railroad corporation. I will read one sentence from the decision of Judge Sawyer, a decision which has created all the trouble out there. He says:

By the words "mineral lands" must be understood lands known to be such at the time the grant was made.

Now, when this grant was made this area of 40,000,000 acres was a wilderness. No one knew what there was there; there was not a white man in that region; and the grant was made to this railroad company under their pledge to explore that country, to build a railroad, and induce settlement. They neglected their contract; they did not build the road; they waited for years until our sturdy frontiersmen went in advance of them, settled up the country and made it valuable. And then when the time came that freight and passenger traffic would make a road profitable, this company commenced the construction of a line beyond Bismarck.

Their first appeal was that they should be allowed to retain the land on the line of road from Lake Superior to Bismarck, which it was insisted, and insisted by the gentleman from Illinois, was liable to forfeiture, even though they had built that part of the road prior to the expiration of the grant. But they came to Congress; they became bolder, and finally they had the effrontery to ask that this land which lies parallel to that portion of the road which was never touched until after the country had been settled and the limitation of the grant expired, and which therefore never was earned, should be given to them. And now, to the surprise of the people of the West, to the surprise of the country, to the surprise of members of Congress who believe in right and fair dealing, this bill proposes to give to that company this empire which ten years ago they had not the effrontery to ask for.

This brings me to a matter to which I may as well now make some allusion.

CORPORATIONS CONTROL LEGISLATION.

I want to illustrate what I have spoken of heretofore—the subtle power of corporate wealth, how it enters our committee-rooms, permeates our lobbies, and as members of this body even comes into the Halls of Congress. Men whom we justly regard as above reproach in every walk of life, men who have the utmost integrity of purpose, men who start out determined to fight the battles of the people, are finally, by some strange mesmeric influence, brought under the power of the agents of corporate wealth.

It is alarming to see the influence corporations are acquiring over men whose rectitude of character and honesty of intention none of us would doubt. Take, for instance, two very distinguished gentlemen who happen to be before me. The able Speaker, Mr. REED, who is now presiding, and the hardly less eminent statesman who has charge of the bill now before the House [Mr. PAYSON]. Would any one for a moment question the exalted aim, the devotion to duty, the integrity of purpose of these very eminent gentlemen, who by their ability have earned a high place in the political history of the last decennium?

I will briefly review some of the circumstances connected with our efforts to restore these lands to the people, and I think it will give strong indications that while the distinguished gentleman from Maine, who now presides over this body, became enamored of corporations very early in his career, that the gentleman from Illinois battled successfully against their influence until some two years ago, when he, like many other good statesmen, succumbed, and since that time, as is often the case with converts to new friends and new methods, he has out-Heroded some of those who have been for very long periods willing dwellers among that character of business organizations which the law books say are without souls.

In the Forty-seventh Congress the first effort was made to forfeit these lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and it was reported back to this House by a gentleman of no less distinction than the present Speaker of this House; and there was presented also a minority report by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]. In his report that gentleman, with the power which he possesses in such an eminent degree, maintained the positions he assumed, sustaining himself with opinions of the law officers of the Interior Department and by decisions of our courts. He clearly proved that every acre of land held by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was subject to forfeiture and belonged to the people.

In that Congress, in the Forty-eighth Congress, and in the Forty-ninth Congress, that gentleman pledged himself over and over again to stand by the weak and lowly of our land and defend them from the grasp, the inordinate grasp, of this the most powerful corporation now existing on this earth. I will read a few extracts from his speeches, because they come from a man who has given this question the most patient and careful study, and what was said by the gentleman from Illinois in his report in 1882 and in his speeches in 1884 and 1886 is true to-day; indeed it has more truth and more force now than it had at the time it was uttered.

But before I discuss Mr. PAYSON's minority report and refer to the eloquent and able speeches by which he sustained his position that the 40,000,000 acres of land which he now proposes to present to the Northern Pacific belonged to the people, I will ask the attention of the House to the majority report made by Mr. REED. And that the report made may be better understood I will read some paragraphs from the act referred to:

CONDITIONS OF NORTHERN PACIFIC GRANT.

The conditions of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railway are as I will read:

SEC. 8. That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than 50 miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1876.

The road did not comply with these conditions and the land was not earned, the conditions were not fulfilled, and no title or right to the land inured.

Of course, in donating an empire to a corporation upon condition that the company would build a railroad between certain points within a specified time, it would be very natural and proper for Congress in making a contract with the railroad to include provisos for possible and certainly for all probable exigencies.

The conditions contained in section 8 gave the Government no power to interfere in any way in the event of the company's failure to comply with the contract, allow a breach to follow, and cease work on the railroad.

Of course the land would revert to the public domain, but the Government would be without the railroad. To avoid that possibility a further condition was exacted, and an additional right was reserved to the Government. This was expressed in these words:

SEC. 9. That the United States make the several conditioned grants herein, and that the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of the conditions hereof and allow the same to continue for upwards of one year, then, in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States, by its Congress, may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road.

It is clear beyond question that in case of the failure or default on the part of the railroad to perform any of the conditions mentioned in section 8, the right immediately inured to the Government to declare a forfeiture.

MR. REED'S ADMISSION.

In fact, Mr. REED, who was chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House in the Forty-seventh Congress, and had charge of all the bills which sought to forfeit unearned lands to railroads, admits this without effort at reservation. He concedes this question in these words:

The legal effect of the sections as quoted above is to make a present grant to the company of the lands in question, subject to the provisions and conditions stated in sections 8 and 9. The sections taken together vest in the company an estate upon condition-subsequent. If section 9 had not been enacted it would be quite clear that the estate of the company would have been determinable at the pleasure of the United States, on the happening of any one of three things: First, a failure to begin the road in two years; second, a failure in any one year to build 50 miles; and, third, a failure in ten years to build, equip, and complete the whole road. To secure this right of forfeiture it was not necessary to mention it in the act. The words "upon condition" were the only words needed. They are as potent as if the words had been added, "and if these conditions are not fulfilled the land shall revert to the United States."

So far very well. He could not have conceded less. Then all, including Mr. REED and the railroad itself, agree that under the provisions of section 8 unless the Northern Pacific had complied with all three of the conditions recited in said section, the railroad has no title to the land, and therefore it reverts to the people and is and should be restored to the public domain, and under the provision of the land laws conveyed to the actual settler.

If the railroad has not complied with its contract and has not earned the land as provided in the contract, it belongs to the people and goes to the homestead settler, who, God bless him, with his dog and gun has braved the frontier dangers and hardships to make himself a home amidst perils of which few men of the East have any knowledge or conception. If the land belongs to such men, no higher crime could be committed than to enact legislation which would take it from them.

The Forty-seventh Congress confided the investigation of this important question to Mr. REED. Instead of making an effort to defend the people, and especially the brave men who were seeking homes in the far West, he appears to have devoted his great capacity to hunting some technical phrase by which he could despoil the Government, the people, and the homesteader, and through such means secure unearned millions of the people's treasure to the Northern Pacific.

His search was fruitless, but his ardor and determination were not lessened. Finding nothing upon which he could base an argument for the railroad, he, with his usual calm composure, proceeds to base and build up an argument for them upon less than nothing.

Immediately following Mr. REED's language, which I have above quoted, the distinguished gentleman says:

But the severity of the words in section 8 Congress had a perfect right to modify. It had a right to say just what should be the effect of a breach of the conditions of the grant. It could rest its reserved rights on the words "upon condition," and then the legal effect would be to retain the right of reverter, or it could claim that right in so many words, as was done in all the railroad grants made to States.

Here are four propositions laid down by Mr. REED. All are sound and correct, and they are denied by no one. But my reply is that Congress has never modified the severity of section 8. It has chosen to rest its reserved rights in the words "on condition," and it has therefore retained unimpaired and undiminished all its rights to reclaim the unearned lands.

ANOTHER ADMISSION BY MR. REED.

But we are spared any contention on this point, as Mr. REED admits that Congress has never modified the severity of section 8. He says that instead of doing this or either of the four things suggested it did something else.

His language, immediately following the quotation which I have cited above, is in these words:

Instead of either of these things, Congress enacted section 9, limiting and defining the effect of a breach of the conditions named in section 8. By that limitation the sole right which remains in the United States at the present time is the right, "by its Congress, to do any and all acts which may be needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road."

It will be seen that the gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED, here distinctly and without qualification asserts that the language of section 9 nullifies and voids all the rights which are reserved to the Government or to the people in section 8.

Now, remember that Mr. REED not only admits but asserts that section 8 secures to the people 40,000,000 acres of land, worth $200,000,000, and then he judicially decides that section 9 takes this imperial possession away from them and gives it as a gratuity to the Northern Pacific Railroad.

He says under the provisions and conditions of section 8 the people have a perfect and unquestioned right to recover and repossess themselves of this vast domain; but he also says that the addition of section 9 to the act deprives the people of every right in the premises except the right to start out with their pickaxes, spades, and shovels and build the road themselves, or hire the work to be done by parties other than the beneficiaries under the grant.

In other words, the people contract with the Northern Pacific company to build a railroad which, when completed, is to be the property of the Northern Pacific Company, and in order to induce the building the people agree to give the company a bonus of land worth $200,000,000.

The company do not build the road, and Mr. REED says that under section 9 the only right left to the people is to build the road themselves and let the railroad retain the $200,000,000 as a gratuity. His language is:

The sole right which remains to the United States at the present time is the right, "by its Congress, to do any and all acts which may be needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road."

UNSOUND AND ILLOGICAL CONCLUSIONS OF MR. REED.

I insist, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. REED's reasoning in this report is absolutely devoid of legal acumen. I insist further that there never have been so illogical and unwarranted conclusions announced in a paper purporting to come from a judicial body since the world begun. It does not rise to the dignity of ridiculous nonsense.

No respectable lawyer would allow his reputation to suffer the stigma which would attach to asserting such a proposition in a brief.

A New York Tombs shyster would revolt if asked by a client to urge such an absurd doctrine before any character of court.

It would so shock the conscience of any justice of the peace that he would not listen with patience to a lawyer who ventured such an imposition upon and insult to the legal understanding of a justice of the peace.

Mr. Speaker, this legal conclusion of Hon. THOMAS BRACKETT REED as chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House in the Forty-seventh Congress would reflect discredit upon children.

No mind capable of reasoning power, however immature, could be misled by such a subterfuge.

Congress wishes a railroad built and enacts the law in the nature of a contract giving the road some 47,000,000 acres of land if it will comply with certain conditions.

The road does not comply, and it has no right to the land, and Mr. REED admits this in his report; but Congress in its anxiety to benefit the Government exacted a further condition and reserved a further right, and although the Government never saw fit to exercise this right or exact this further condition, Mr. REED says that this further condition nullifies all the other conditions.

Take an analogous case.

I agree to give you a tract of land upon condition that you build me a house within one year, and I further stipulate or exact another condition, that if you do not complete the house according to contract and within the time specified I shall have the right to do certain things which may be necessary to insure a speedy completion thereof. Would any lawyer say that this further condition nullified the first condition so as to allow you to refuse to build the house and yet retain the land? No lawyer would make any such a ridiculous argument even in a justice's court, and yet this is the argument made by Hon. THOMAS B. REED as chairman of the Judiciary Committee of this House.

RECIPROCITY BETWEEN MR. REED AND NORTHERN PACIFIC.

It does not make any difference whether the charge is true or false that the Speaker had been in the employ of that corporation.

He certainly went very far out of his way and sacrificed his reputation as a lawyer to aid them in getting 40,000,000 acres of land to which they had no right, and which belong, according to all principles of right and justice, to the people.

The Northern Pacific know their friends, and it is stated that but for their potential efforts Hon. WILLIAM MCKINLEY would have been the Speaker of the Fifty-first Congress.

It is stated that but for the exercise of their power Hon. THOMAS B. REED would not have held the high position to which he was elected when this Congress convened. This was to be expected. It is but natural that corporations who have business before Congress should support men who sustain their interests.

When the land-forfeiture bill passed the House it contained a clause which I will read:

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them, as recited in the first section, forfeited for any failure, past or future, to comply with the conditions of the grant.

For a month before the election in Maine there were grave doubts how it would result. The most eminent orators in our country were hurried to that State and during that period the above quoted section was stricken out of the bill while it was in conference. This was of vast importance to the Northern Pacific. The election took place in Maine on September 8.

The papers abound in assertions that money was used very freely, and this charge I have never seen denied. It has also been charged that this money, or at least a portion of it, came from persons who were interested in the Northern Pacific Railroad.

This is natural. The Speaker of this House had been very kind to this corporation, and why should not this corporation reciprocate and be kind to the Speaker?

It will not be fair to Mr. REED to omit any part of the distinguished lawyer's line of reasoning. He follows what I have before quoted with these words:

Of course this still leaves to Congress a wide range of power, but its power is necessarily subordinate to the speedy completion of the road. If Congress deems the forfeiture of the lands needed for the speedy completion of the road, it would have a right so to forfeit the lands. It might give them to another company, sell them, and apply the proceeds, provided it adjudged such a course "needful and necessary to secure the speedy completion of the road."

The purposes and intention of Congress in passing the act of July 2, 1864, appear throughout all the act to be the speedy completion of the road.

MR. REED'S GRATITUDE TO THE NORTHERN PACIFIC.

Now, it will be observed that Mr. REED contends that the sole purpose of adding the further condition which is found in section 9 was to secure the speedy completion of the road, and he says the section gave Congress a wide range of power all with the one controlling view, to a speedy completion of the road; and then, notwithstanding the fact that section 9 gives this vast and apparently unlimited range of power, he informs us that his great and fertile brain, strengthened, stimulated, and supported by the entire brain power of the Judiciary Committee of the House, could conceive of no legislation whatever which would do anything towards attaining that end, namely, "to hasten the completion of the road," his words being:

We can conceive of no legislation which would hasten the completion of the road, and therefore recommend none.

MR. REED POSSIBLY OVERZEALOUS.

In other words, Mr. REED states that under section 8 the right to forfeit the 40,000,000 acres of land was unquestioned, and therefore the right of the people to the land was unquestioned, but that Congress utterly lost and surrendered this right on the part of the people because section 9 gave Congress a vast range of power to do acts to secure an early completion of the road, and yet in all this vast range of power Mr. REED can not conceive of anything on earth that can be done to hasten its completion.

Therefore, Mr. REED's conclusion is that section 9 granted 40,000,000 acres of land to the railroad utterly without consideration. If this were true, the grant would for this reason be null and void.

Hence, admitting for the sake of argument that all this reasoning of Mr. REED's is sound, it winds up by defeating itself and proving a result just the reverse of what Mr. REED intended.

If any one has doubts as to the soundness of the view that a grant of the people's land which is without any consideration is void, their doubts can be dispelled by reading Mr. REED's report on the Texas and Pacific grant which he submitted to Congress less than two months from the date of the report we are considering.

In that case he said:

Congress would never have been justified in offering the lands had it not deemed the offer necessary to secure the road.

MR. PAYSON CRITICISING MR. REED.

On July 27, 1886, the regular order was the consideration of the Northern Pacific land-grant forfeiture, and despite resistance and repeated objections of Mr. REED, of Maine, the House succeeded in taking up this important business. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] spoke in favor of the bill. In that speech he gives a history of the efforts on the part of Congress to restore this Northern Pacific grant to the public domain. On pages 7602 and 7603 he says:

In the Forty-seventh Congress a bill was introduced to declare a forfeiture of this grant. That bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee of this House, of which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] was then chairman and of which I had the honor to be a member.

By a majority vote of 1, the vote in the committee standing 8 to 7, the Judiciary Committee determined there was no power on the part of Congress to interfere. The report from that committee was made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], a copy of which I hold in my hand.

I had the honor to prepare the views of the minority on that committee in reference to the same proposition, taking the ground then, as I say now, for reasons I shall personally give, that Congress had the right to declare a forfeiture of this grant.

I read this as a matter of justice to the Judiciary Committee of the Forty-seventh Congress to show that a bare majority gave their sanction to the report which I have taken the liberty to criticize.

But I have not told the worst of this nefarious business.

AN EMPIRE STOLEN FROM THE PEOPLE.

The Northern Pacific Railroad shifted its proposed route three times so as to cover and include within the area of the three locations substantially all the valuable lands of entire States and embracing within its all-powerful grasp an area of land nearly 1,600 miles long and 100 miles wide, an empire more than a hundred times greater than the State of Rhode Island. Yes, Mr. Speaker, to be accurate, this area of land is as large as one hundred and twenty States like Rhode Island placed side by side. A Republican Administration acceded to the demands of the Northern Pacific and allowed this immense territory to be withdrawn from homestead entry, thus depriving of homes hundreds of thousands of honest settlers, and it is worthy of note that no allusion whatever is made to this outrage in the report of the majority of the Judiciary Committee which was prepared and submitted to the House by Mr. REED. But bad as all this appears it is only a small part of the wrongs which have been committed.

The minority report antagonizing Mr. REED was prepared by Mr. PAYSON and signed by seven members of the Judiciary Committee. After reviewing the positions taken by Mr. REED, the report said:

The minority do not agree with these views; we assert that the power to declare an absolute forfeiture of this land grant is in Congress.

The questions are important, involving the title to upwards of 39,900,000 acres of land, estimated by the company to be worth $2.50 per acre, or $99,750,000.

The report proceeds to discuss the matter, and quotes the following from section 9 of the bill:

That the United States make the several conditional grants herein, and the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same upon the further condition, etc.

Mr. PAYSON then discusses the above in the language which I will read:

Is it not absolutely certain, leaving no room for interpretation or the entertainment of any doubt, that to this point in the legislation, by breach of any of the conditions named in section 8, every right of the company, not only to the land grant, but its very franchises as a corporation, were determinable at the option of the Government, expressed by Congressional action? There is no foundation for even conjecture on this point; the language is explicit, and there is no conflict of authority in the text-books or reports as to the right of reverter of all rights granted by the act, upon breach of any condition, if forfeiture should be declared by Congress.

So well established is this proposition that it would appear to be an affectation of learning to cite authorities in support of it.

The distinguished gentleman then proceeds to discuss sections 8 and 9, and says:

There is no inconsistency between the two sections.

For breach of either condition of the eighth section a power to declare forfeiture existed. This power might or might not be exercised, in the discretion of Congress.

A mere delay to assert the right would not interfere with the subsequent exercise of it, nor relieve the grant of its conditional character.

Mr. PAYSON and his seven colleagues, after citing various authorities which sustain their position, said:

We conclude, then, on the legal question of power in Congress (and we are only dealing with the abstract legal question now) that it has the right—

First. To declare the title to all unpatented lands in the grant forfeited, and revert the United States with it, so that it can be restored to the public domain, open to sale and settlement under existing laws, under section 8.

MINERAL-LAND OUTRAGE.

The grants expressly excluded mineral lands, except those containing iron and coal. The proviso was expressed in these words:

Provided further, That all mineral lands be, and the same are hereby, excluded from the operation of this act, and in lieu thereof a like quantity of unoccupied and unappropriated agricultural lands, in odd-numbered sections, nearest the line of said road may be selected as above provided: And provided further, That the word "mineral," when it occurs in this act, shall not be held to include iron or coal.

The Interior Department, under Mr. Cleveland's Administration, was very emphatic in demanding that these mineral lands should be held and protected for the people, and the present Secretary, in his first report, used similar expressions.

I read from Secretary Noble's report of 1889:

The mineral land should be preserved for our people, and there is no claim on the part of the railroads to obtain these sources of vast wealth not intended for them that should be humored to the least degree beyond the law. This I say in no spirit of hostility to the railroad companies, but from a thorough conviction that the best interests of the Republic would be served by dividing this vast mineral wealth among individuals, rather than by allowing it by any means to fall into possession and control of large corporations. It is not intended to be granted to them, and they should not be allowed to obtain it by default.

Under the proviso which I have read the grant reserved all mineral lands to the United States.

That was plain enough, but now the railroads come into court with their subtle lawyers and secure a decision in a United States circuit court to the effect that any mineral lands, however valuable, which were not known to be mineral at the time the grant was made, are not excluded from the grant.

To appreciate the scope of such a decision we must recall that when this grant was made the domain in question was a wilderness and nothing whatever was known as to the character of the lands referred to in the act granting lands to the railroad.

This decision of course will be construed as the railroad lawyers demand, and the mill only it will take from frontier miners and pour into the treasury of the Northern Pacific can hardly be estimated.

I read from Francœur vs. Newhouse in the Federal Reporter, volume 40, page 618, fifth head-note:

EXCEPTION OF MINERAL LANDS.

The exception of mineral lands from the grant to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, only extends to lands known to be mineral, or, apparently mineral, at the time when the grant attached, and a discovery of a gold mine in the lands after the title has vested by full performance of the conditions does not defeat the title.

And on page 621:

The parties to this grant, both the United States and the grantees, must be presumed to have contemplated a grant in view of the condition of the lands as they were known, or appeared to be, at the time the grant took effect. In the exception of "mineral lands" from the grant Congress must have meant not only lands mineral in fact, but lands known to be mineral.

This decision was by Judge Sawyer. The same judge rendered a decision in the case of Cowell vs. Lammers, 10 Sawy., 246, which is also found in 21 Fed. Rep., 203, in which he said:

By the words "mineral lands" must be understood lands known to be such, or which there is satisfactory reason to believe are such, at the time of the grant or patent.

The effect of this decision will very possibly be by legal interpretation to grant a large part of the most valuable mines in the Northwest to the Northern Pacific Railroad.

THE POOR MINERS' UNEQUAL CONTEST.

When attention is drawn to this phase of the bill its friends tell us that this decision of Judge Sawyer will not stand the scrutiny of the Supreme Court, but is it not most probable that this decision will never reach that tribunal? It is a case of poor miners contending with a gigantic corporation, and the miners are too poor to appeal.

These gentlemen must therefore say something more to excuse themselves. What do they say? They tell us to let it go now. They say it is true, under this bill and decision, all the mines go to the railroad, but we will remedy that by other bills which we have introduced specially to prevent mineral lands being included in land grants. In other words, we will let the railroad have the mines under this bill, and then we will endeavor to pass other bills to get the mines and mineral lands back again and restore them to the people.

This reminds me of a piece of poetry I will borrow of my friend, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WILSON]:

I hear a lion in the lobby roar;
Say, Mr. Speaker, shall we shut the door
And keep him there, or shall we let him in
To try if we can turn him out again?

But this subterfuge, absurd and ridiculous on its face, is already exposed and denounced by the miners and settlers as a miserable, false pretense, and they tell us that the bills referred to would be ineffectual to give them the necessary relief even if they should be enacted into law.

The only effect of such bills, even if they became laws, would be to still further entangle poor settlers and miners in litigation with autocratic corporations. But I do not think the bills will ever be enacted into law. I hold in my hand the bill which it is claimed will remedy this great evil. It was introduced by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. CARTER] on April 17, 1890.

It was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, over which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] so ably presides, and in that committee it has slept, and while it is sleeping soundly upstairs in the committee-room the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. PAYSON] is trying to force the pending and objectionable measure through the House. I once heard of a doctor who made it a practice to make his well neighbors sick by administering drugs so that he could have the pleasure of giving them physic and restoring them to health. Mr. PAYSON appears to be in a great hurry to make the poor miners and frontier settlers in far-off Montana very sick, but his neglect of Mr. CARTER's bill indicates that he intends to let this Congress adjourn without taking the first step to prepare medicine to restore them to health.

THE MINERS' APPEAL FOR JUSTICE.

These miners and other citizens of Montana have filed numerous affidavits in the General Land Office showing that much of the land selected by the company is now known to be mineral in character, and that on some of the sections claimed under the grant mines of great value are being worked with marked success and satisfactory profits.

Over two thousand citizens of Montana have signed a memorial setting forth their views and praying for relief, as follows:

To his Excellency the President of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners most respectfully submit:
That they are all citizens of the United States, or have declared their intention to become such, and are all residents of Montana.
That they are all interested in the protection and development of its mineral resources.

That the Northern Pacific Railroad Company claims nearly all the odd-numbered sections of the surveyed portion of the mineral lands of Montana, bearing gold, silver, lead, or copper, and has already caused the same to be certified to itself for patent by the United States land officers in Montana.

That said certification has been based upon certain plats made by the deputy United States surveyors, and now on file in the respective United States land offices in Montana, showing these lands so certified to be non-mineral in their character; which said plats are erroneous in that they designate large quantities of mineral land as agricultural, mountainous, and mountainous timber land.

That under the present acts of Congress and the various decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States construing such acts there is little if any hope of correcting the existing errors and of preventing said railroad company from acquiring title to these lands.

That only within a few years has quartz mining proved to be a paying industry in Montana, and therefore the lands bearing the precious metals are to a large extent undeveloped.

That millions of dollars are now invested and being invested in the development of such resources, the benefit of which will inure to the said railroad company, if it is permitted to acquire title to the lands already certified to, and to which it is not entitled.

That unless relief is granted said railroad company will soon acquire the absolute title to nearly one-half of the mineral land of Montana.

That the acquisition of title to these lands by the said railroad company would not only work irreparable injury to the industries of Montana, and materially retard its progress, but would deprive all citizens of the United States of the right given them by the statutes to locate and appropriate our mineral lands, and would create one of the most colossal monopolies that has ever existed.

Now, therefore, we most respectfully and earnestly pray that such legislation be had as will preserve the mineral lands of Montana, bearing the precious metals, to the citizens of the United States, and prevent the Northern Pacific Railroad Company from acquiring any lands to which it is not clearly entitled under its grant.

The affidavits referred to have been in the files of the Interior Department for months and the above petition has been before Congress for many weeks, but they are as unheeded as the barking of as many wolves. The Committee on Public Lands has given Congress no information regarding it.

I desire also to call attention to an article in the Helena Mining Review, a paper published in the State of Montana:

Last week we asserted that the people of Montana were in great danger of losing the mineral lands embraced in the odd sections within the limits of the grant of lands to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. The danger lies in the fact that the United States circuit court for this circuit has practically decided that all lands not readily ascertainable as being mineral at the date of the grant, or the date of its acceptance, must be classed as non-mineral, and that neither our Senators nor Representative in Congress have so far effected any legislation, or tried to effect any necessary legislation, such as recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and by our people, to prevent such lands being patented by that company.

Mr. Speaker, should not such statements as this admonish us to take some steps to protect these people from the dangers that environ them?

The mineral character of the land referred to in the petition as within the limits of the grant claimed by the Northern Pacific is described by the gentleman from Montana, Mr. CARTER, in these words:

It appears that the Northern Pacific road was located and constructed in Montana and Idaho through one of the richest, if not the richest, of all the mineral-bearing countries in the world. Mines bearing gold, silver, copper, and lead are being discovered and developed constantly within the limits of the grant, and experience has demonstrated that the whole system of mountain ranges, extending from about the one hundred and seventh meridian westward a distance of some 600 miles, is interlaced by a vast network of mineral-bearing veins of quartz, while many of the valleys are rich with gold in placer deposits.

I also have a statement by Mr. Thomas G. Merrill, secretary of the Mineral Land Association, from which I read:

The main line of the Northern Pacific Railroad runs 800 miles through the State of Montana, and for one-half of this distance it runs through a mountainous district mostly valuable for the gold, silver, and copper found therein. The granting act gave this company 40 square miles of land to each mile of road, reserving the mineral lands. Of this 10,240,000 acres of land in the mountains there are about 550,000 acres that is valley land that might be termed agricultural land, leaving about 9,690,000 acres of mountainous mineral lands in Montana claimed by this railroad company.

There are no coal or iron lands properly so called in the range of the Rocky Mountains. These lands do not include their indemnity land. All the most productive mining districts of Montana are within the limits of the Northern Pacific grant, and it is within and around these districts where most of the surveys of public lands have been made.

Of these mineral lands claimed by this company there have been about 2,500,000 acres surveyed, and of these surveyed lands about 2,500,000 acres have been selected by this company for patent.

Here we have the undeniable statement that the Northern Pacific Railroad is claiming 2,500,000 acres of land, and yet the Committee on Public Lands complacently tells us that they will pass this bill, which, in connection with the Sawyer decision, is a virtual regrant of all these lands to the Northern Pacific Railroad. And then they tell us they will in the future, at their leisure, attempt to pass some bill for the purpose of recovering these lands for the people.

Mr. Merrill further informs us that the selections made by the Northern Pacific—

Cover about four thousand discovered mining properties bearing gold, silver, or copper, mostly quartz lodes, that are as yet unpatented, and nearly one thousand patented mines, which would be taken from their rightful owners and become the property of this company unless Congress interferes.

I also beg to read a paragraph from the report of the Hon. John W. Noble, Secretary of the Interior:

This question presents itself in regard to the mineral lands lying within the grant of the railroads running through mineral belts, and which would, otherwise than because of their mineral character be included within the railroad grants. The acts of Congress absolutely and unqualifiedly reserve all mineral lands from the railroad grants made to the most extended and important railroads in our country, and this reservation affects the claim of such a road as the Northern Pacific to a great part of its land subsidy.

It also affects to a very considerable degree the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific roads with some others; and how to determine what are mineral lands at this time, when the roads are claiming their grants, is indeed a most difficult and important matter. Originally it was left to the company to make affidavit in a form adopted by my predecessors, and by them deemed sufficient for a long while, but by which it was not made necessary for the officer taking the oath to swear to his actual knowledge that the land was not mineral.

Many of the selections made by the railroads under their grants were supported by such affidavits, but upon the same coming before the Commissioner of the General Land Office he demanded that a further affidavit should be made, the same as required from settlers on homestead claims, whereby actual knowledge of the fact that the same was not mineral land was required to be sworn to. This the railroad companies have failed to do, insisting that their claims, made under the regulations at the time existing, are valid and should be allowed.

This question is not determined, but it is deemed a matter to which your attention should be invited for the purpose of having, if necessary, some further legislation on the subject. On the one hand it is to be noted that the additional affidavit has been required since the selections were claimed; on the other, stands the absolute reservation of the law and the right of the people to enjoy these mineral lands, if such indeed there be among the selections made by the railroads. If legislation is not made on this subject the Department will have to decide by such light as may be obtained as to the real nature of the lands, whether mineral or not, however difficult it may be, and whatever the responsibility assumed. It is, however, deemed that a law should be passed by Congress enabling the Land Department to thoroughly investigate the character of lands supposed to be mineral and within the reservation of the law before the railroad is entitled to any cession whatever.

It would require a considerable appropriation for the purpose of investigation and survey; and, connected with this, authority should be given to the Secretary of the Interior to refuse to certify lands to the railroads until there was clear proof that the same were not mineral. The question is most important. It is far-reaching in its results and may affect the welfare and independence of many of our citizens. It would not be unreasonable to direct that the patents issued should themselves contain a reservation of any land therein described if it proved upon further development to be actually mineral land.

That the bill we are considering, construed with the Sawyer decision, would give the mines and mining lands to the railroad there can be no doubt.

Now read this conference report, made out since Judge Sawyer's opinion was published, and let me ask if there will not come a wail from the Northwest. There most certainly will, as under the Sawyer decision substantially every frontier miner is robbed of his property. Why, Mr. Speaker, this conference report is framed precisely so as to fit Judge Sawyer's decision like a glove, and has a stop-cock attachment which in effect prohibits Congress from future legislation looking to the forfeiture of any of those lands, no matter how frail or fraudulent the title.

But the fearful wrongs inflicted by this bill are not confined to the miners. The homestead farmers of the Northwest will also be sufferers. I have a letter written during this month by a homestead settler which shows that the alarm has already been sounded in far-off California. It explains itself. I will read it:

PARKFIELD, MONTEREY COUNTY, CALIFORNIA, September 2, 1890.

DEAR BROTHER: I expect the "forfeiture bill" has passed ere this. I will write a statement of the case as far as it concerns us, and if the bill has not passed you can give it to Senator PLUM, if you think best, though I presume he understands the matter.

I have got a patent for my homestead claim, with President Harrison's signature attached. Brother George has not received his yet, though he proved up several months before I did. He ought to get it before long.

We are within the indemnity belt granted to the Southern Pacific Railroad to aid in building the road from Goshen to Hollister. The company built the road from Goshen to Huron, and east from Hollister to Tres Pinos, and two years ago built 20 miles of road west from Huron to Alameda. A range of mountains separates Alameda from Tres Pinos. This indemnity land was opened for settlement five years ago, and as it is good land was quickly taken by settlers, most of whom have made final proof on their claims, and a great many have got patents for their land.

It will be remembered that these lands were opened for settlement under Commissioner Sparks's decision.

Now the railroad company comes in and claims this land, and if the forfeiture bill becomes a law as it passed the House of Representatives the company will get it. We claim that any forfeiture bill should forfeit the land opposite the 20 miles built two years ago, long after the land was settled on and improved by settlers. If this is not done, Congress ought to pass a bill to protect innocent settlers from the railroad company, as the company will be likely to charge the settlers all the land is worth, and more than most of them can pay.

It is not the fault of the settlers that they now find themselves about to lose the land, and the Government ought, in justice, to protect them from the railroad company.

This railroad is of no benefit to us, as there is a range of mountains between us and it, and to get to the road we would be obliged to travel 90 miles over high mountains and rough roads.

Yours truly,

R. S. CRANE.

J. H. CRANE, Esq., Washington, D. C.

THE SOMERSAULT OF THE GENTLEMAN FROM ILLINOIS.

Just think of it! The same man who in 1882, 1884, and 1886 voluntarily became the champion of the people and then proclaimed eternal warfare against the thieving Northern Pacific Railroad, which he denounced on this floor as a "briber and a thief," and every man who hesitated about going to the fullest length of forfeiture as a railroad lawyer—where is he now? He has gone, horse, foot, and dragons, to the camp of the enemies of the people.

Mr. Speaker, four years ago you and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] were as far apart as the east is from the west, and now you bivouac together and sleep upon the same blanket, and a right narrow one at that.

On June 6, 1882, when you made your famous report, which said the unholy hands of the people could not touch the stolen empire of the sacred Northern Pacific, where was the gentleman from Illinois? He was then the champion of the people. He met you with drawn sword, and commanded you to desist in your efforts to confirm this vast empire of territory to the Northern Pacific. He proclaimed in tones of thunder that these lands, estimated at over $200,000,000, belonged to the people, and he demanded that they be restored to their rightful owners.

Where is the gentleman from Illinois now? When you were elected Speaker you put the key of the vault where this treasure of the people is kept into his hands. Has he been faithful to the people? No, Mr. Speaker, the treasures which, on July 24, 1882, he said belonged to the people, and on April 4, 1884, almost swore that the legal right was with the people, he is now surrendering to the enemy. He has become a leader of the hosts which are arrayed against the very people whose rights six years ago he pledged himself so sacredly to defend.

To show Mr. PAYSON's position on this subject two sessions ago, I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-eighth Congress, first session:

Mr. HERR. Now, do I understand the gentleman's position to be this: If a company goes on and completes a certain portion of its road in good faith under the terms of its contract, and is allowed to have lands patented as certain portions of the road are completed, it may go on and build perhaps 120 miles in that way, and then, because the company does not build the rest of the road within the time, the Government has an equitable and moral right to declare the entire land forfeited and take away from the company what it has earned?

Mr. PAYSON. When the gentleman asks what we have a "moral right" to do, that is a question which every member will settle for himself. If he asks whether we have a legal right to do it, I say unhesitatingly yes; and I have never heard any lawyer, except some attorney for a railroad company, who ever denied the proposition.

It will be here observed that on April 4, 1884, Mr. PAYSON unhesitatingly asserted that Congress had a legal right to declare a forfeiture of every particle of the 47,000,000 acres of land embraced in the grant to the Northern Pacific. He was not satisfied to simply assert the proposition, but he added that he unhesitatingly made the assertion, and he also asserted that he never heard any lawyer, except some attorney for a railroad company, who ever denied the proposition. These emphatic declarations were made during the discussion of the bill forfeiting a grant to the Oregon Central.

As further evidence of Mr. PAYSON's correct views a few years ago, I read from CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 81, Forty-ninth Congress, page 7602.

Mr. PAYSON says:

I have said, Mr. Speaker, that I am in favor of the House bill and opposed to that of the Senate; and having given the facts as I understand them I reach the point to state the reasons. Involved in this case, as in every other of like character, are two questions: First, the question of power; second, the question of policy: that is to say, first, whether we have the legal right or authority under the law to declare a forfeiture of these lands; secondly, if the first point should be established affirmatively, whether as a matter of policy, as a matter of fair dealing under all the circumstances of the case, the power that Congress has ought to be exercised.

After a most elaborate discussion of the legal points involved he, with great emphasis, declares that Congress has unquestioned power to forfeit the lands. I read the following from the same speech:

We conclude, then, on the legal question of power in Congress (and we are only dealing with the abstract legal question now) that it has the right, first, to declare the title to all unpatented lands in the grant forfeited, and revert the United States with it, so that it can be restored to the public domain open to sale and settlement under existing laws.

And a little later on, in the same speech, he said—I read from page 7609:

Let me put it in another way: It is admitted that they have not built the Cascade Branch, even now. And that they have not built the road from Wallula to Portland, 214 miles, and have practically abandoned that part of the route.

Now, sir, for this non-user of the franchise have we not the legal right to forfeit it, now and here? Unquestionably; and if so, have we not the right to the incident—the land grant?

I am only now discussing the question of power, of strict legal right.

Gentlemen say "the law abhors a forfeiture," and this is a frequent text in this case. If it were so the law would be very like the gentlemen who quote the maxim.

But it is not so; the law is the reverse, as expressly decided in the Farnsworth case (92 United States). There the court says that while forfeiture is not favored as between individuals where compensation can be made, yet in case of public grants like this the courts can not and ought not to relieve, and that the maxim quoted does not apply.

We had the power to assert this forfeiture in 1870, and the authorities I have cited show that we have it now as a legal right beyond all question. Should it be exercised? That is a question of policy, and to that I now address myself.

We have seen that the distinguished gentleman here settled the question of legal right emphatically in favor of the Government.

He then, in his forcible way, addressed himself to the question of policy. I read from the same volume of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 7611 and 7612:

I have shown, sir, that under the law we have the power, the legal right, to assert this forfeiture.

I said also that if this land belongs to the people nothing should constrain us to yield it to the company except the strongest equitable consideration—equities which are equal to legal obligations.

With confidence I submit that with what the House bill proposes, the liberality of its provisions in what it permits the company to retain, the facts in the history of the building of the road, and the action of the company toward the people—monopolistic, exacting, and unyielding always—I earnestly insist that to make this additional donation of one hundred millions of property would be an act of stupendous folly.

But I can not close in justice to myself without noticing the closing remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin, which I see he permits to remain in the RECORD, that these efforts on the part of the Committee on Public Lands to restore these lands to the public domain "are the sheerest demagoguery and of the cheapest class."

This kind of talk is not new to us. We have had a good deal of it, sir, first and last since this work began. Not only so, sir, but predictions have been freely indulged in by gentlemen who think and act as my neighbor, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. Price), who thinks that nothing ever could or would come of it, that no lands would ever be restored to the Government by this movement, and that it would all end in empty talk.

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of pride to me that I have been connected in my way and to the best of my ability with these efforts to reclaim these vast areas of land from those technically holding them, but without right or equity. I was among the first in the matter, and am in the matter still, and expect to remain there.

But there is another point to which I must refer. During Mr. PAYSON's great speech of 1884 it was suggested that the entire forfeiture of the Northern Pacific grant might result in a great hardship, and they contended that the railroad ought in equity to be permitted to retain lands lying parallel to that portion of the road which was completed and in running order before the date upon which the grant expired.

In reply to these gentlemen, Mr. PAYSON said:

But unless there is some restriction in the act on the extent of the forfeiture where it is exercised, it extends to the whole estate granted.

I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, without any assumption or any affectation of learning with reference to this question, that gentlemen who oppose this bill can not find a single case that equities in the direction of affirming that where there is no limitation upon the extent of forfeiture in the act of Congress or the Legislature making the grant, the power does not extend to the entire thing granted.

This could mean nothing less than an emphatic declaration that the failure upon the part of the railroad to complete the entire line prior to the expiration of the grant worked a complete forfeiture of the entire grant from Lake Superior to Puget Sound.

Mr. PAYSON's attention was also called to the fact that some of these granted lands had been sold; that the railroad had made valuable improvements on other portions of the grant, and that the entire body had been encumbered with a mortgage, and that the mortgage land bonds had been sold broadcast.

In reply to these suggestions Mr. PAYSON said:

No matter into whose hands it may go, no matter what improvements may be put upon it, no matter how many mortgages may be given, the common-law right to declare an absolute forfeiture attaches in such a case.

Gentlemen on the other side were pleased to ask the question, as though it were an important factor in the calculation, has not a mortgage been given on this railroad? We answered yes; and gentlemen sat back as though that ended the matter. I call the attention of these gentlemen who have these scruples to the case of Farnsworth vs. The Minnesota and Pacific Railroad Company (92 United States), where it was expressly decided that the holder of mortgage securities upon a land grant to which a condition subsequent was attached, so that possibly a declaration of forfeiture might be made, took the same subject to that liability. The court says (page 66):

"The beneficiaries under that instrument [the mortgage] took whatever security it afforded in subordination to the right of the State to enforce the forfeiture."

It is not necessary to quote any further from these able speeches of the gentleman from Illinois, but these happen to be before an expression in reply to an inquiry from Mr. OATES, which I will read. It will be observed that he seemed to chafe at the laggardness of Congress with regard to the Northern Pacific forfeiture. Mr. PAYSON said:

I agree with the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. OATES) that this is really a pioneer case for all of these land grants which have been unearned by the railroads to whom they have been given, and I desire that the House shall make a record upon it here and now, as speedily as the roll can be called, to show whether or not the demand on the part of the people of this country that their public lands shall remain a part of the property of this great nation shall be fairly and squarely met. I believe it is their wish that these lands should be reserved on the part of the Government for the benefit of those who are homeless, for the horny-handed men of toil who are sweating day by day for a very existence. It is for us to say whether we shall take care of the trust confided to us and keep it out of the hands of a railroad corporation that has neither justice, law, nor equity in support of its claim.

Representing the whole people of this land as a member for the whole country as well as for the district in which I live, I should regard myself recreant to my duty if I did not protest against a donation, a free gift of this great area to a corporation which had, instead of attempting to carry out the wishes of Congress, conspicuously succeeded in defeating it. My duty I regard as done to the House. I have attempted, and I venture the hope that I have succeeded in doing so, to demonstrate that this corporation had no legal claim to any portion of this grant, for no one has yet given any authority except his own statement as against the array of citations in the report.

With the vote soon to be taken which shall determine the question whether the people shall suffer and this defaulting company be the gainer, the country must of necessity acquiesce; but I do not believe that the people whose representatives we are will be satisfied with less than a restoration to them of that which is their own.

I am anxious that this record should be made, and plead guilty to a consuming curiosity to know how many men on this floor will dare the condemnation of this country by condoning what this company has done. What the country wants is acts, and not words; it wants results, and not promises, and I do not propose to delay it any longer.

Would it have been possible for a man to more thoroughly array himself upon the side of the people? Would it have been possible for a man to have been more emphatic in denunciation of those who hesitated in their duty in this matter? Not trusting to his own opinion, he fortifies the positions he assumes with decisions of our highest courts and the opinions of our most eminent jurists; and yet this distinguished Congressman is to-day side by side with the men he was so recently denouncing with bitter invectives.

BLASTED HOPES AND EXPECTATIONS.

This is the same Mr. PAYSON who, in July, 1886, proclaimed and swore that he was among the first in the matter, was in the matter still, and that he expected to remain there. His exact language was, as I will read:

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of pride to me that I have been connected in my way and to the best of my ability with these efforts to reclaim these vast areas of land from those technically holding them, but without right or equity. I was among the first in the matter, and am in the matter still, and expect to remain there.

Where is this man? Why, Mr. Speaker, he is at the head and front of the hosts—if it were not unparliamentary and were it not for the respect I have for, and confidence in, the gentleman's integrity, I would say—of the banditti who are lugging off the property of the people.

He says he expected to remain on the side of the people, but his expectations are not realized, and so far from remaining with the people he is the captain-general of their worst enemies.

Not only does the gentleman from Illinois lead in this despoliation of the people's domain, but as I have before shown, he erects what he seems to regard as a bulwark and barricade to prevent pursuit of the thieves and prevent the recovery of the stolen booty. In all forfeiture bills heretofore we have incorporated a provision to the effect that the forfeiture act should not be construed as a bar to the forfeiture of other lands not included in the act.

A provision of that character was in the forfeiture bill as it passed both the Senate and House.

It was in these words:

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them, as recited in the first section, forfeited for any failure, past or future, to comply with the conditions of the grant.

For some reason, which some of these subtle lawyers can explain, this clause, all-important to the people, was left out of the conference report.

FORTY MILLION ACRES CONFIRMED TO NORTHERN PACIFIC.

I would like again to ask the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] how he can explain to this House his failure to retain this important section. He has not explained this matter at all to the satisfaction of the friends of the people who are opposing this bill. Let me ask him why he comes back from the committee of conference with this section omitted and not one word of explanation in his report.

Only two short months ago he seemed to fully appreciate its importance. During his speech, on July 7, 1890, when this bill was before the House, the following colloquy took place—I read from the RECORD, July 7, 1890, page 7525:

Mr. HEARD. Now the other inquiry—as to whether it will have the effect of confirming any title in a railroad to such lands where the road was finished out of time.

Mr. PAYSON. Now, I am coming to the inquiry of my friend as to whether it will have the effect of confirming any title, or whether it shall prevent Congress from acting hereafter if it desired. That is covered by the seventh section, which I will read.

"That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them, as recited in the first section, forfeited for any failure, past or future, to comply with the conditions of the grant."

That is reserving the right on the part of Congress to do anything it may choose hereafter in any other form it pleases with reference to this very character of land.

Mr. HEARD. That is satisfactory, Mr. Chairman.

It will be observed that Mr. PAYSON regarded that section as the only authority left to enable the people and the Government to recover other lands than those included in the bill.

This was an important matter then and is quite, yes, even more, important now; and yet the gentleman from Illinois has allowed it to be stricken from the bill, thus admitting that lands not included in the bill are forever and irrevocably surrendered to the railroads.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] thought the bill "satisfactory" with that clause. I beg to inquire if he can vote for the bill with the clause omitted.

MESMERIC INFLUENCE OF CORPORATE WEALTH.

In my opinion the effect of that striking out would be construed by a court as an expression upon the part of the law-making power of a legislative determination that this forfeiture should be regarded as the final action on the part of the Government.

What subtle, what mesmeric influence has wrought this change, what magic power has seized upon the valiant leader who so recently was followed with such pride and confidence? He who two Congresses ago with conspicuous heroism led in the great battle cry for "the people," he who, discarding party lines, regardless of party associations, struck blow after blow in the cause of right and in the defense of the weak and lowly against the greed and tyranny of heartless corporations.

Where is he who, as a chosen leader, demanded that Congress should rise in its might and extend its protecting arm over this priceless heritage of the people; he who for four long years declaimed in this Hall against this unprecedented despoliation of the most valued and choicest of our domain; he who met the gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED, in the committee-room and upon this floor when the first gun was fired in this great battle nearly ten years ago in the Forty-seventh Congress?

FIELD-MARSHAL REED AND CAPTAIN-GENERAL PAYSON.

I can see them now, those gladiators, those giants in both frame and intellect, when in June, 1882, each was leading his army to the strife of bloody battle.

It was a grand picture.

His royal highness, the distinguished field-marshal, THOMAS B. REED, the supreme commander of the Northern Pacific forces, bravely leading his well equipped and thoroughly organized army; its commissariat well stored; its quartermaster's department intact, and a pay bureau so inexhaustible as to boast comparison with the Treasury of the United States.

But look at the undaunted hero who crosses swords with the giant general from Maine. It is the distinguished generalissimo of the forces of the people, Captain-General LEWIS E. PAYSON, of Illinois. His heroic and determined bearing compensates for the disadvantage of his smaller army and fewer battalions, all poorly equipped, badly organized, undisciplined it is true, but superbly brave, and led by a gallant and able commander and inspired by his determination and courage.

Then, too, it was the cause of right and humanity on their side, and the enemies of humanity and right on the other side.

With Fabian generalship he held the enemy at bay, awaiting reinforcements which would certainly be en route in the early days of November.

Though the battles of the summer campaign of 1882 were not decisive, well-earned plaudits were showered upon the head of the volunteer defender of right and justice.

This man who enlisted in the cause of the people and who gave to it the patriotism of a Washington, the devotion of a Marco Bozzaris, and the courage of a Marshal Ney, where, oh, where is he to-day? Is it possible he has become discouraged and dismayed? Has he been allured by the pomps and vanities of this wicked world and is he tired of associating with and battling for the poor and lowly, which comprise the great masses of the people? I call upon the gentleman to return to us and join in this our last, our most blessed effort in our grand and holy struggle. Come, come, come; one more united blow and victory will crown our endeavors. It is true, we are to-day in the Valley Forge of the Revolution, but the clouds are breaking away and I see the word Yorktown in the distant horizon.

THE FORMER BELLIGERENTS BURY HATCHETS AND TENDERLY EMBRACE.

But he does not come. Other influences lead him in another direction, and he stands before the country championing a bill which it is claimed gives 40,000,000 acres of the people's land to the Northern Pacific. Of course we must assume that it is now his opinion that the railroad has a legal right to this land; and, if so, it is evident that the gentleman has so changed his views that they are now identical with those of other gentlemen, including the Speaker, who advocate and endorse the proposition, which four years ago Mr. PAYSON said he never heard sanctioned by any lawyer except some attorney of a railroad company. But I will give the exact language of our captain-general in speaking of the right of Congress to forfeit the total grant in case the entire road was not built within the time specified. He said:

We have a legal right to do it. I say unhesitatingly yes, and I have never heard a lawyer, except some attorney for a railroad company, who ever denied the proposition.

I do not say that Mr. PAYSON's changed position makes him an attorney for a railroad; but to those who heard these expressions and witnessed the forensic battle between the field-marshal and the captain-general, and heard the latter gentleman denounce the Northern Pacific as a briber and a thief, it seemed a little odd this morning to see the intense anxiety of the Speaker to recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] so eagerly acceded to and acquiesced in by that gentleman.

Those who were here when the House was called to order witnessed the spectacle of a member standing directly in front of the Chair demanding a hearing for a question of high privilege, only to be answered by the Speaker that—and they then saw the gentleman from Illinois, with childlike obedience, spring to his feet; and this bill was thus forced before the House by the joint efforts of the Speaker and Mr. PAYSON.

The Chair desires to recognize the gentleman from Illinois for the presentation of a conference report—

The affidavits and petitions of the poor farmers and miners of the frontiers are unheeded and corporate wealth is again triumphant.

I do not mean to imply and really do not believe that either of the gentlemen is in the employ of any railroad company, but the picture had a shade of the appearance of an advocate of corporate wealth presiding over Congress and enjoying the close sympathy of the chairman of the committee of this House which controls the priceless heritage of the people, the vast domain of landed wealth which has cost countless lives, seas of blood, and millions of treasure.

THE SPEAKER'S JUDICIAL BOMBERAULT.

Now, let us read a legal decision of the distinguished Speaker when he comes to consider the interests of a railroad which is located in the milder climate of Texas, a road in which the Northern Pacific had no interest, but, on the contrary, one which bade fair to become and really did become a formidable rival of that corporation. It was to the interest of the Northern Pacific to crush the Texas Pacific, and Hon. THOMAS B. REED, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, became the appointed agent to cripple and if possible destroy that corporation.

Remember that on June 8, 1882, he made the injudicial, partisan, illogical, and unjust decision in which he insisted that the Northern Pacific had good title to 40,000,000 acres of land which was never earned as required by law, and which, in justice, law, right, and equity, belonged to the people. Having done this for the Northern Pacific, on August 3, 1882, Mr. REED renders a crushing decision against its rival, the Texas and Pacific. It seems the Texas and Pacific being unable to complete the road within the time specified in the grant, that corporation allowed the Southern Pacific, which was building from the west to the east, to occupy, as stated in Mr. REED's report, substantially the route on which the act of March, 1871, contemplated that the Texas and Pacific would build.

Now, remember that the grant to the Texas and Pacific Railroad granted the lands to said road—its successors and assigns.

Therefore, pursuant to that authority, it assigned its rights on the grant to the Southern Pacific and became consolidated with that corporation.

Mr. REED admits this, and in his report says that the Southern Pacific—entered into an agreement with the Texas and Pacific, which was not produced before the committee.

It was admitted, however, that the latter company had released its title to the land grant to the Southern Pacific, and that that corporation was now the claimant of the lands.

Now, let us see Mr. REED's argument on this point. He says:

On behalf of the Southern Pacific it is urged that the words used in the ninth section, "and assigns," in the phrase "there is hereby granted to the said Texas and Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, every alternate section," etc., authorize the latter company to transfer the lands in question in bulk to any other person who would receive it charged with the same trust; that the Southern Pacific, having received the lands at a time when they had completed a railroad which was the same, or nearly the same, in location as that described in the act of March, 1871, received the lands discharged from the trust by reason of its fulfillment. In the opinion of the committee the words "and assigns" do not, in this case, have this meaning. We think these words describe the nature of the estate, are words of limitation, and do not constitute the grantee an agent of the United States to select another corporation which has performed similar work and make it the beneficiary of the grant. Nor do they constitute the grantee an agent to bestow a gratuity.

This is specious enough. It would do tolerably well for a lawyer's brief who had no case and wanted to please his client and earn a fee, but it is not judicial.

It smacks too much of the partisan for a judgment of a court. It looks like straining after a desired result.

Mr. REED having, as he thought, squelched the Northern Pacific's rival on that point and shown to his satisfaction and to the satisfaction of the Northern Pacific's lawyer that the Texas and Pacific road had no right to assign their grant, and that the express words of the act of Congress, namely:

There is hereby granted to the said Texas and Pacific Railroad Company its successors and assigns—

Does not mean anything, or rather means the reverse of what it really says, Mr. REED tackles the next point, namely, the clause in section 4 which authorizes the Texas and Pacific to consolidate, etc. The Speaker here expresses himself in these words:

It is further claimed on behalf of the Southern Pacific that the sections—notably section 4—authorizing consolidations give the authority needed for the transfer. Whether these sections would, under any state of facts, confer such power need not now be determined, for no facts have been laid before us which show any consolidation whereby the Texas and Pacific has absorbed the Southern Pacific. So far as this transaction is concerned the process would seem to have been reversed.

The consolidations contemplated by sections 4, 5, and 6 were those whereby other companies were to become part and parcel of the Texas and Pacific. If the Southern Pacific had become part and parcel of the Texas and Pacific, it could not be the claimant here.

CONCLUSIONS BASED UPON SOPHISTRIES AND TECHNICALITIES.

His entire argument on this point seems to rest on the fact that the consolidated road has been termed the "Southern Pacific" instead of the "Texas Pacific." He appears to concede that if the consolidation had been so worded that it could be said that the latter-named railroad absorbed the former, then in that case the grant would be good and could not be forfeited.

This is certainly technical enough; a skillful play upon words; an art in which the gentleman is a distinguished adept.

Mr. REED has another point to encounter. It is conceded by all that the railroad was built as required by the act, but in the innocence of their hearts a portion of the line was built by a corporation which had a different heading to their letter-heads, but they insist that since they were authorized "to assign" and "to consolidate," and since pursuant to this authority they have assigned and consolidated and built the railroad they ought not to be deprived of the grant upon technical hair-splitting.

I am gratified to be able to state that our distinguished Speaker approached this momentous question with calm composure.

He says:

It is further urged on behalf of the Southern Pacific that, inasmuch as that company have done what the United States offered to give the granted land to the Texas and Pacific if it would do it, equity requires that the land grant should be transferred.

To this, as a request for a gratuity, no objection can be made. That would rest in the sound judgment of Congress. But this request is put upon the ground of a claim founded upon equity and good conscience. The reply seems simple. Congress would never have been justified in offering the lands had it not deemed the offer necessary to secure the road.

The distinguished gentleman here distinctly avers that Congress can not or ought not to consider a claim founded upon equity and good conscience, because—

Congress would never have been justified in offering the lands had it not deemed the offer necessary to secure the road.

Now, Mr. REED gives us clearly to understand that he admits that the claim of the consolidated road is founded on equity and good conscience, that the consolidated road did that for which the United States offered to give the granted land to the Texas and Pacific, that the roads were authorized to consolidate and to assign; and yet on the shallowest and slightest of technical grounds Mr. REED decides that the grant should be forfeited.

He therefore recommends the adoption of the following:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company under the act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, be, and they are hereby, declared forfeited, and that the whole of said lands be restored to the public domain and made subject to sale and settlement under existing laws of the United States.

THE BILL SURRENDERS THE RIGHTS OF THE PEOPLE.

The bill submitted with the conference report, which we are called upon to adopt and thus enact into law, embraces new legislation which has never been considered by this House. It should therefore be referred to the Committee of the Whole for consideration under the rules.

An attempt of this character to avoid submitting legislation to the Committee of the Whole by including it in a conference report is in violation of the principles of parliamentary law and is a contortion of the rules of this House.

This bill sought to be enacted into law proposes a declaration of forfeiture only as to certain lands which lie opposite to and are continuous with portions of railroads which are not now constructed.

The lands thus proposed to be forfeited are of but little value and are but a very small proportion of the lands with which it is the duty of Congress to deal.

The bill is a very incomplete and ineffective assertion of the rights of the Government over the lands heretofore granted for the purpose of encouraging the building of railroads and is a disgraceful surrender by the Representatives of the people to the influence of corporate wealth and the almost imperial power which attaches thereto.

That Congress should be so regardless of its obligation to the people ought to invoke the most serious contemplation of all right-thinking men.

There are two kinds of forfeiture: one may be termed legislative and the other judicial; the former by a direct legislative declaration of forfeiture, and the latter by a judgment of a court or a suit commenced and prosecuted by officials of the Department of Justice. In order to illustrate to the House the classes of lands which we have sought to reclaim and which have been embraced in forfeiture bills, I will refer to the Northern Pacific Railroad.

THE NORTHERN PACIFIC GRANT.

On July 2, 1864, Congress enacted a law incorporating the railroad, and authorized it to construct a road, its eastern terminus being on Lake Superior and its western terminus resting on the waters of the Pacific at Puget Sound, with a branch extending down into Oregon, to Portland.

This act and the acts supplementary thereto contained an express provision that the grant was made upon condition and was accepted by the company upon the express condition that the road was to be fully completed and in operation from Lake Superior to Puget Sound by July 4, 1879.

On that date, namely, July 4, 1879, the road was not completed, and the condition upon which the grant land was to vest in the company having failed, of course the conditional grant lapsed or ceased to have force or effect as a grant, and the land in right, law, and equity reverted to the public domain and to the people.

The company had built that portion of the road lying within the more thickly settled portions of the line between Lake Superior and the city of Bismarck.

The railroad company then modestly contended that in equity and good conscience they ought to have the land which lay continuous with that portion of the road which they built prior to July 4, 1879; but they laid no claim to any lands parallel to any portion of the line or proposed line between Bismarck and Puget Sound.

It is clear by the terms of the contract, and the Supreme Court has so decided, that in such a case all right to any part of the land is forfeited.

Granted lands may now be divided into three classes:

First. Those earned before the date fixed for completion of the entire contract.

Second. Those earned after said date.

Third. Those which have never been earned, and which may therefore now be regarded as abandoned.

In the case of the Northern Pacific there can be no question as to the right of declaring a forfeiture of all three classes of the land, but in a spirit of generosity a large majority of Congress are willing to allow the road to retain with undisputed title the land earned in time and designated as the first class.

Those lands never earned, which are designated as the third class, really amount to nothing, and the grantees themselves are quite willing, and in some cases apparently anxious, for them to be forfeited.

The contention, therefore, is confined to a question of forfeiture of the lands of the second class, which were not earned at the date the contract required the road to be completed, but which the road is asking Congress to give them upon the ground that of their own motion they built a railroad years after the expiration of the time fixed in the granting act for its construction. That the road is not entitled to any such gratuity there can be no question.

PURPOSE OF GRANTING THE LANDS.

This munificent grant was made in order to develop an almost uninhabited country. The object was to give facilities to enterprising pioneers, who were pressing westward as leaders in the settlement of our frontier country. The railroad company did not perform one iota of this service; it gave no facility to these sturdy men; it shrank from the perils and hardships which emigrants encountered.

The railroad waited until the grant had expired and until the settlement of the country had progressed along and far beyond the lines of the projected road, and freight and passenger traffic had become such as to make the building of the road a profitable enterprise without the bounty of a grant of land, and, of course, a land grant or other public aid was no longer necessary to induce the building of the railroad.

The roads can not ask for these lands either as a matter of legal right or as a matter of equity.

They were given contingently upon certain important and clearly stipulated conditions. These conditions have failed; the railroad is in default. The people now demand the enforcement of their rights. More than five years ago the Hon. W. A. J. Sparks, Mr. Cleveland's Commissioner of the Land Office, called upon Congress to do its duty to the people and promptly restore these lands to the public domain.

COMMISSIONER SPARKS'S APPEAL FOR THE PEOPLE.

After reviewing in extenso the bad faith and defaults and conspicuous neglects on the part of the Northern Pacific and other land-grant roads to construct their lines according to the terms of the grant, this faithful official says (I read from Mr. Sparks's report as found in House Executive Documents, first session, Forty-ninth Congress, pages 196, 197):

The paramount right of the Government to repossess itself of the lands is unquestionable. The conditions have failed and the grants are subject to resumption by the grantor. The matter of declaring these forfeitures and restoring the forfeited lands to the public domain is prominently before the country and has awakened and excites keen public interest. The amount of unpatented lands embraced in all the grants subject to declaration of forfeiture is estimated at 100,000,000 acres, an area equal to that of the combined States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia. The restoration to public settlement and entry of this great body of lands is a subject of the first magnitude and of profound national importance. The question presented is strictly one of legal right. The rights of the corporations have been upheld for twenty or thirty years. The Government has not been in laches. The lands have been kept in reservation, material for building the roads has been freely supplied from the public domain, and extension of time for construction has been allowed.

The default of the companies has been voluntary. The rights of the public are now to be considered, the right of the people to repossess themselves of their own. The case is not one calling for sympathy to the corporations; it is one calling for justice to the people of the country. In the management of their grants, as of their roads, the railroad companies have shown little sympathy for the public—none for settlers and citizens whose presence and labor were building up traffic and whose earnings were paying all the traffic would bear over roads constructed by public bounty. Holding their own claims through the indulgence of the Government, delinquent corporations have pursued settlers with the strong forces of corporate power, not only from local tribunals to the executive department, but from the executive department to the courts, to wrest from them the homes they had acquired within the boundaries of railroad grants. It is my information that a patent from the United States to a settler under an award by adjudication of this Department is not security to his rights against a railroad company, but that the policy of compelling settlers to defend their patents in the courts has been systematically adopted by some of the companies having the largest grants and being in laches to the Government in respect to their own obligations.

Appeals have been made to me by holders of such patents asking for aid. I had no means to give in defense of their titles, which they said they could not maintain at their own cost against venacious, dilatory and expensive proceedings forced upon them to compel them to purchase from the companies the quiet of the titles which they had after protracted struggle obtained from the United States. Those who seek equity should do equity; those who demand charity should show some regard for the rights of others and of their donors.

It is my opinion that the right and power vested in Congress of enforcing the forfeitures that have been incurred should be exercised. A failure or refusal to exercise the legislative jurisdiction may be construed as a continuance or a renewal of the grants. I misunderstand the sentiment and mistake the temper of the people if a renewal of forfeited land grants in any form or manner is in consonance with their views of public policy or their demands for public justice.

However improvident the original grants were, the Government is bound to maintain its obligations so long as the companies kept theirs. But the failure of one party is the release of the other. An opportunity is now presented for the legal recovery of a public estate long held in abeyance. Having been forfeited, it should now be resumed. I respectfully recommend that forfeitures be declared in all cases in which the roads were not completed in the manner and within the time prescribed by law, and that the unpatented lands be restored to the public domain.

RIGHTS OF THE SETTLERS NOT GUARDED.

There are other grave objections to the conference report.

The conferees seemed to be so anxious to comply with the demands of the railroads that they forgot the rights of the people. The bill as reported does not give any certain protection to settlers on the lands which are subject to forfeiture.

The second section of the bill purports to favor settlers only on forfeited land, and this gratuitous legislation is without meaning or necessity, because the rights of settlers on such lands are already fully protected by general law.

Whenever there is a settler on a tract of land which is restored to the public domain, the rights of said settler attach immediately upon the restoration of said land, and the particular provision to this end which is incorporated in the report can only have the effect to mislead the mind from the pertinent fact that the conference report utterly fails to guard the rights of those who need protection.

There are now thousands of claims of bona fide settlers pending before the Land Office on applications to enter lands which were settled upon after the expiration of the grant.

The bill or report proposes to relieve delinquent railroad companies of the liability of forfeitures incurred and which ought to and should be enforced, which leniency is legally and practically tantamount to a regrant of the lands.

If this princely concession is to be made to powerful corporations it would be a very small measure of fairness and justice to the poor settler to except from the regrant to these rich corporations the lands upon which these settlers have their humble homes. As the bill or report now stands such settlers would be compelled to purchase from the railroad companies not the land alone, but even the improvements which at their own expense they have placed upon the land.

Against this palpable wrong and injustice every honest man should solemnly protest.

If the Republican party has determined to be false to the people and surrender their birthright to the Northern Pacific Company and other like corporations, and at their behest decline to enforce forfeiture of unearned land beyond the immaterial limit proposed by the bill they ought in all conscience to provide that settlement rights be saved and secured on the great body of lands to which the right of forfeiture is waived and surrendered by the bill.

PUBLIC RIGHTS NOT PROTECTED.

I will now refer to another serious objection to the bill. It makes no provision for protecting the public rights in the mineral lands within the limits of railroad grants which are subject to forfeiture.

It is well known and understood that the railroads are strenuously asserting their claim to these mineral lands, and although they were expressly excluded from the grant the artful lawyers of these corporations are seeking by technical devices to set up and substantiate a right or claim on the part of the railroads to these lands, and facile decisions by the courts as well as the Departments are hoped for and relied upon to enable them to accomplish their purposes.

I insist, Mr. Speaker, that if the Republican party is to relinquish and abandon the right of forfeiture on the part of Congress it is the duty of Congress to at least definitely and forever extinguish and prohibit any future claim of the railroad companies to mineral lands.

I desire particularly to call the attention of Congress to the fact that the most important feature of the pending measure is that through it the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company along 1,500 miles of road is saved from forfeiture. By the waiver of forfeiture on this road alone a donation of not less than 30,000,000 acres of land at the cost of the nation is made to the railroad company, a donation imperial in its nature and beyond the wildest dreams of avarice.

The failure of the company to build its road according to the terms of its grant is well known. It did not even definitely locate its line through this great stretch of land until after the grant had expired by limitation of law. Its right not having attached during the lifetime of the grant, it has now no legal claim to the lands which it might have secured but for its own disregard of the obligations assumed. It is shown by the reports of the Commissioners of Railroads and of Public Lands that the amount of money already realized by this company from sales of land and the average value of unsold land already patented to the company exceed even the company's estimate of the cost of the entire road as constructed.

PROVISIONS OF THE BILL UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Conspicuous as the bill is in neglecting to do what should be done, it is almost equally conspicuous in attempting to do what its progenitors know they have no legal right to do. The first section of the bill contains provisions which every man informed regarding these grants knows are clearly in violation of the Constitution, and therefore unless amended the law would be declared unconstitutional, and therefore no purpose whatever would be attained.

Having failed or refused to include in the forfeiture the 40,000,000 or more acres of land which should be forfeited, the bill proceeds to and attempts the forfeiture of a few inconsequent patches which Congress has no right to forfeit.

The first section of the bill is in these words:

That there is hereby forfeited to the United States, and the United States hereby resumes the title thereto, all lands heretofore granted to any State or to any corporation to aid in the construction of a railroad opposite to and continuous with the portion of any such railroad not now completed, for the construction or benefit of which lands have heretofore been granted; and all such lands are declared to be a part of the public domain.

The conferees ought to have known that the grant to many railroads included a gift or grant in present for the purpose of furnishing aid for such preliminary work as would be required before the construction of any part of the road.

These first 120 sections were granted without any condition, and the purpose for which they were granted has been fulfilled, and yet the road may not be completed and in operation.

The case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 21 Wallace, page 44, and the Courtright case, 21 Wallace, 310, are cases in which the Supreme Court construed these laws and decided that the lands to which I have referred were absolute grants. The syllabus in Schulenberg vs. Harriman says:

That the act of June 3, 1856, and the first section of the act of May 5, 1864, are grants in present and passed the title to the odd sections designated to be afterwards located. When the route was fixed their location became certain, and the title, which was previously imperfect, acquired precision, and became attached to the land.

I will also read from the Courtright case, 21 Wallace, page 315:

It is contended by the defendants, first, that under the act of Congress of May 15, 1856, no lands could be sold by the State until 20 continuous miles of the road were constructed; second, that, if 120 sections could be sold in advance of such construction, they could only be taken from lands adjoining the line of the road from its commencement on the east; and, third, that the grant by the State to the first company was upon conditions precedent, which not having been complied with, the title did not pass. Neither of these positions can, in our judgment, be maintained. The act of Congress by its express language authorized a sale of 120 sections in advance of the construction of any part of the road. It was only as to the sale of the remaining sections that the provision requiring a previous completion of 20 miles applied. It is true it was the sole object of the grant to aid in the construction of the railroad, and for that purpose the sale of the land was only allowed as the road was completed in divisions, except as to 120 sections.

The evident intention of Congress in making this exception was to furnish aid for such preliminary work as would be required before the construction of any part of the road. No conditions, therefore, of any kind were imposed upon the State in the disposition of this quantity, Congress relying upon the good faith of the State to see that its proceeds were applied for the purposes contemplated by the act.

Nor was there any restriction upon the State as to the place where the 120 sections should be selected along the line of the road, except that they should be included within a continuous length of 20 miles on each side. They might be selected from lands adjoining the eastern end of the road or the western end or along the central portion.

I need hardly have cited these authorities, because the act itself shows its unconstitutionality upon its face. It attempts to deal with lands which were unconditionally granted, and states that they are hereby forfeited and the United States resumes the title thereto. The exact language of the bill is:

That there is hereby forfeited to the United States and the United States hereby resumes the title thereto.

After attempting to forfeit lands which were granted without condition, the bill proceeds to exempt from forfeiture over 40,000,000 acres of the people's lands, which were granted upon condition with the facts staring the committee in the face that the conditions were not complied with.

PROPER METHOD WITH REGARD TO THE FIRST 120 SECTIONS.

The proper methods of dealing with these unconditional grants of the first 120 sections is for the law to require the Government to commence suits in each case praying the court to decree a judicial forfeiture. The court would take evidence, and in cases where the land had been earned it would so decree, and in cases of grants which had not been earned the court would render a judgment declaring a judicial forfeiture. The settlers on the lands would be entirely relieved of trouble and expense, that burden being borne entirely by the Government and the holders of the grant. That the Government should assume this expense there can be no question. It is responsible for the clouds and doubts which environ the title and it ought to disentangle the complication.

Without some such provision the condition of the settler will in many cases be deplorable.

In many cases these grants of the first 120 sections were patented and went into possession of the grantees twenty or thirty years ago. Some portions have been sold out to settlers. The grantees claim that they have earned these lands, and it must be presumed they will invoke the aid of courts to protect their title.

The settler will be told he must hire a lawyer to defend his home. He is immediately involved in litigation in a Federal court with a wealthy corporation, which it must be expected will use every means possible to sustain its title. Court after court will pass, and even if the settler has every possible success the loss of time and expense he has undergone for lawyers and witnesses will in many cases fully equal the value of the land he started out to defend, and if he fails in his suit he is hopelessly ruined.

How much better for the entire matter in such grants to be determined by one suit instituted by the Government. Under my plan the Government would summon the settler as its witness and he would be paid by the Government for his attendance instead of paying witness fees out of his own pocket. In the Fiftieth Congress I successfully advocated this plan of settling the controversy in the Oregon road cases, and it proved satisfactory to all parties. The refusal to adopt that plan in these cases shows an unpardonable disregard of the rights of settlers.

But that is not all. After the suit is won what does the settler get? In some cases he is given preference to enter a part of his land, and in some cases he is not allowed to make any entry whatever. In some cases the bill confiscates the greater part of the settler's home which he has earned by years of labor. Take, for instance, a case (and there are plenty of similar cases) of a man who has bought and paid for and at great expense improved a place of 1,250 acres. After winning his suit the extent of his privilege is to buy one-fourth of his place at $1.25 an acre, and three-fourths is irredeemably confiscated by this act.

As before said the bill is a conspicuous exemplification of a committee which attempt to do things they ought not to do, and leave undone things they ought to do, and there is no health in them.

It is gratifying to see from the report that every Democrat on the committee refused to lend his sanction to the abomination, and the report comes before us signed and sanctioned by Republicans only, and I feel confident every Democrat in this House will use every effort and every parliamentary device to defeat a measure conceived and framed for the purpose of increasing corporate wealth.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] has expired.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I will append the report of Mr. Speaker REED in the Forty-seventh Congress, to which I have referred, and from which I have taken extracts.

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred sundry bills relating to land grants to railroads, have had the same under consideration, and report as to the Northern Pacific Railroad as follows:

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company derives its chartered rights from the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Statutes, 356). The road is to be constructed from a point on Lake Superior to Puget Sound, with a branch via the valley of the Columbia to a point at or near Portland, Oregon. Twenty alternate odd-numbered sections per mile on each side of the road in Territories and ten in States were granted to the company, with a right under that and subsequent statutes to make up out of a 20-mile limit on either side all losses arising from prior disposal by the United States of lands the company would have otherwise been entitled to.

By the terms of the original act the road should have been completed July 4, 1870. By joint resolutions approved May 7, 1877 (14 Statutes, 355), and July 1, 1878 (15 Statutes, 255), such changes were made as to time of completion that the Secretary of the Interior, June 11, 1879, held that the effect of them was to require the completion of the road July 4, 1879. Whether this was the exact date or not, it is sufficient to say that the time for completion has now expired beyond question. Eleven hundred and eighty miles of the road have been completed. On the western side it is finished from Puget Sound to the western boundary of Montana, and on the eastern side from Lake Superior to —, in Montana. About 600 miles remain to be built. These figures we understand to refer to the main line.

Under the provisions of section 3 of the act of July 2, 1864, the land was granted; under those of sections 8 and 9 the conditions were imposed.

The important granting words of section 3 are as follows:

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be, and hereby is, granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company . . . every alternate section of public land," etc.

The conditions are as follows, in full:

"Sec. 8. That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than 50 miles per year after the second year and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1870.

"Sec. 9. That the United States make the several conditioned grants herein, and that the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of the conditions hereof and allow the same to continue for upwards of one year, then in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States, by its Congress, may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road."

Upon this state of facts your committee are called upon to state their opinion as to the legal rights of the United States, and to advise what legislative action, if any, ought to be taken.

The legal effect of the sections as quoted above is to make a present to the company of the lands in question, subject to the provisions and conditions stated in sections 8 and 9. The sections taken together vest in the company an estate upon condition-subsequent. If section 9 had not been enacted, it would be quite clear that the estate of the company would have been determinable at the pleasure of the United States, on the happening of any one of three things: First, a failure to begin the road in two years; second, a failure in any one year to build fifty miles; and, third, a failure in ten years to build, equip, and complete the whole road.

To secure this right of forfeiture it was not necessary to mention it in the act. The words "upon condition" were the only words needed. They are as potent as if the words had been added, "and if these conditions are not fulfilled the land shall revert to the United States." But the severity of the words in section 8 Congress had a perfect right to modify. It had a right to say just what should be the effect of a breach of the conditions of the grant. It could rest its reserved rights on the words "upon condition," and then the legal effect would be to retain the right of reverter, or it could claim that right in so many words, as was done in all the railroad grants made to States.

Instead of either of these things, Congress enacted section 9, limiting and defining the effect of a breach of the conditions named in section 8. By that limitation, the sole right which remains in the United States at the present time is the right, "by its Congress, to do any and all acts which may be needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road." Of course this still leaves to Congress a wide range of power, but its power is necessarily subordinate to the speedy completion of the road. If Congress deems the forfeiture of the lands needed for the speedy completion of the road, it would have a right so to forfeit the lands. It might give them to another company, sell them and apply the proceeds, provided it adjudged such a course "needful and necessary to secure the speedy completion of the road."

The purposes and intention of Congress in passing the act of July 2, 1864, appears throughout all the act to be the speedy completion of the road. Every provision has that in view. All the limitations and conditions are to that end, and the limitations of time had that purpose only. Even the right to amend and repeal is subject to the same controlling desire.

Section 20 reads as follows:

"Sec. 20. And be it further enacted, That the better to accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times (but particularly in time of war) the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may at any time, having due regard for the rights of said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act."

The United States did not want back its lands. It wanted a great public thoroughfare across the continent, and it took every precaution to insure its completion.

The remaining question, therefore, for us to consider is "what is needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road?"

As has already been stated, 1,100 miles of the road have been completed, 600 or less remain. Work is going on at both interior terminal and on the tunnels in the heart of Montana. It appears that 150 miles were approved by President Hayes in 1880 and 325 miles by President Arthur last year. The company assert that by September, 1883, they will finish the road; that they are progressing as fast as can possibly be done. No testimony or suggestion to the contrary has been made by any one. Your committee do not see how the transfer of the lands to another company could hasten the completion of the road, nor would it be regarded as advisable for the Government to complete the road by its own direct action. Congress would hardly regard either course as needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road.

We can conceive of no legislation which would hasten the completion of the road, and therefore recommend none.

I now renew my request that every member of the House who wishes to compel the insertion of the all-essential amendments I have suggested refrain from voting and leave the Hall. An empire is at stake, and it is too evident that if a quorum remain within these doors nothing can prevent the passage of the bill with all its hideous features and its direful results.

Mr. PAYSON. I yield now to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question, and I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama be permitted to proceed for twenty minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. Oh, I must object, Mr. Speaker. Other business is pressing. Unanimous consent has been given to print on this subject. This matter has been all gone over in the House time and time again. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HOUK. I simply wished to say that this is a very important matter—

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, this does not come out of my time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor and of course the time is progressing.

Mr. HOPKINS. I trust nobody will object to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] proceeding.

Mr. HOUK. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that he will have some difficulty in passing his bill if he is going to crowd it through in this way. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, this may not be in all respects a perfect bill. It is not exactly as I would have framed it myself, and yet I think it is the best bill we are likely to get at this session or at any other in the near future. The party to which I belong may carry the next House of Representatives; I am confident that we will, but with the Senate Republican, and likely to remain so for years to come, forfeiture bills framed on the Democratic idea heretofore contended for on this side can not be expected to pass into law. We might pass them in the House as we did in the Forty-ninth Congress and as we did in the Fiftieth Congress, but they were defeated then by a Republican Senate, and they would be in the next Congress. Why, sir, in the last Congress, we, on this side, voted for a bill that forfeited 50,000,000 acres of land, but the Senate defeated it or amended it by cutting down the forfeiture, and sent us a bill much like that we have before us now. I was in favor of accepting the Senate bill, taking all we could get and turning it over to the people then. But no vote upon it could be reached in the House, and so the bill failed. Many others on this side of the House, party friends of mine, had agreed with me to vote for and pass the Senate bill as the best we could get, but it was not allowed to come up. I stand now as I stood then.

I am in favor of taking what we can get, turning it over to the Government, and giving it to the settlers who are already upon it, and to other settlers who are anxious to go upon it, but are not permitted to do so under the present conditions.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Let me ask if you are in favor of that clause of the bill which prevents forfeitures in future.

Mr. HERBERT. There is no such clause in the bill.
Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Let me call the gentleman's attention—

Mr. HERBERT. I beg my colleague's pardon; I must decline to yield. My time is limited, as he well knows.

It has been said in this debate that corporations were here pressing the passage of this bill. Now, Mr. Speaker, so far as my observation extends, the influence that corporations and land companies have brought to bear here has been exerted against the passage of this bill as it now is. Certainly that is the case with the two grants lying in the State of Alabama.

I address myself especially to the Mobile and Girard grant, because that lies mostly within the district I have the honor to represent. As the bill came back to us from the Senate, section 7 extended the time within which that road might be completed and gave one year after the passage of the act. Under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, on grants like this, if the road is completed before a forfeiture is declared it earns all the land granted whether completed within the time limited by the act or not. The court holds that the mere failure by Congress to act extends the time for the completion of the road. Under those decisions the Mobile and Girard Company, having completed 80 miles heretofore, is already entitled to 322,560 acres of land, and Congress could not forfeit it now. If the bill had passed as it came from the Senate, and the road had been completed within one year, the remainder of the grant, amounting to 328,704 acres and something more, would have gone to the railroad company or its vendees, the Van Kirk Land Company. There would have been left no homesteads for settlers in the future, and every present settler on the land would have been at the mercy of the Van Kirk Land Company, which would have owned all the land included in the original grant.

I and others of my colleagues here opposed that extension of time. We went before the conference committee, and section 7 was stricken out. I occupied then, and I occupy now, my original position: that all forfeitable lands shall be forfeited and held only for actual settlers. I want to put my views, which are well known to my colleagues here, on record now in this public manner, so that no man who wishes to know what my position is and has been can fail to understand it.

Now, sir, that seventh section of the Senate bill, giving one year's more time to the railroad company, having been stricken out by the conference committee, the next effort of the land company is to defeat this bill. If this bill can be defeated and all legislation prevented until after the road is completed, it will then be too late for Congress to act. Under the decisions I have alluded to the road will have earned all the grant by being completed before a forfeiture is declared. The defeat of legislation would be just as valuable to the land company as the passage of the Senate bill. Therefore, sir, I hope this bill will pass now and without delay.

I have no feelings of ill will towards the members of this land company, sir. One of them has been for years my warm personal and political friend; the other, though belonging to another political party, I regard with the friendliest feelings. But, sir, in the consideration of a subject like this, motives of personal friendship can have no place. It was simply with me a question of duty. This question did at one time assume a phase that caused me to hesitate and endeavor to ascertain the sentiment of the people I represent.

There are cases, sir, in which a Representative can not hesitate. He is bound by his oath to obey the Constitution of his country, the highest law of the land. "The preservation of the General Government," Jefferson said, "in its whole constitutional vigor is the sheet-anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad." He who swerves from his duty to support and defend the Constitution, whether he does it in the hope of reward or from the fear of consequences to himself, is unworthy of the place in which I stand. I trust, sir, it is not unbecoming in me to express the hope that I am not wanting in the courage to stand by my convictions when the organic law of the land compels me. Yet, sir, in all cases where the path of duty is not pointed out by my oath to obey the Constitution, I regard it as a high duty to obey the will of my constituents. Therefore I sought to ascertain the wishes of those I represented, those who had most direct interest in the question, as soon as it was made to appear to me that the extension of the Mobile and Girard Railroad depended on the extension of time by this bill, and when it was further deemed possible, in case of extension of time, to fully provide for the rights of settlers and purchasers. So I inquired; and I soon ascertained, as I thought, that the masses of the people desired forfeiture. That decided me, and the conclusion I reached was all the more satisfactory because it was in harmony with the course I had been pursuing. I found further, Mr. Speaker, that the building of the road did not depend upon the extension of time by the bill; that a contract had already been made to build it, and that without any regard to the land grant. In fact, sir, the railroad company had sold its chance to secure the land and conveyed it by deed to the Van Kirk Land Company. A knowledge of this fact, when it came to me, confirmed me in my determination to contend for the forfeiture of every foot of forfeitable land of the grant.

It is strenuously contended here that this railroad company is entitled to 120 sections in addition to the lands conceded to it by the bill. I do not so understand the law, and so I have opposed any such construction of the statute, and the conference committee agree with me. It is also earnestly insisted that the road from Mobile to Pollard was constructed by the Mobile and Great Northern Railroad Company under some sort of an agreement to build along the line of the Mobile and Girard, and that this justifies the claim of the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company to additional land as earned on that portion of the line. I combated this claim before the Public Lands Committee, and that committee agrees with me and it is not allowed in the bill.

The bill seeks to settle as fairly as possible and without litigation all controversies between the railroad company, the purchasers from it, and the settlers. Here is that portion of the bill which refers directly to this road:

SEC. 8. That the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company, of Alabama, shall be entitled to the quantity of land earned by the construction of its road from Girard to Troy, a distance of 84 miles. And the Secretary of the Interior in making settlement and certifying to or for the benefit of said company the lands earned thereby shall include therein all the lands sold, conveyed, or otherwise disposed of by said company, not to exceed the total amount earned by said company as aforesaid. And the titles of the purchasers to all such lands are hereby confirmed so far as the United States are concerned.

But such settlement and certification shall not include any lands upon which there were bona fide pre-emption or homestead claims on the 1st day of January, 1890, arising or asserted by actual occupation of the land under color of the laws of the United States.

The right hereby given to the said railroad company is on the condition that it shall within ninety days from the passage of this act, by resolution of its board of directors, duly accept the provisions of the same and file with the Secretary of the Interior a valid relinquishment of all said company's interest, right, title, and claim in and to all such lands within the limits of its grant, as have heretofore been sold by the officers of the United States, for cash, where the Government still retains the purchase money, or with the allowance or approval of such officers have been entered in good faith under the pre-emption or homestead laws, or as are claimed under the homestead or pre-emption laws as aforesaid, and the right and title of the persons holding or claiming any such lands under such sales or entries are hereby confirmed, and all such claims under the pre-emption or homestead laws may be perfected as provided by law, said company to have the right to select other lands, as near as practicable to constructed road, and within indemnity limits in lieu of the lands so relinquished.

First. It is plain, sir, that this forfeits all the land which can be forfeited. It concedes what can not be denied, under the decisions, that the railroad company is entitled for the 84 miles it has finished from Girard to Troy, but it refuses to allow anything for what was done by another company on the Mobile end of the line and refuses to allow the other claim made for it of 120 sections additional.

Secondly. It confirms the titles of all purchasers from the railroad company by estimating these lands so sold as part of the company's lands in settlement of that question to be had at the land office. So justice is done to these purchasers, but not at the expense of the public. The railroad company is simply compelled to recognize the sales it has made.

Thirdly. It protects and confirms the right to complete homestead entries of all who were on the 1st of January, 1890, in "actual occupation of the land under color of the laws of the United States," although that land may fall to the railroad company in settlement at the land office.

As the amendment passed the House we secured the rights of all who might be in actual occupation of such lands falling to the railroad company at the date of the passage of the act; and so I think it ought to be, but the conference committee were unwilling to go that far. Of course when those homestead entries are taken out of lands the railroad company may be entitled to, it is allowed to select other lands in place of them. Only in this way could the settler be protected.

As the amendment passed the House it also secured the rights of holders of tax titles, and did it, not at the expense of the public, but by including them in the lands earned. The theory was that if the company had earned lands and allowed them to sell for taxes, those who bought them ought to be entitled as against the railroad company to stand on their legal rights, whatever they might be. The holders of tax titles were not to be entitled as against the public; they were to get none of the forfeitable lands, but only to try conclusions with the railroad company for such lands as may be allotted to it.

Certainly the committee might have left this to be the case to the extent of 320 acres for each occupant, but the conference thought otherwise, and it is preordained that this report is to pass without amendment.

Fourthly. As to all lands not falling to the railroad company, but forfeited by this bill, section 2 gives all actual settlers at the date of its passage a preferred right of homestead, to be exercised within six months.

Fifthly. Then by another law, passed during the last Congress, every acre of the land forfeited by the bill and fit for homesteads is dedicated to homestead purposes alone.

So, Mr. Speaker, to conclude what I have to say on this subject, the bill forfeits every foot of the Mobile and Girard Railroad grant that could be forfeited by law.

It points out how much this is, so as to avoid law-suits between the settlers and the railroad company or its vendees.

It saves the homestead rights of all who were settled prior to January last on the land that may go to the railroad company, and the Department will be asked to so arrange, if possible, the settlement with the company as to save even those settlers who may have gone on the lands since the 1st of January.

It preserves absolutely for homestead settlement all the lands forfeited, giving priority to those who may be settled on these forfeited lands at the date of the passage of the act. Thus this bill secures, so far as is possible, a settlement of all disputes and thus prevents lawsuits that would otherwise arise between the railroad company, settlers, and purchasers. This will give immense relief. It is not to be expected that there will arise no contentions whatever. When questions are so complicated and conflicting interests so numerous, some disputes will still exist. Human foresight could not provide against them all in one law, but it is hoped and believed, Mr. Speaker, that the result will be the speedy settlement of all questions that may come up, a rapid increase in the number of homesteads in that section, the multiplication of prosperous homes and of churches and school-houses and all the concomitant advantages of the increasing civilization of this day.

It has been eloquently urged against this bill that it ought not to pass because it does not make provision for the protection of the rights of settlers along the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad, but leaves them to litigate their rights in the courts. Section 8, which I have set forth, has been pointed to as making a fair and equitable arrangement for the protection of settlers along the line of the Mobile and Girard in Alabama, and it has been said that the bill ought to fail because a similar provision was not inserted as to the Northern Pacific grant. For myself I should be much better pleased if it had; but, sir, I can not afford to vote against this bill simply because it may be defective in those provisions which apply to the Northwest.

My constituents are pressing for settlement of these questions; they wish to know when and how and from whom they can obtain titles to this land. All now is doubt, anxiety, and uncertainty. I can not vote against the bill and thus perpetuate these conditions. When it becomes law there is no reason why the Commissioner of the General Land Office may not within sixty days' time adjudicate the questions arising under it and officially declare the legal status of every foot of land covered by the original grant to the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company. In the mean time, let every settler on those lands stand upon and maintain his rights.

Mr. PAYSON. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY].

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, during the last Congress I voted with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in favor of a forfeiture of land grants amounting in the aggregate to some 54,000,000 acres. I find now that our efforts to secure that legislation are not to be successful. We can not get all we sought in that measure, and I am ready to take the best that I can get, and that is what this bill proposes; because it has one good effect at least; that is, it settles all of the difficulties in my own State.

There are two railroads—small lines of road—in my district. One of these is 36½ miles long and was chartered in 1844. They have received considerable aid from the State of Alabama, and I saw it stated the other day that they had sold this road for the sum of $250,000. I suppose the road is worth five or six hundred thousand dollars, to which extent money has been expended in its construction. All along the line of that road people have settled, and they want title to the lands. If these lands are not forfeited by this bill now, the people will not get them at all, and the railroad or the purchasers of this railroad will, who are certainly not entitled to them. I am in favor of the settlers getting the lands, and not the railroad. There is another road some 37½ miles long which controls 144,000 acres of land, and not a shovelful of dirt has been dug toward its construction. The people have despaired of getting this road, because it is near the line of another road, which other road got its quota of the lands; and, if you do not forfeit these lands by the provisions of the pending bill, these 144,000 acres will go to a company which has done no work—

Mr. RICHARDSON. What road does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. FORNEY. The Coosa and Chattooga line of road proposed to run from Gadsden to the Georgia State line. So I say, Mr. Speaker, the settlers in my part of the country will receive, and ought to receive, the benefit of this legislation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAYSON. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I failed to understand the argument of my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who has been a very persistent advocate of the forfeiture of the public lands which were not earned by the railroads to which they have been granted by acts of Congress. He has been the persistent advocate of forfeiting all those lands, and I put a question to him, therefore, to know whether he thought the passage of this bill, forfeiting lands granted to the roads named in the bill, will be any inhibition upon Congress making future forfeitures of other lands. I did not exactly understand his answer to my inquiry, nor did I understand whether he was the advocate of this measure or its opponent.

Now, my friend from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] has appropriately stated that while there are many things that might be added to this bill, and while it might be still further perfected, so far as it affects the railroad in my State, which is embraced in the bill, I believe that it is the best that can be accomplished; therefore, I am in favor of accepting it.

The grant of land to the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad was made in 1856. The gentleman from Illinois having charge of the bill [Mr. PAYSON], as chairman of the House committee, has appropriately stated the reasons why that road was not constructed within the time prescribed by the original act granting the land. The intervention of the war, the impoverishment of the country as the result of the war, its inability to do it, are reasons why these lands should not now be taken from that road. I would not, Mr. Speaker, favor this or any other bill which did not in terms so plain and clear that they could not be misconstrued, either by department or by courts, secure to the actual homestead entryman his right to the land. I understand that this bill does that with regard to these lands granted to the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad long years ago.

I believe it is to the interest of the country to construct that road, and for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that the construction of that road will open a network of railways throughout the State of Mississippi from the center and northern portion to the Gulf shore, which is now emphatically terra incognita almost to our own inhabitants, because we have no railway communication save by the tedious routes through Mobile or New Orleans; whereas, if we have this direct railway communication from the center to the extreme northern portion of the State we will have the State compacted by a network of railways almost equal to that of which it has been said in the great agricultural State of Ohio, that every farmer has a railway running by his door. I believe it to be the interest of the people to use these public lands, not occupied by settlers, for the construction of these roads, because the construction of the road will give value to the land, and will give value to every single tract of land lying within 20 miles of the line of the road.

For this reason I think this bill, as it forfeits a certain amount of land, ought not to meet with objection on the part of gentlemen who, like my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], are in favor of the forfeiture of unearned lands to the extent to which this bill proposes to go. I do not believe, for myself, that the provision of the seventh article as it originally stood in the bill of the House would add anything to or take anything away from the power of Congress to make such a forfeiture by legislative enactment.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. It would do no harm to leave it in.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well. I am not particular about that; but at all events certainly there could be no act of this Congress which could put a limit upon the power of subsequent Congresses with reference to questions of this kind.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, both political parties in this country have insisted in their campaigns before the people that they favored the forfeiting to the General Government of the unearned land grants. The restoration of this vast body of public land to the public domain to be opened to actual settlers under our homestead law has been a subject of the deepest interest to the people of the country. Already the public lands subject to homestead are reduced in volume to such an extent as to make it almost impossible for a great number of settlers in the future to find homes without the aid of this forfeiture bill.

Mr. Speaker, it has been made the duty, as it has been the pleasure and pride, of the Republican party to pass into law, or at least so near it that we are now on the verge of final vote, an act that restores to the public domain bodies of land aggregating nearly 8,000,000 acres. In the Fiftieth Congress a Democratic House passed a bill forfeiting all lands granted to railroads in every case where the railroad had failed to construct its lines within the terms of the contract as to time. In other words, no matter that the road had completed its line ten or fifteen years ago; no matter that the Government had accepted it; no matter that the lands had been enormously enhanced in value thereby; no matter the actual settler had thus been greatly benefited, this act of dastardly repudiation, this act in violation of every principle of law, justice, and equity, was passed by the House of Representatives and sent to the Senate. Of course it could not be passed by that body; of course nobody supposed it could be. It would have been unconstitutional, necessarily.

The Senate passed a bill substantially the same as this, only as a substitute for the House bill, and sent it back to us. The Senate held that the Government had waived its opposition and waived its right to complain, because of the lapse of time, inasmuch as the roads had been finished and accepted by the Government. The Democratic House refused to pass the Senate bill, and so between the two bodies the measure failed. Had the Senate bill been passed in the House and become a law we could have gained a large amount of land, added to the public domain, which we shall not now have because of its having been disposed of by the railroad companies since. But now we have an intelligent and honest bill, an effective bill, one that will accomplish the result asked for.

Thus again, Mr. Speaker, has the Republican party redeemed its pledges upon a distinctive proposition in which the Democrats have failed to redeem theirs. It is the old story of promises, bad faith, and unfulfillment. It has a counterpart in the Democratic pledges in regard to silver and the enlargement of the currency, and I can not more profitably employ the few moments of my time than by pointing out again not only the splendid achievement of the party in passing this bill, but also the history of Democratic pledges and Democratic failures and Republican pledges and Republican achievement upon the silver question. I embody extracts from the utterances of the Democratic party and its actions. I embody also extracts from Republican pledges and the action of that party:

THE SILVER DOLLAR.

Cleveland Administration: Silver, per ounce, 91.24 cents; silver dollar, 70.57 cents.

Harrison Administration: Silver, per ounce, $1.1947; silver dollar, 92.4 cents. Read the record. See how it illustrates the difference between the two parties as to fidelity and truth.

The Democracy says, "We will restore silver," and promptly proceeds to debase it.

The Republican party says, "We will restore silver," and keeps its word.

THIS WAS THE DEMOCRATIC PROMISE.

[From the Democratic national platform of 1884.]

"We believe in the gold and silver coinage of the Constitution."

Do they? Let us see. The result of the campaign was the election of a Democratic President and a Democratic majority in Congress. But before Mr. Cleveland took his office, before the slightest responsibility fell on his shoulders, he hurried into an attack on silver.

At that time silver was worth about 80 cents for a standard dollar.

CLEVELAND SAYS STOP COINING.

Having got elected on a platform favoring silver, he proceeds to denounce it. [From President Cleveland's letter to Congressman Warner, February 24, 1885.]

"It is most desirable at the present juncture to maintain and continue in use the mass of our gold coin as well as the mass of silver already coined. This is possible by a present suspension of the purchase and coinage of silver. I am not aware that by any other method it is possible."

THE ATTACK FOLLOWED UP.

Secretary Manning also insists that Democratic pledges be broken.

[From annual report of Secretary of the Treasury for 1893.]

"In but one way now can any nation retain in use coins of both metals which are both unlimited legal tender, namely, by stopping the coinage of the metal unacceptable to other nations. France has done so. The United States must likewise stop coining silver. Stop, wait, negotiate. * * * The silver dollar can not be kept in equivalence with the gold dollar if the coinage of silver continues."

CLEVELAND DEAD IN EARNEST.

He attributes all the nation's troubles to the use of silver and urges Congress to stop coining.

[From the President's annual message, December 3, 1885.]

"The desire to utilize the silver product of the country should not lead to a misuse of this power (that is, the power 'to coin money')."

"The hoarding of gold has already begun."

"When the time comes that gold has been withdrawn from circulation, rich speculators will sell it at a ruinous premium over silver, and the laboring men and women of the land, most defenseless of all, will find that the dollar received as the wage of their toil has sadly shrunk in its purchasing power."

"If this silver coinage be continued, we may reasonably expect that gold and its equivalent will abandon the field of circulation to silver alone. This, of course, must produce a severe contraction of our circulating medium, instead of adding to it."

"I recommend the suspension of the compulsory coinage of silver dollars."

The only action taken by the Forty-ninth Congress on the subject of silver was the defeat of a free-coinage bill. The vote on this bill is especially significant in view of the present Democratic pretense that free coinage is what they want; and that their failure to support the new Republican silver law was dictated by their desire to secure the unlimited use of silver.

FREE COINAGE BEATEN.

The Democracy, after all its promises, in the face of its responsibility, with a great majority at its command, defeats free silver.

The free coinage bill was reported adversely by the Democratic Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and on the final vote, taken April 8, 1886, it was defeated.

CLEVELAND KEEPS IT UP.

He says in effect that the fact that the country has not gone to the "demonstration how-ows" makes no impression on his mind.

[From the President's second annual message, December 6, 1886.]

"I have seen no reason to change the views expressed in my last annual message on the subject of this compulsory coinage, and I again urge its suspension."

SILVER AT ITS LOWEST EBB.

Democratic hostility forces its price down to ruinous figures.

On May 19, 1888, the price of silver, which had steadily declined since the passage of the Democratic Bland act, reached its lowest figure. Its London price was 41½ pence; its New York price was 91½ cents, and the value of the silver dollar was 70.57 cents.

ANOTHER NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

And this is what it has to say on the subject of silver:

[From the national Democratic platform of 1888.]

O

Mr. Cleveland turned over the silver dollar to the new Administration worth a fraction over 70 cents. But Mr. Cleveland did not learn anything by his defeat, for in his last message to Congress he keeps up the war upon silver thus:

BEATEN, BUT STILL BITTER.

Untaught by his defeat at the polls, Mr. Cleveland maintains his warfare against silver.

[From the President's last annual message, December 3, 1888.]

"The Secretary recommends the suspension of the further coinage of silver, and in such recommendation I earnestly concur."

And now we come to the pleasing view of this case.

A Republican Administration came in and its record upon this mighty question we celebrate to-day.

It is as follows, briefly but succinctly told:

REPUBLICANS AT THE HELM.

President Harrison and Speaker REED take command of the ship, and instantly silver begins to mount. This was the Republican promise.

[From the national Republican platform of 1888.]

"The Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money, and condemns the policy of the Democratic Administration in its efforts to demonetize silver."

HARRISON ADVOCATES COINAGE.

The Republican President differs with his Democratic predecessor, and says it is sheer folly to discredit our own goods.

[From the President's first annual message, December, 1889.]

"The evil anticipations which have accompanied the coinage and use of the silver dollar have not been realized. As a coin it has not had general use, and the public Treasury has been compelled to store it. But this is manifestly owing to the fact that its paper representative is more convenient. The general acceptance and use of the silver certificate show that silver has not been otherwise discredited. * * * I have always been an advocate of the use of silver in our currency. We are large producers of that metal, and should not discredit it."

MUST USE BOTH METALS.

The Republican Secretary differs with his Democratic predecessors, and says we can not afford to discard silver.

[From Secretary Windom's annual report for 1889.]

"With a stock of 343,638,001 silver dollars, sharing equally with our gold coins the function of full legal-tender money, as well as $76,800,000 silver coins of limited tender, and an annual product of silver from our mines approximating $60,000,000 (coinage value), it would not be for the interests of this growing country, nor would it be wise public policy, to discontinue the use of either metal as money."

SILVER RESTORED.

The Republican majority in Congress differs from its Democratic predecessor, and redeems its platform pledge honestly and well.

The Republican silver bill, passed in the Senate on July 10 and in the House July 12, and approved by President Harrison July 14, fully restores the money uses of silver. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall purchase 4,500,000 ounces silver per month, at the market price, and issue in payment therefor legal-tender Treasury notes, redeemable in coin.

On the passage of this bill in each House, the affirmative votes were all cast by Republicans, and the negative votes were all cast by Democrats.

SILVER AT $1.20.

The rise in the price of silver, and of all agricultural products, followed immediately upon the passage of this bill. Silver is selling to-day at 26 cents an ounce more than on the day Cleveland left the White House, and wheat at 22½ cents more per bushel.

Thus was the Republican party faithful, and thus it is shown the Democratic party was false to its promises.

I append a table giving the value of the silver dollar at eleven different dates, both in London and New York:

Dates.	Significance of dates.	Price of silver in London.	Equivalent value of a fine ounce.	Price of a fine ounce in New York.	Commercial value of the silver in the silver dollar.
Feb. 28, 1878	Date of the passage of the Bland act.	55	$1.205	$1.195	$0.9325
Mar. 1, 1878	Day after passage of the Bland act.	54½	1.204	1.20	.9315
Mar. 22, 1878	Three weeks after passage of the Bland act.	54½	1.189	1.20	.9198
Mar. 1, 1879	One year after passage of the Bland act.	49½	1.085	1.085	.8903
May 19, 1888	Lowest price reached.	41½	.9124	.915	.7057
Mar. 4, 1889	Inauguration of President Harrison.	42½	.9333	.933	.7218
Dec. 1, 1889	Republican Congress met.	44½	.9727	.9635	.7523
July 14, 1890	Passage of the new silver law.	49½	1.0796	1.08	.865
July 15, 1890	Day after passage of new silver law.	50	1.096	1.10	.8477
Aug. 12, 1890	New silver law went into effect.	51½	1.1015	1.13	.8519
Aug. 20, 1890	About three weeks after the silver law went into effect.	54½	1.1947	1.180	.924

And so, Mr. Speaker, it was left to the Republican party in Congress to bring about this great reform. Again it has vindicated its claim to be always and at all times and in all places the party of the people.

Mr. PAYSON. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT].

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I earnestly hope that this bill will pass, for it follows a long line of legislation by which we have already forfeited about 50,000,000 acres; and this will take and restore to the people all that is left within our reach under the decisions of the Supreme Court, every acre that lies along the uncompleted roads. It will give to individual owners, actual settlers, lands that otherwise would go to syndicates and large holders. It will promote a policy which is excellent, reversing the land-grant policy that all favored thirty years ago and which nobody favors now. It will increase the small farm-holding and farm-owning population, who are the strength of the country; and as such a measure I most heartily support it.

The sweeping provision in the first section of the bill forfeits all the lands granted to aid in building railroads which lie along portions of those roads that have not been constructed. It cuts away probably 4,000,000 acres from the Northern Pacific road. It takes large amounts in California, New Mexico, Wisconsin, Mississippi, and other States; in all, about 8,000,000 acres, which will be restored to the public domain and will go to actual settlers on the public lands. It is a just measure of restitution and responds to the sentiment of the country; and this time in passing the bill we are sure that it will not be, as has often been the case heretofore, a bill merely passed by the House, to fail in the Senate and not become a law. The Senate conferees have agreed to it.

It is true that in some of the States, especially in some of the Southern States, where they have not sufficient railroads built, some are unwilling to see the land grants forfeited, and wish them left outstanding a little longer, that the people may get the roads which would not otherwise be built. This is a sentiment that twenty-five or thirty years ago pervaded a good part of the Northwest; but public opinion in this country has too plainly pronounced against any further aid to railroad-building by means of public-land grants. There is sufficient capital seeking investment in railways to build a road anywhere that it will have business to justify building.

In passing this bill to make an end of these land grants and restore them as far as possible to the public domain for actual settlers, the bill as now presented is wise in policy. It forfeits every acre which under the judgments or decisions of the Supreme Court can be forfeited. It does not confirm the title of any railroad company to any lands heretofore acquired, but cuts off their power of acquiring an equity in more lands by further building of roads through the land grants along the uncompleted portions of the roads. Congress has heretofore in the cases of twelve railroads, some of them great lines not completed according to law, passed acts forfeiting in all nearly fifty millions of acres. This bill will forfeit in a general way all that is left along uncompleted portions of railroads having land grants.

This land-grant legislation has largely occupied Congress for forty years, first in granting public lands to aid in building railroads and afterward in enacting legislation to recover from the roads the lands forfeited by not building according to the terms of the grants. It was once a favorite idea of all parties to promote the building of roads into unoccupied regions by land grants, and there have been built in this way about 15,000 miles of railway, and indirectly the building of about as much more has been promoted, and how many millions of acres have been thus granted away since 1850—from that time down to 1866, the last land grant—it is hard to tell. It was begun and long continued when our people were eager to extend the building of railroads and develop the country. For the last fifteen years Congress has been as intently engaged in forfeiting the unearned land grants of railroads not built. In this House we have passed many bills forfeiting land grants on the ground that the railroads for which the lands were granted were not constructed within the date named in the act granting the lands. I have voted for these bills, together with my associates on this floor, many times. Why have they not become law?

The Senate, since the decision of the Supreme Court in the Schulenberg case, has adhered to the policy of only forfeiting the lands opposite those parts of the railroad which were not completed at the time the bill was passed which declared the forfeiture. Many able jurists in the Senate and elsewhere have contended that the building of the road in good faith, even though they were unable to complete it within the time named, prevented the forfeiture of the grant so far as the road was built and in operation. Others have hesitated to join us in passing laws forfeiting land grants, as it might lead to distress to the settlers who would go on the forfeited lands only to be ousted and finally driven away by the decisions of the courts declaring the forfeitures invalid as to lands lying along the lines actually built, though built after the date named in the land-grant law.

There is a familiar instance of settlers disturbed and distressed in the Des Moines River Valley case, on which we have passed several bills of relief, where settlers, acting on what they believed to be the authority of the Government and pursuant to law, went upon lands which they lost after long and costly litigation. I must admit, strongly as I have been inclined to see these lands all forfeited and restored to the Government and the settlers, that the decisions of the courts have tended to show that we have not power to forfeit lands opposite railroads which had been actually constructed according to all the terms of the land grant, except the one condition that they did not get it done within the time named in the land-grant act.

But I was willing to go as far as possible, and therefore I have voted for bills forfeiting land grants in all cases where the roads were not built, and in nearly every case where, though they were built, they were not completed within the time specified in the original act. I was willing to try the question and pass the law, and then see if it was not good law. Many of these bills have failed though they have passed the House. Now, we have a bill which the Senate conferees have agreed to, and it will be not merely a bill passed by the House, but in a few days a law, and take all these lands described in the bill from the railroads and restore them to the public domain and the people. By trying to get too much in bills of this kind heretofore we have failed to get what was at the time within reach.

The House tried a general forfeiture bill on the Northern Pacific Railroad a few years ago, substituting it as an amendment for a Senate bill, which forfeited many millions of acres along that portion of the Northern Pacific not then built. The House substituted a general forfeiture extending back to Bismarck and taking the lands for many hundreds of miles along the line of the road actually built. Then that bill failed in the Senate. The Northern Pacific immediately went to building farther and has since secured a great quantity of these lands by the construction of the road through them and thus coming under the decisions of the Supreme Court. Had we promptly passed the Senate bill at that time three years ago we would have secured for the people all the lands along the line where the road had not yet been built.

We could then have passed separately a House bill for general forfeiture, and I endeavored at the time to have these measures separated and moved the substitution on the day of the final passage in the House, but ineffectually. I have been in favor of every measure to recover these public lands in recent years, for I believed the time had passed when it was necessary to give any aid from the public lands in building railroads and it was a wise policy to save them for settlers. The best system of land-holding for the general good is in small ownerships, and this is reached under our public-land system, limiting the purchaser or homesteader to enough for a moderate farm. But the railroads have disposed of their grants in many cases to syndicates and large holders, which is contrary to wise public policy.

The system of the subdivision of the holding of lands in moderate amounts increases the number of families living in homes which they own, of independent farmers, and this element is the stay of the Republic. The tendency of the time in every other kind of business than farming is to concentration, putting the direction and ownership in fewer hands and doing the world's work, trading, manufacturing, transportation, mining, by wholesale, in vast manufacturing establishments, enormous mercantile houses, combines of various kinds in which the larger are eating up or absorbing the smaller. Fortunately this tendency is checked or seems to be inconsistent with the fixed laws of nature's economy when we come to farming, which has proven unchangeable in its conditions and resisted all the influences that have overborne other industries in modern times.

The small farmer in the region where I live can do more with land, which with us is generally pretty high-priced compared to Eastern lands, than can a large landholder, who has to make a great investment for purchase. It has been our observation in Illinois where men purchased lands in large quantities, adding farm to farm, that the neighbors did not have very long to wait until it was all sold and distributed again, generally at forced sale and at very moderate prices. The large holdings which have been purchased by syndicates along the lines of the railroads in the far West are not desirable in the system of settling a new country. Let the lands go in quarter sections from the public domain to the settler and every 160 acres be owned as the independent home of a family, cultivating their own land.

Mr. PAYSON. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN].

Mr. HERMANN. Much anxiety, Mr. Speaker, is expressed by those who are opposed to the adoption of this conference report in behalf of the interests of settlers. Permit me to say to those gentlemen that if they were sincerely anxious to advance the interests of the railroad corporations they could not do them more substantial service than they are at the present time in asking for further delay upon this great and important legislation.

Already we have discovered most painfully, and to the lasting detriment of the progress of much of the West—the Northwest particularly—what delays in this House have already occasioned. Gentlemen have only to be reminded that pending the adjournment between the long and short sessions of the Fiftieth Congress over 2,000,000 acres of land of the Northern Pacific were earned absolutely and earned while we were doubting and dilly-dallying upon what course to pursue in this body. The settlers do not want further delays. The railroad corporations, it is natural to suppose, do want further time in order that they may go on and earn and finally obtain the balance of the magnificent grants made to them.

It is not so much a mere restoration, Mr. Speaker, of the 7,000,000 acres of land to the public domain that we are to consider; it is more than that. It is the confirmation of title to 100,000 homes of American citizens, most of them homeless people, who are to-day desirous of obtaining them and who have for many years been vainly endeavoring to obtain them. It means, sir, even more. It means the removal of a long-continued obstruction to the progress and development of the immense country embraced within these unearned grants. It means the establishing of schools, the opening of roadways, the reorganization of counties, the cheapening of present land prices, the populating and prospering of the best parts of the Union, a considerable portion of which is still largely uninhabited and a waste.

As one, Mr. Speaker, who represents a very large constituency of settlers and in whose State is located at least 2,000,000 acres of the land which is now involved, I say that it is the desire of these settlers, every one of them, that immediate action shall be taken by Congress, and further I say that their sympathies are in the line of the conference report.

In the two States of Oregon and Washington nearly 4,000,000 acres of the grants will be restored to the people. Long and loudly have we pleaded for this, and had our demands been earlier recognized this forfeiture would have embraced many millions of acres which have since been earned. Had Congress agreed even as late as three years past, the entire grant of the Cascade division of the Northern Pacific would have been restored, with its splendid timber, its rich minerals, and its fertile and extensive pasture lands. Those who pretended to be the most loyal friends of the settlers were, so far as the results were concerned, the most useful allies of the railroad corporations.

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating." It is results that count, and it is by this rule that the people have a right to judge of their representatives.

Now it is again asked that another delay be had and that this conference report be resubmitted to the conference committee with various instructions. Sir, if I am to judge this move by what I have observed here for six years past, I might infer that only delay and further disappointment for the long waiting people are intended. But whatever be the motive, whether good, bad, or indifferent, the result is the same: delay, uncertainty, and the retarding of our Western progress. I have referred to the efforts we have so long made for this forfeiture. Memorials of legislative bodies, of boards of trade, of municipal bodies, and long petitions have been presented. I unrolled a petition from my seat in this Chamber which contained upon it the actual signatures of three thousand people—residents, settlers, and business men along the unearned grant of the Northern Pacific—all asking for an early forfeiture.

But with all this we were doomed to defeat; Congress after Congress assembled and adjourned, only to repeat the failure, until the people become heartsick with promises and fair-sounding speeches. It seemed as if the people had no longer any power to wrest from the reluctant grasp of corporations the lands so clearly unearned by them. No legislation has been so dilatory and so reluctantly granted, and no delay so injurious and so far-reaching in its consequences to the people.

But now I am glad to think the hour of victory has arrived, and the country enjoys a like assurance. I hold in my hand numerous newspapers and letters from the region of country along the Columbia River and they all manifest a spirit of deep rejoicing upon the progress which this forfeiture measure has thus far reached. I select an extract from one journal, the Weekly Budget, of Lexington, Oregon, as a good illustration of the rejoicing of others. In double-lined lines it reads:

AT LAST!—NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT FORFEITED.—TIDINGS OF JOY.—HOMES FOR HOME-SEEKERS.—SUSPENSE ENDED.—ODD-NUMBERED SECTIONS TO BE THROWN OPEN.—JUSTICE FOR CLAIMANTS.—RIGHTS OF THE SETTLERS TO BE FULLY RECOGNIZED.—MORROW COUNTY TO THE FRONT.—THE BLIGHT OF "RAILROAD LAND" NO LONGER A BAR TO SETTLEMENT AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE BUNCHGRASS HILLS.

"The mills of the gods grind slowly." Congress is not one of the mills of the gods, but in the matter of railroad land forfeiture it has been very slow.

For years forfeiture has been promised at every session. Disappointment has again and again been the portion of the settlers. They bravely hoped for relief until hope was a mockery. Sullen despair took possession of them.

"Railroad land" was a blight and a curse.

It was not railroad land.

It was not Government land.

It was no man's land; for none could give and none could acquire title to it.

Forfeiture bills were the playthings of Congressional politicians. Buncombe forfeiture speeches were made to fool the settlers and catch suckers. Monster petitions from settlers accomplished nothing.

Delay.

Promises.

Delay.

At last the Fifty-first Congress took hold of the matter with an air of business. Forfeiture seemed probable, but settlers refused to expect it.

They had been disappointed too often.

But it is done.

THE
FORFEITED!

It is an actual fact.

It seems too good to be true.

The conference report passed the Senate last Tuesday.

News of the bare fact was received here last evening. No details are available at this moment, but there can be no doubt that it is all solid.

That settles it.

No more "railroad land."

No more prohibited odd sections.

No more uncertainty about ownership.

Uncle Sam can now give every man a title to his home.

The country can now, let us hope, be congratulated that at last the time has arrived when what little there is left of the immense grants from the public domain will be restored to the people. This Congress can adjourn, feeling that of all its legislation none will be hailed with a more heartfelt and grateful response from thousands and thousands of poor home-seekers than this important act in the interest of the people of the nation.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Has it relation to the previous question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No; it is simply this: Whether if this report be not adopted it would then be in order to move to instruct the conferees to have inserted section 7 of this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. At what period would a motion be in order to recommit?

The SPEAKER. At no period.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 10.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-eight members are present—a quorum.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Tellers.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the previous question is ordered.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Can I have tellers on that vote?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The question was put; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 21.

Mr. LACEY. Yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Eight gentlemen have arisen in support of the demand for the yeas and nays—not a sufficient number.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The other side was counted.

The SPEAKER. Fifty and more; not a sufficient number. The ayes have it, and the conference report is adopted.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted, and also moves that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. Without objection, the latter motion will be agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I object.

The question was taken on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 112, noes 17.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Tellers.

The question was taken on ordering tellers.

The SPEAKER. Eleven gentlemen have arisen in support of the demand for tellers—not a sufficient number; tellers are refused, and the ayes have it.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. No quorum. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should have made that point at the time the vote was taken.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I made the point at the time the Speaker announced the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not make it at the time the vote was taken, and it is now too late. The ayes have it, and the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table is agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DICKERSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4322) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Kentucky River and its tributaries by the Louisville, Covington and Cincinnati Railway Company, the Carrollton and Louisville Railroad Company, and the Westport, Carrollton and Covington Railway Company and their assigns. A bill identical with the Senate bill has been reported to the House.

Mr. HEMPHILL rose.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to present a conference report.

Mr. GROUT. I hope the gentleman will yield to me that I may make a request.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield in order that the gentleman may make a request.

Mr. GROUT. On behalf of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I wish to renew the request that time may be given for the presentation of certain District matters. As stated on yesterday, there are certain bills which ought by all means to be passed this session, and if we can have, say, three hours' time, or perhaps two hours and a half, we can dispose of a large number of them I am sure.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Can we dispose of the bill relative to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad?

Mr. GROUT. I expect we could not.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Then there had better be an extension of the time.

Mr. GROUT. Well, it seems to me a great deal better to ask for permission to do what we should be able to do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for what?

Mr. GROUT. I was about to state that the gentleman who objected on yesterday told me that he did so because he wanted that the Committee on the District of Columbia should have a day and wished to compel the Committee on Rules to give us a day. The committee, of course, would be very glad to have a day, but I had not supposed that we could get one. Conforming now to the gentleman's wishes, and also to the wishes of other gentlemen on the floor, one of whom just now prompts me, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the approval of the Journal, three hours be given to the consideration of such matters as the District Committee may present.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. You do not propose to except any bill, I understand.

Mr. GROUT. I do not expect that we shall call up any bills that will be objected to, unless the House should so order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, unless the Pennsylvania Railroad bill is excepted from the order, I object.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Speaker, whatever arrangement is made must not interfere with conference reports. I should object to any arrangement that would do that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I shall object unless I know that this committee will first call up the unfinished business which was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia and is now pending; I mean the bill relative to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, for the last four months not a bill relating to District affairs has passed this House. Everything has been blocked by one single measure, a measure which every member of the House knows can not be disposed of in a single day. Now, I want the House to understand the facts, and then the responsibility will rest upon them. There are nearly forty bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia upon the Calendar and unacted upon, some of which are of a very urgent character.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman, the Chair understands, asks consent only for those bills that are not objected to.

Mr. GROUT. That is all.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I shall object, Mr. Speaker, unless the bill to which I have referred, upon which the previous question is pending, shall be first taken up and passed. That bill has been kept back by the gentleman [Mr. GROUT] and his friends on the District of Columbia Committee for weeks and months.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, on the first two occasions when that bill was under consideration I called it up myself, and for the last two months I have been away. Gentlemen certainly ought not to complain of the action of the District Committee on that matter, since all other District business has been made to stand aside for it and four months have been given to the consideration of that one measure.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. That was through the fault of the gentleman and his friends on the committee, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, the Pennsylvania Railroad ought not to occupy all the time of the House.

Mr. GROUT. Then I will ask for an evening session from 8 to half past 11 to-morrow evening.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. That is pension night, and I shall object.

Mr. GROUT. Well, this evening, then.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The Clerk will read the conference report presented by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

ROCK CREEK PARK, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4) authorizing the establishing of a public park in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives, and agree to the same with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, as follows:

That a tract of land lying on both sides of Rock Creek, beginning at Klinge Ford Bridge and running northwardly, following the course of said creek, of a width not less at any point than 600 feet nor more than 1,200 feet, including the bed of the creek, of which not less than 200 feet shall be on either side of said creek, south of Broad Branch road and Blagden Mill road, and of such greater width north of said roads as the commissioners designated in this act may select, shall be secured, as hereinafter set out, and be perpetually dedicated and set apart as a public park or pleasure ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States, to be known by the name of Rock Creek Park: Provided, however, That the whole tract so to be selected and condemned under the provisions of this act shall not exceed 2,000 acres, nor the total cost thereof exceed the amount of money herein appropriated.

"Sec. 2. That the Chief Engineer of the United States Army, the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, and three citizens to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be, and they are hereby, created a commission to select the land for said park, of the quantity and within the limits aforesaid, and to have the same surveyed by the assistant to the said engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia in charge of public highways, which said assistant shall also act as executive officer to the said commission.

"Sec. 3. That the said commission shall cause to be made an accurate map of said Rock Creek Park, showing the location, quantity, and character of each parcel of private property to be taken for such purpose, with the names of the respective owners inscribed thereon, which map shall be filed and recorded in the public records of the District of Columbia, and from and after the date of filing said map the several tracts and parcels of land embraced in said Rock Creek Park shall be held as condemned for public uses, and the title thereof vested in the United States, subject to the payment of just compensation, to be determined by said commission and approved by the President of the United States: Provided, That such compensation be accepted by the owner or owners of the several parcels of land.

"That if the said commission shall be unable by agreement with the respective owners to purchase all of the land so selected and condemned within thirty days after such condemnation at the price approved by the President of the United States, it shall, at the expiration of such period of thirty days, make application to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, by petition, at a general or special term, for an assessment of the value of such land as it has been unable to purchase.

"Said petition shall contain a particular description of the property selected and condemned, with the name of the owner or owners thereof, if known, and their residences, as far as the same may be ascertained, together with a copy of the recorded map of the park; and the said court is hereby authorized and required, upon such application, without delay, to notify the owners and occupants of the land, if known, by personal service, and if unknown by service by publication, and to ascertain and assess the value of the land so selected and condemned by appointing three competent and disinterested commissioners to appraise the value or values thereof, and to return the appraisal to the court; and when the value or values of such land are thus ascertained, and the President of the United States shall decide the same to be reasonable, said value or values shall be paid to the owner or owners, and the United States shall be deemed to have a valid title to said land; and if in any case the owner or owners of any portion of said land shall refuse or neglect, after the appraisal of the cash value of said lands and improvements, to demand or receive the same from said court, upon depositing the appraised value in said court to the credit of such owner or owners, respectively, the fee-simple shall in like manner be vested in the United States.

"Sec. 4. That said court may direct the time and manner in which possession of the property condemned shall be taken or delivered, and may, if necessary, enforce any order or issue any process for giving possession.

"Sec. 5. That no delay in making an assessment of compensation, or in taking possession, shall be occasioned by any doubt which may arise as to the ownership of the property, or any part thereof, or as to the interests of the respective owners. In such cases the court shall require a deposit of the money allowed as compensation for the whole property or the part in dispute. In all cases as soon as the said commission shall have paid the compensation assessed or secured its payment by a deposit of money under the order of the court, possession of the property may be taken. All proceedings hereunder shall be in the name of the United States of America and managed by the commission.

"Sec. 6. That the commission having ascertained the cost of the land, including expenses, shall assess such proportion of such cost and expenses upon the lands, lots, and blocks situated in the District of Columbia, specially benefited by reason of the location and improvement of said park, as nearly as may be, in proportion to the benefits resulting to such real estate.

"If said commission shall find that the real estate in said District directly benefited by reason of the location of the park is not benefited to the full extent of the estimated cost and expenses, then they shall assess each tract or parcel of land specially benefited to the extent of such benefits as they shall deem the said real estate specially benefited. The commission shall give at least ten days' notice, in one daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, of the time and place of their meeting for the purpose of making such assessment and may adjourn from time to time till the same be completed. In making the assessment the real estate benefited shall be assessed by the description as appears of record in the District on the day of the first meeting; but no error in description shall vitiate the assessment: Provided, That the premises are described with substantial accuracy. The commission shall estimate the value of the different parcels of real estate benefited as aforesaid and the amount assessed against each tract or parcel, and enter all in an assessment book. All persons interested may appear and be heard. When the assessment book is completed it shall be signed by the commission or a majority (which majority shall have power always to act), and be filed in the office of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. The commission shall apply to the court for a confirmation of said assessment, giving at least ten days' notice of the time thereof by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, which notice shall state in general terms the subject and the object of the application.

"The said court shall have power, after said notice shall have been duly given, to hear and determine all matters connected with said assessment; and may revise, correct, amend, and confirm said assessment, in whole or in part, or order a new assessment, in whole or in part, with or without further notice or on such notice as it shall prescribe; but no order for a new assessment in part, or any partial adverse action, shall hinder or delay confirmation of the residue or collection of the assessment thereon. Confirmation of any part of the assessment shall make the same a lien on the real estate assessed.

"The assessment, when confirmed shall be divided into four equal installments and may be paid by any party interested in full or in one, two, three, and four years, on or before which times all shall be payable, with 6 per cent. annual interest on all deferred payments. All payments shall be made to the Treasurer of the United States, who shall keep the account as a separate fund. The orders of the court shall be conclusive evidence of the regularity of all previous proceedings necessary to the validity thereof, and of all matters recited in said orders. The clerk of said court shall keep a record of all proceedings in regard to said assessment and confirmation. The commission shall furnish the said clerk with a duplicate of its assessment book, and in both shall be entered any change made or ordered by the court as to any real estate. Such book filed with the clerk, when completed and certified, shall be prima facie evidence of all facts recited therein. In case assessments are not paid as aforesaid the book of assessments, certified by the clerk of the court, shall be delivered to the officer charged by law with the duty of collecting delinquent taxes in the District of Columbia, who shall proceed to collect the same as delinquent real-estate taxes are collected. No sale for any installment of assessment shall discharge the real estate from any subsequent installment; and proceedings for subsequent installments shall be as if no default had been made in prior ones.

"All money so collected may be paid by the Treasurer, on the order of the commission, to any persons entitled thereto as compensation for land or services. Such order on the Treasurer shall be signed by a majority of the commission and shall specify fully the purpose for which it is drawn. If the proceeds of assessment exceed the cost of the park the excess shall be used in its improvement, under the direction of the officers named in section 8, if such excess shall not exceed the amount of $10,000. If it shall exceed that amount that part above $10,000 shall be refunded ratably. Public officers performing any duty hereunder shall be allowed such fees and compensation as they would be entitled to in like cases of collecting taxes. The civilian members of the commission shall be allowed $10 per day each for each day of actual service. Deeds made to purchasers at sales for delinquent assessments hereunder shall be prima facie evidence of the right of the purchaser, and any one claiming under him, that the real estate was subject to assessment and directly benefited, and that the assessment was regularly made, that the assessment was not paid, that due advertisement had been made, that the grantee in the deed was the purchaser or assignee of the purchaser, and that the sale was conducted legally. "Any judgment for the sale of any real estate for unpaid assessments shall be conclusive evidence of its regularity and validity in all collateral proceedings except when the assessment was actually paid, and the judgment shall estop all persons from raising any objection thereto, or to any sale or deed based thereon which existed at the date of its rendition and could have been presented as a defense to the application for such judgment.

"To pay the expenses of inquiry, survey, assessment, cost of lands taken, and all other necessary expenses incidental thereto, the sum of $1,200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That one-half of said sum of $1,200,000, or so much thereof as may be expended, shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in four equal annual installments, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum upon the deferred payments: And provided further, That one-half of the sum which shall be annually appropriated and expended for the maintenance and improvement of said lands as a public park shall be charged against and paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in the manner now provided by law in respect to other appropriations for the District of Columbia, and the other half shall be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States.

"Sec. 7. That the public park authorized and established by this act shall be under the joint control of the commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable, to lay out and prepare roadways and bridge paths, to be used for driving and for horseback riding, respectively, and footways for pedestrians; and whose duty it shall also be to make and publish such regulations as they deem necessary or proper for the care and management of the same. Such regulations shall provide for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, animals, or curiosities within said park, and their retention in their natural condition, as nearly as possible."

LOUIS E. ATKINSON,
JNO. J. HEMPHILL,
Managers on the part of the House.
JNO. J. INGALLS,
ANTHONY HIGGINS,
ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House submit the following explanation of the report of the committee of conference on Senate bill No. 4, authorizing the establishing of a public park in the District of Columbia:

The Senate conferees agreed to recede from the disagreement of the Senate to the amendments of the House and to report a substitute containing practically all the provisions of the bill as it passed the House.

It became necessary to prepare a substitute because of the many verbal and other amendments that had to be adopted to make the bill as amended by the House complete and congruous.

The first amendment adopted by the House provided that the park south of Broad Branch road and Blagden Mill road should be not less than 1,200 feet in width, including the bed of the creek, "of which not less than 300 feet should be on either side of said creek, nor less than 600 feet on either side of said creek."

This was manifestly a mistake, and the committee of conference adopted as a substitute for this a provision that the width of that portion of the park should not be more than 1,200 feet nor less than 600 feet, of which not less than 200 feet should be on either side of said creek.

That makes the provision clear and carries out the intention of the House as the committee understood it.

The second amendment relates to the commission.

As the bill passed the House two commissions were provided for, one by section 2 of the original bill and one by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. PAYSON; and the duties imposed upon these two commissions were conflicting. The committee has provided for a commission of five persons and placed upon it all the duties laid upon the two commissions by the House bill as amended.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. PAYSON, and adopted by the House made necessary a change in the plan of condemning and paying for the property selected by the commission.

Sections 3 and 4 of the House bill, which set out the mode of condemnation, were stricken out by the committee of conference, and section 3 of the substitute bill was inserted in their stead.

In making these changes we have adopted the plan followed by the House for the condemnation of the zoological park as near as practicable.

Section 6 of the substitute provides for the assessment of the value of the land taken upon the property directly benefited.

It is the same provision as was contained in section 7 of the bill as it passed the House except as to some verbal amendments and one relating to the payment of persons whose lands may be taken.

The committee were satisfied that the Government could not take the private property of the citizen without paying him for it, and as the House had provided that the benefits assessed upon the property directly benefited should be paid in one, two, three, and four years, and as the District appropriation bill, as agreed on in conference, exceeds the revenues of the District for this fiscal year, there seemed to be no alternative but to allow the District to borrow from the General Government temporarily that portion of expense required of the District, and that the same be paid in equal annual installments with interest at 3 per cent.

This plan has been agreed on by the committee and made a part of the substitute bill.

The numerous verbal amendments need not be specified in detail, as they do not alter the bill in any material way.

LOUIS E. ATKINSON,
JOHN J. HEMPHILL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get some information from the gentleman [Mr. HEMPHILL] who has presented this report before the vote is taken. I gather from the statement attached to this conference report that it will be necessary, in case this project goes through, for the District of Columbia to borrow temporarily from the General Government a certain amount of money to pay for the property to be condemned for the purposes of this park. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state to the gentleman that at the time this report was prepared we were in the last fiscal year, and we put that provision in it because the appropriation seemed to carry all the money that was then in the District treasury.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Then am I correct in understanding the gentleman to say that it will not be necessary for the District to borrow money for this purpose?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, I can not say that it will not be necessary during this fiscal year. We have provided in the bill that the District may borrow the money at 3 per cent.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. That is what I am trying to get at, whether if this park is established it necessitates the District making a loan and paying for the land.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It does.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. To what extent?

Mr. HEMPHILL. To the extent of one-half the amount.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. What is the amount?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Twelve hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Then if this bill becomes a law it will be necessary for the District of Columbia to borrow $600,000 to pay for this land.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Does the gentleman think the District ought to do that?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do; and the House has practically agreed to that already by a large vote. I will say to the gentleman that the value of the improvement to adjacent property is to be assessed upon that property, which assessment the bill passed by the House allows the owners of the property to pay in four annual installments. Until the revenue comes in from the assessments upon the benefited property there must be a borrowing by the District.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. And the General Government, which forces this park upon people of the District, generously compels them to pay interest meanwhile.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It may be generous or not, as the gentleman may look at it.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I do not think it is.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, that has already been agreed upon.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I opposed the proposition when it was up before.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] whether the conference committee took into consideration the necessity or propriety of increasing the rate of taxation in this District, so that this park may be established and the legitimate expenses of the District in other directions may be borne.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That matter was in a general way discussed, but the conference committee, I would suppose, had no authority to provide for levying any additional tax; such levy must be made by separate action.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that when a conference committee submits a report which necessitates an expenditure of $1,200,000 and a large expenditure in perpetuity, the committee could at least have submitted a proposition to raise the necessary funds: first, by borrowing (which has been provided for) and, secondly, by levying a tax to pay for this property which you think it wise to buy.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, Mr. Speaker, the increase that has taken place in the value of property in this District on account of the street railroads and various other improvements will certainly bring about the collection of a very large additional revenue, though the rate of assessment may remain the same. But, of course, I can not figure on that until the returns come in.

Mr. CANNON. I have been hearing statements of that kind for a great many years; but somehow the expenditures for one thing and another seem to increase a little faster than the revenues, notwithstanding the growth and improvement of the city.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I will join the gentleman in trying to regulate that matter by any bill which may come up here.

Mr. CANNON. I would be very glad if this report could be sent back to the conference committee, so that between now and next December they may ascertain, first (and they can tell by that time), what the revenues ought to be for this fiscal year; secondly, if those revenues should not be sufficient to purchase this park or the District's share of it, then to ascertain to what extent taxation should be increased for the purpose of meeting this expenditure. It seems to me that in the closing days of this session of Congress, with the revenues of the District for the fiscal year unascertained, it would be wise either to let this conference report go over without final action or to vote the report down and send the matter back to the conference committee, that fuller inquiry may be made and the result embodied in a report at the beginning of the next session.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. In addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I would like to suggest that this conference committee be directed to report some plan by which the Government of the United States can be assured of the repayment of this money.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Why, under this bill there is no doubt in the world in regard to that; it is just as clear as the nose on a man's face.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. What sort of security has the Government in that respect?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It has the right to levy special assessments upon the adjoining property in proportion to the benefit of this improvement, and not only adjoining property, but all property directly benefited.

Mr. HOPKINS. And does not the expense so levied become a lien on the property?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, yes; and it bears interest. Under this bill we simply provide for a temporary loan as to a large part of the expense for the purpose of getting control of this property at once, instead of waiting until it shall be more valuable.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Do you regard it as a wise thing for the Government to enter into the business of lending money to cities, corporations, or anybody else?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, I do not say it is wise for the Government to enter into any such business; but I do say that when the Government undertakes to govern the Capital of the nation and to legislate for it through Congress and undertakes to bear half the expenses of the government of the city, it is wise and proper to make such financial arrangements as will save the people expense.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. If the assessments on the adjacent property do not cover this expense, then there is no other provision at all for meeting it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir; the Government stands whatever part of the expense may not be recovered from the property-owners; but from the best information I can gather (of course I can not tell what is going to be ascertained as the value of the property) the amount of actual expense to the Government under this bill will be comparatively small. And some gentlemen say it will be nothing. Of course I simply give my opinion, founded upon the best information I can gather.

Mr. HOPKINS. It must be something.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There have been instances in this country where every cent of the expense of a park of this kind has been assessed on the adjoining property and it was thought a wise thing.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Has that ever happened except in a single instance in Chicago?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can cite that one case of my own knowledge.

Mr. ADAMS. There were three instances in Chicago.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. This bill as now reported provides, I understand, for a loan by the Government to the District; and as security for that loan there is the contingency that money may be obtained by assessments levied upon the property which may be benefited, property adjoining or elsewhere. I understand the gentleman from South Carolina to say that there is no other contingency under which repayment of this loan may be assured; and he calls this a slight expense. Now I want to ask the gentleman this question: Does he not know that every Democratic newspaper will charge this amount of $1,200,000 to the sum total of appropriations made by Congress this year? Does he not know that the orators of his party will flaunt this from every stump as a part of the "wasteful extravagance of a Republican Congress?"

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, if any Democratic orator or Democratic newspaper chooses to make capital out of this, that is something they have a right to do, as a matter of course. But I will state here, and I will state anywhere, that I think it a wise and judicious expenditure, and in so far as my knowledge goes of the business of the District of Columbia I have never known money spent which, in my judgment, will be of more benefit to the people of the country and of the District than this. I believe it will save hundreds of thousands of dollars and give many benefits in addition. That is my honest conviction.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Then I am authorized to quote that in opposition to such statements of Democratic orators or newspapers?

Mr. HEMPHILL. You are, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HILL. Let me ask the gentleman a question. If I remember the reading of the report, the bill provides in substance, that upon making a map or plat of the proposed park and filing it of record the title shall pass to the United States.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Provided the money is paid.

Mr. HILL. Well, it says "subject to the payment of compensation as hereinafter provided."

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir; but the money must be paid before the title passes. Provision is made that when the hands of the Government is laid on the property it shall remain in status quo until the money is paid.

Mr. HILL. You do not understand, then, that it passes title before the compensation is made?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Not at all. On the contrary, we considered that fully, and were satisfied that we could not appropriate any man's property until he was paid for it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Let me ask the gentleman whether the people who are to pay the assessment levied upon their property, by the supposed increase of value which will accrue from this park, are in favor of the passage of the bill and are consenting to the proposition to lay out a park to take possession of a portion of their property.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I do not know exactly who the owners of the property will be. Some are in favor of the park provided it is located in one place and some are in favor of it at another place; but the majority have expressed no decided conviction, I think.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. They have not been here protesting against it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. And the plan has been made public for some time?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, yes; it has been a matter of consideration for a long time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the report was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a division.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let me state this, Mr. Speaker: The Senate has practically agreed to the House bill except that the form of the bill has been necessarily changed to meet the action of the House itself. Gentlemen will remember the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois which was inserted in the bill and we were obliged to shape the bill so as to make it symmetrical in order to conform to that action. Now, I think the best thing to do is to adopt this provision as we have got it. It is about the first time that the Senate has agreed to anything we have done here, and we had better take advantage of it and make the most of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the gentleman that the House is dividing.

Mr. McADOO. Let me ask the gentleman from South Carolina this question: Whether the Senate have changed the boundaries provided in the House bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Practically not at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again remind gentlemen that the House is dividing, and the question is on the adoption of the report, on which the gentleman from Indiana demands a division.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes 90, noes 41.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. KERR, of Iowa, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 123, nays 65, not voting 137; as follows:

Mr. HOUK with Mr. ENLOE, on this vote.
Mr. BARTINE. I am announced as being paired with the gentleman from Illinois. That pair refers only to the tariff bill.
Mr. McKENNA. I am announced as paired with my colleague, Mr. CLUNIE. In accordance with an understanding between us in regard to such bills, I have voted.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill (H. R. 8943) to provide for the establishment of a port of delivery at Peoria, Ill.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 728) in recognition of the merits and services of Chief Engineer George Wallace Melville, United States Navy, and the other officers and men of the Jeannette Arctic expedition;

A bill (S. 1531) for the relief of the estate of John Ericsson;

A bill (S. 3441) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in the District of Columbia ;"

A bill (S. 3482) to provide for a term of the circuit and district court at Littleton, N. H. ;

A bill (S. 4354) to refer to the Court of Claims certain claims of the Shawnee and Delaware Indians and the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 4403) to provide an American register for the steamer Joseph Oteri, Jr., of New Orleans, La.

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3716) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army and to regulate promotions therein, asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. COCKRELL conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate requested the House to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 11773) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary B. Cushing.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11459) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for prior years, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, disagreed to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL conferees on the part of the Senate.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR CEMETERY PURPOSES.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is recognized.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged question of a higher order than a conference report, a question reflecting upon the integrity of an officer of this House. I rise to present a resolution directing an investigation of charges against the Postmaster of this House for peculation in office. I desire to have the resolution read, and to address myself to the Chair on the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has been recognized by the recent occupant of the chair to present a report which is also a privileged one.

Mr. ENLOE. I understand that anything which affects the dignity or integrity of the House or its officers is a matter of higher privilege than an ordinary conference report, and I desire to present this resolution so that it may be acted upon by the House. I shall take very little time in the presentation of it.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I premise the inquiry by the statement that I hold in my hand a report from a conference committee, and I desire to inquire whether under the rules of the House the report of a conference committee is not of a higher privilege than the question presented by the gentleman from Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I do not make this inquiry with a view to retarding any progress that he desires to make; but if, in a parliamentary way, this matter which I hold in my hand is of a higher privilege, then I desire to present it for consideration.

Mr. ENLOE. I want to address the Chair upon that point, Mr. Speaker, as to whether or not this is a question of higher privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no question but that the conference report is superior. The gentleman's matter will come in at the proper time.

Mr. ENLOE. I understand the Chair to rule that a resolution to investigate an officer of the House, bringing charges respecting his integrity, is not a matter of higher privilege than a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The rule is specific upon that point.

Mr. ENLOE. I will be very glad to have the rule read.

Mr. PAYSON. I hold in my hand Rule XXIX, which covers the question. I will ask the Clerk to read it for the information of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I admit that that is a rule of the House, but the order of precedence in which questions of privilege shall be considered is entirely a different matter; and when I rise to present a question of privilege and some other gentlemen rise to present questions of privilege, it becomes the duty of the Chair to decide which question of privilege has precedence in the House. Now I desire to call the attention of the Chair to Rule IX, which says:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, its dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings.

The SPEAKER. There is no difficulty about this matter. After the conference report is disposed of anything else will be in order.

Mr. ENLOE. I understand that, Mr. Speaker, but I prefer to have this disposed of now. And I think under the rule I am entitled to have it disposed of now.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly the theory on which the rule with reference to conference reports was framed is that a conference report is necessary in order to consummate action of the two Houses. That was the reason why it was given a higher preference.

Mr. ENLOE. Do I understand the Chair to say that a conference report is a question of higher privilege than any other question of privilege that can be raised?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the Speaker of the last House [Mr. CARRISLE] decided that a conference report had precedence even over an election case.

Mr. ENLOE. Then I submit to the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Also precedence over a motion to adjourn; and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] will not undertake to say that his resolution would have precedence over a motion to adjourn, unless the motion was made for a dilatory purpose.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I was recognized to present a report from the Special Committee on the Accounts of the Sergeant-at-Arms, which had leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. Yes, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has a conference report; and that has precedence over the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8247) to authorize entry of the public lands by incorporated cities and towns for cemetery and park purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to said bill and agree to the following in the nature of a substitute: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That incorporated cities and towns shall have the right, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, to purchase for cemetery and park purposes not exceeding one quarter-section of public lands not reserved for public use, such lands to be within 3 miles of such cities or towns: Provided, That when such city or town is situated within a mining district, the land proposed to be taken under this act shall be considered as mineral lands, and patent to such land shall not authorize such city or town to extract mineral therefrom, but all such mineral shall be reserved to the United States, and such reservation shall be entered in such patent."

The statement submitted by the House conferees is as follows:

The Senate amendment, which the conference report agrees to, changes the House bill in this, by providing that the Secretary of the Interior shall make rules and regulations as to the acquiring of the lands for cemetery and park purposes; and also adds the provision as to mineral lands, reserving such mineral to the United States, to prevent prospecting therefor in the cemeteries or parks acquired, without further action by Congress.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, the statement which the Clerk has just read explains as well as I can do it, without more extended remarks, the operation of the Senate amendment. The House met this exigency under existing law, and there was no method by which, in the neighborhood of public lands, any town or city could secure on the public lands a piece of ground for cemetery or park purposes. In order to reach that difficulty the House bill was passed, in substance giving them the right. The Senate has amended it by providing that any acquisition of land for this purpose shall be under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and further, that if any land taken for cemetery purposes shall ultimately turn out to be mineral in character, to prohibit prospecting for any minerals thereon, except on further action of Congress. This is a very simple provision, but it meets a want of the extreme Northwest that can only be met by legislation of this kind, and therefore I ask the adoption of the conference report. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETURN OF HOUSE BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request of the Senate; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, September 24, 1890.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate House bill 11773, granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary B. Cushing.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 64) to limit the time to six years within which suits may be brought against accounting officers and the sureties on their official bonds, Mr. CASWELL, Mr. MCCORMICK, and Mr. HOLMAN.

The following conferees were also announced on the bill (H. R. 789) opening to settlement a portion of the Fort Randall military reservation in South Dakota: Mr. PAYSON, Mr. TURNER of Kansas, and Mr. HOLMAN.

SALLIE DOUGLASS HARTRANFT.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the conference report which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1840) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie Douglass Hartranft, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its amendment to the said bill, and agree to the same.

E. N. MORRILL,

S. A. CRAIG,

C. LEWIS,

Managers on the part of the House.

C. K. DAVIS,

P. SAWYER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The Senate passed the bill (S. 1840) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie Douglass Hartranft, at the rate of $100 per month. In the House the bill was amended making the rate $50 per month. The effect of the report of the conference is to leave the rate of pension as fixed by the Senate.

E. N. MORRILL,

S. A. CRAIG.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it does not seem that the House has gained anything. There is no concession at all on the part of the Senate as shown by this report; and it seems to me when a conference is granted by the House, that the committee on the part of the House at least should require some concession on the part of the Senate. I hope the report of the committee of conference will not be adopted. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SETTLERS ON NORTHERN PACIFIC INDEMNITY LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I have another conference report which I now present.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5939) for the relief of settlers on Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"That those persons who, after the 15th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1887, and before the 1st day of January, in the year 1889, settled upon, improved, and made final proof on lands in the so-called second indemnity belt of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company's grant under the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States, or their heirs, may transfer their said entries from said tracts to such other vacant surveyed Government land in compact form and in legal subdivisions, subject to entry under the homestead and pre-emption laws, as they may select, and receive final certificates and receipts therefor, in lieu of the tracts proved upon in said belt by the respective claimants: Provided, That such transfer of entry shall be made and completed within twelve months from the date of the passage of this act, and be so made in person by the claimant, or in case of death, by his legal representative, and without the intervention of agent or attorney.

"Sec. 2. That all persons possessing the requisite qualifications under the pre-emption or homestead laws, who in good faith settled upon and improved land in said second indemnity belt, having made filing or entry of the same, and for any reason, other than voluntary abandonment, failed to make proof thereon, may, in lieu thereof, within one year after the passage of this act, transfer their claims to any vacant surveyed Government land subject to entry under the homestead or pre-emption laws, and make proof therefor as in other cases provided; and in making such proof credit shall be given for the period of their bona fide residence and amount of their improvements upon their respective claims in the said indemnity belt, the same as if made upon the tract to which the transfer is made: Provided, That no final entry shall be permitted, except upon proof of continuous residence upon the land, the subject of such new entry, for a period of not less than three months prior thereto. Payment for said final selection shall be made as under existing laws. The provisions of this act shall be carried into effect under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

P. B. PLUMB,

J. H. BERRY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PAYSON. To many members this conference report is one of no very great importance in a general way, but it is of interest to four hundred settlers who went upon lands in Northern Minnesota which are embraced within what is commonly known as the second indemnity belt of that railroad grant. In the act of Congress giving the grant of land to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company there was a provision that land on either side of the granted land 5 miles in width should be reserved out of which any losses that the company might sustain by reason of legislation might be made good. Subsequently Congress passed another act providing for a second indemnity belt in Wisconsin and Minnesota of 5 miles in width. Some time ago a question was raised in the Interior Department as to whether or not in the two legislations in reference to this belt there was a restriction on the first indemnity belt that I have named, and the Secretary of the Interior decided at that time that under existing law the railroad company had no right to enter land in what is known as the second indemnity belt. Thereupon the people who are the beneficiaries in this bill, settled under the general land law, went upon various quarter-sections in the second indemnity belt and made their homesteads.

Subsequently the question was reviewed in the Interior Department, and the last decision, and beyond doubt the accurate one, is that the railroad company are entitled to make selection of indemnity lands in the second as well as the first indemnity limit, and that the withdrawal of that indemnity land was a legal withdrawal. Thus these settlers were deprived, by reason of the second decision overruling the first, of their right under the settlement law, and this bill only allows those who made settlement upon the lands in good faith and were qualified so to do to make settlement upon other lands within a year, the time fixed in the bill, and to be allowed upon those other lands the benefit of the length of time that they resided as settlers upon the land upon which it has been decided that they had no right to make entry. That is all there is of the bill. The conferees are unanimous in recommending its passage. Nobody is benefited, nor does the Government lose anything by this operation. I ask that the report be adopted.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARGES AGAINST THE POSTMASTER OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question, and I ask to have read the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that James L. Wheat, Postmaster of the House of Representatives, whose duty it is under the law to let the contract for carrying the mail of the House, did enter into a private agreement with one Samuel Culbertson, by which said Wheat did agree to let said contract to said Culbertson for the sum of $5,000 per annum on condition that the said Culbertson should pay to him, the said Wheat, the sum of $150 per month out of the money to be received by the said Culbertson from the Government for the said service; and

Whereas it is alleged that the said James L. Wheat did receive the said sum of $150 per month for five months or more from the said Culbertson under said unlawful agreement; Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be and is hereby directed to investigate the said charges against the said James L. Wheat, and such other matters as pertain to his administration of the post-office of the House of Representatives, and the said committee is hereby empowered to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths for the purposes of this investigation. The said committee is hereby directed to report the facts to the House at the earliest date possible, together with such recommendations as they may deem advisable in the premises.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the committee named in the resolution is not the one that usually makes such investigations.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am of opinion that there is nothing in the organization of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads that could send a resolution of that character to that committee unless it were sent there by special direction of the House.

Mr. CASWELL. But the House has a right to send the resolution to any committee, and I suppose there will be no objection to sending this to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, if that resolution is to be adopted I would like to have it amended so as to let the committee inquire into the action of the Democratic Postmaster of the last House on the same subject. I move to so amend the resolution.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. ENLOE. In reference to the suggestion of the Chair as to the committee which is directed by the resolution to make this investigation, I will state that my reason for naming that committee was that I thought the subject to be investigated came more within the line of their jurisdiction than within that of any other committee; and as the Chair, in the selection of the special committee to make investigation of the charges against the Commissioner of Pensions thought that the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions would furnish the best material, so I thought there might be matters connected with this investigation which the members of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads would probably know more about than the members of any other committee of the House. I selected the committee for that reason, and, as I understand, it is perfectly competent to the House to instruct any committee to make this investigation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair in making its suggestion had in mind the fact that such investigations have usually been made by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the resolution—

Mr. ENLOE. I have not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words, in the first place, on the subject of the resolution before we come to the question of amending it, although I have no desire to prevent any amendment of the resolution which will give us any light upon this subject. My information is that this Postmaster when he went into office awarded the contract for carrying the mail, as it was his duty to do under the law, and he awarded it to this man Culbertson for the sum of $5,000 per annum, which is the full amount appropriated.

The money is appropriated, I believe, in the usual language, "the sum of $5,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary;" but of course the law contemplates that the Postmaster shall let the contract on as favorable terms to the Government as possible. It seems, however, that this Postmaster thought this was a perquisite of his office, and therefore he entered into an agreement with Culbertson by which the latter agreed to return to Mr. Wheat $150 per month of the money which the Government paid him for this service. That was the condition of his getting the contract. It was clearly a case of bargain between them—peculation in office, it seems to me—certainly a violation of law. I do not think it can be said that a man who is fit to be Postmaster of the House of Representatives could be ignorant that he was violating the law when he entered into such contract as that. I do not think the facts as alleged in the resolution are denied. I understand that the Postmaster received for five months $150 per month, amounting to the sum of $750, but that the sixth month the contractor was a little pressed for money, and the Postmaster agreed to let him hold it that month and pay it the next month.

And when the next month's pay was due to the contractor from the Government for this service there was $300 due to Mr. Wheat. The fact then, it seems, came to the knowledge of other persons than the contractor and the Postmaster. The Clerk of the House [Mr. McPherson] having learned that some such agreement existed, refused to issue the check to the contractor. And so the contractor is to-day standing in the attitude of owing Mr. Wheat on that contract $300 out of his monthly allowance of $416.66. Mr. Wheat, the Postmaster, has received $750, which, as I understand, was taken by him and paid into the Treasury and credited to the miscellaneous or conscience fund. This sum of $416.66 for one month's service has never been drawn from the Treasury; and there is perhaps no way in which it can be drawn under the circumstances except by an appropriation to pay the contractor.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will allow me to inquire whether this contract does not undergo the supervision and approval of the Committee on Accounts of the House.

Mr. ENLOE. That possibly may be so; but that does not justify any speculation on the part of the officer.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not undertaking to justify anything; I am speaking with regard to the appropriate reference of this resolution. My point is that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has nothing to do with the question of the administration of the postal affairs of this House; that the matter belongs to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. ENLOE. It is not material to me, I will say to the gentleman, to what committee this matter shall go. If the Committee on Accounts is the proper committee, very well; I have no objection to sending the matter to any proper committee of the House for investigation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to say that the question now pending is not the question of reference. If it were, then we could properly consider whether under the rules the matter should go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads or to the Committee on Accounts. But this resolution instructs a committee of the House to make an investigation—

Mr. ENLOE. And indicates the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And the rules do not prescribe what committee shall be required to make the investigation. It is in order to direct the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to make the investigation, although upon a proposition for reference the subject might be referred to a different committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. Allow me to make one statement in explanation of the position I have taken. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads embraces fifteen members. It is with great difficulty at this stage of the session, with business as it is, and when gentlemen are watching their measures here, to get a quorum of the committee together. The Committee on Accounts, to which I claim this resolution should properly be referred, is a smaller committee and can be much more easily convened.

Mr. ENLOE. I recognize the difficulty of which the gentlemen speak—

The SPEAKER. All that question is at the disposal of the House.

Mr. ENLOE. Yes; and I will say that I propose to modify my resolution so as to send this investigation to the Committee on Accounts for the very reason that the gentleman suggests, and which I fully recognize, because it is difficult to get any of the larger committees together at this stage of the session, and I think this matter should receive prompt attention.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me a question?

Mr. ENLOE. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Has the gentleman any objection to having this resolution modified or amended so as to include an inquiry into the practices of the Postmaster of the House during the last Congress?

Mr. ENLOE. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, if there is any gentleman here who is prepared to charge and has evidence showing that there is anything to investigate in regard to that matter, it would be all right. So far as I am concerned, I want the resolution broad enough to secure a thorough investigation of the management of that office, and I do not care to limit it.

Mr. HOPKINS. My reason for making the suggestion is this: I understand that this contract which the gentleman claims is an unlawful one is a contract which came down from the Postmaster of the House in the last Congress, and that if there is anything wrong in it, it is something that was inherited from the gentleman who presided over the House post-office in the preceding Congress.

Mr. ENLOE. That is a question for the committee to determine.

Mr. HOPKINS. The resolution as offered is not broad enough to cover that.

Mr. ENLOE. If it is charged that there was any such agreement between the late Postmaster and the contractor as is alleged in the present instance, then I admit it would be a proper subject of investigation; but the contract as it stood between the contractor and the predecessor of Mr. Wheat has not, as I understand, been impeached. There is nobody here making any allegation of that character against the administration of the office by Mr. Dalton. If there is anybody here who has any evidence to adduce showing that that matter ought to come within the scope of this investigation, I am not the man who would undertake to prevent the investigation of a Democratic official. I believe that every member on this floor will agree with me that if there is any office about this Capitol or under the control of this House the administration of which has not been honestly conducted, every particular in regard to the matter that can be ascertained ought to be ascertained and the information furnished to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask my friend whether he does not think that to include in this matter the administration of the Postmaster of a former House would be likely to result in the delay of this particular investigation, and whether this is not a matter in which the present House is directly concerned.

Mr. ENLOE. I will make this reply to the gentleman: It seems to me that if the former administration of our post-office is to be investigated the gentleman who may have information showing that it needs investigation is the man to move a resolution for that purpose. I would not undertake to get up here and move to investigate the administration of any officer unless I had facts upon which to base the investigation. Until I had inquired into this matter, consulted witnesses, and learned all the facts that I could ascertain I did not offer this resolution. But I am justified by the facts which appear in offering it now; and I will modify the resolution so that it will provide that the Committee on Accounts may make the investigation instead of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. Speaker, I shall reserve the remainder of my time for the present.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I think this resolution should be so modified as to include the investigation of the Postmaster of the Fiftieth Congress, because of the fact that I understand this was a contract made by him in all of its illegal parts—

Mr. HOPKINS. If illegal at all.

Mr. CASWELL. If illegal at all, and which descended upon the present Postmaster of the House, and which contract expired in June and not when he commenced, in December last.

I understand this $150 per month was claimed to be a perquisite of the Postmaster in addition to the regular salary of $2,500 that pertains to the office of Postmaster of the House, and I believe that for several Congresses back at least this has been the practice in that office.

There was a sum appropriated, the sum of $5,000 each year, for carrying the mails or furnishing teams to carry the mails about the city, and that sum has been uniformly, or for several years past, used in that way—that the postmasters of the House have been in the habit of "squeezing" the contractors, if you may so use the term, to a certain extent, a hundred dollars or a hundred and fifty dollars a month, as the case may be, as a part of their perquisites for the responsibility of having charge of the service and the custody of the mails which came to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman permit a question just here?

Mr. CASWELL. Let me make my statement first and I will yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

I understand further that after this had run along in this manner for four or five months under the present administration of the post-office of the House the present Postmaster became satisfied, when he had become thoroughly familiar with the duties of the office, that it was not a proper and legal perquisite, and he thereupon took counsel, which counsel, as well as other persons, advised him that it was not a legal perquisite and did not belong to the office, and that thereupon he covered every dollar of it into the Treasury of the United States and took a receipt for it; and that he holds the receipt for such payments now; and further, that there is not in his hands one single dollar of money that does not belong to him. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEARD. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment—

Mr. CASWELL. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to ask the gentleman this question: I believe the gentleman said that his understanding is this, that the practice to which reference is made in this resolution obtained not only with regard to the administration of the immediate predecessor of the present Postmaster, but that it has been the practice for several Congresses back.

Mr. CASWELL. I so understand.

Mr. HEARD. I submit, then, that it is clearly competent for us to investigate the acts of the present Postmaster on charges presented as in this case; and if the fact the gentleman from Wisconsin states appears during the course of that investigation, then the inquiry can and should be extended further.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that we can not hear a word of what is being said.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri will suspend until gentlemen resume their seats.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, the question I desired to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin was this: If the fact which he understands to exist with reference to the acts of the former Postmaster be made to appear in the investigation which is proposed by the pending resolution, would it not then be timely and proper to extend back the investigation so as to embrace as many terms of Congress as this practice is believed to have prevailed in? For, I submit, if the practice has obtained heretofore, or obtains now, it ought to be ascertained and stopped. I believe the investigation should proceed according to the terms of the resolution as amended, and if then the fact to which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers, and which he understands to exist, appears to exist, the time will have arrived to extend the investigation, and not before; and in that case, I say, let the investigation go back as far as necessary to reach every Postmaster who practiced that system. But at present we should only deal with the question that is before us.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I see no reason to delay investigating a former Postmaster if the facts be material, and I know of no reason why it should not be embodied in this resolution; and much more so because this very contract with which the present Postmaster had to deal came down to him as an inheritance, having been made by the former Postmaster of the House under a practice which, if I am correctly informed, had extended back for several years.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Is it not true that a resolution was introduced in the last Congress to investigate the Public Printer, and on the other side the motion was made to include his predecessor at that time too?

Mr. CASWELL. I do not remember.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. It was done, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. CASWELL. That might be so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me quite essential, in view of the fact that the contract was inherited, under instructions, it may appear from the former Postmaster of the House and his employes, that it was a legal and a proper perquisite of his office, and which may furnish some excuse to this man, who was new in the business, for having pursued the same course, and regarding this contract as a sort of perquisite of the office; under any such belief as that, and I am satisfied he thought that it belonged to him as a matter of right, for the responsibilities incurred in that service—I say under such circumstances it is exceedingly important that the investigation should extend back and see where this contract did come from. It seems necessary to include the investigation of the former Postmaster, and I am not here to say that Mr. Dalton took any money he did not think honestly belonged to him as a part of his business. I should doubt it very much, though he may be entirely honest in doing it.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I would like to know—

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not hear gentlemen on account of the disorder.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to know of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] if he thinks that the salary—

The SPEAKER. Will gentlemen please be in order? Will gentlemen have the kindness to take their seats and cease conversation?

Mr. ENLOE. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he thinks, or if he pretends to say in defense of this Postmaster or any other that he believes any man charged with the duty of letting a contract for the carrying of the mail, as in this instance, is ignorant enough or has been ignorant enough to believe that he had a right to take a part of the appropriation made by the Government to pay contractors for carrying the mail, and put it into his pocket as a perquisite, as a compensation to him for the responsibility he assumed in taking the office?

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I can not account for the ignorance of anybody, but I can well see how he might think he had a right to receive all that was received by his predecessor, until he became familiar with the office.

Mr. ENLOE. Does the gentleman assert that he knows that the Postmaster himself knew that his predecessor did receive this money?

Mr. CASWELL. I am so informed; and I am informed that it was explained to him by either the Postmaster or some of his assistants and by this contractor that this sum of $150 was a part of his perquisites. I am so informed; I know nothing of the facts myself. And I believe that the present Postmaster, for the period of time in which he received this money, thought that it legally belonged to him for being responsible for the custody and care of the teams and the wagons and the safe conduct of the mails, but I do not think that it was the correct practice, and he became satisfied that it was not the correct practice and that it did not belong to him, and as soon as he was so satisfied he returned this money to the Treasury, where it belonged, and instead of making a contract for the present service at $5,000 a year, which has been the uniform appropriation and amount paid for a long series of years, he has, I understand it, now made a contract for carrying the mails and furnishing these teams for $4,000, thereby saving to the Government $1,000 a year for this service, and this he did months ago of his own accord.

Mr. HEARD. Will my friend allow me to suggest—

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to ask my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] if he will not modify his suggestion so as to embrace not only the preceding Postmaster, but also preceding Postmasters, if his object is to inquire whether this was an established practice. I insist that it is a disgraceful practice, I do not care how far back it has gone. We should try to reach the beginning of it if we go back of the present official. Do not let us stop with the present nor the immediately preceding one, nor at any limited time, but let the investigation go back as far as the custom may be shown to have existed.

Mr. CASWELL. I am quite willing, Mr. Speaker, that those gentlemen should extend this investigation back to the beginning of the Christian era, if they please. I do not care as to that, and I shall not oppose that. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. HOPKINS. I offer the following amendment to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following:
"Said committee are hereby authorized to extend said examination to the acts of the Postmaster of the House during the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses on all matters referred to in the foregoing resolution."

Mr. HEARD. I move to amend by striking out "Forty-ninth and Fiftieth" and inserting the words "preceding Congresses."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, the reason I limited it to the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses is that the same Postmaster held the position during both those Congresses. From the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] it seems that there was an existing contract in force that came to him, that did not expire until last June, and it seems to me that that covers the entire ground.

Mr. ENLOE. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question? I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], if he is going to try to find out who inaugurated this practice and whether it was inaugurated under this Postmaster, would it not be well not to limit the scope of investigation and let the committee pursue the matter as far as they may find it necessary to do it to fix the responsibility?

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman a few minutes ago thought we did not even have time enough to investigate the Postmaster during the preceding Congress. Now, it seems that gentlemen are desirous of widening the scope of this inquiry to such an extent that we can not get a report at all.

Mr. HEARD. Oh, no.

Mr. HOPKINS. What I insist upon, Mr. Speaker, is that we shall investigate the charge which is made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] and see whether the present Postmaster is culpable or not. We can determine that by determining the action of his immediate predecessor. Then if gentlemen desire to go into ancient history they can get up a resolution and have all the next session to continue their investigation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, or rather to make this statement: I trust there will be no objection to the amendment offered by him.

Mr. HEARD. As amended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not care how far it goes back. I can assure the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] that the gentleman who has recently been Postmaster of the House will have no objection to this investigation.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not understand any man has any objection to this amendment of mine; and surely it is a matter that should be investigated.

Mr. HOUK. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUK. Is an amendment to the amendment in order?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. An amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois says he has not yielded the floor, and therefore an amendment to the amendment would not now be in order.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think this matter is fully understood, and shall ask for the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

Mr. ENLOE. I think that motion can not be made by the gentleman from Illinois. He has the floor for debate, but I do not think he has the floor to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee yielded the floor, to which he was entitled for one hour, at the end of which he could move the previous question. He yielded the floor, and the gentleman from Illinois has the same right.

Mr. ENLOE. I reserved my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserved his time, but did not reserve the power over the previous question.

Mr. ENLOE. I did not yield it. I yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL], who occupied the floor in debate and then yielded it to the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not press the demand for the previous question. If a Republican has been stealing let us expose and punish him, and not attempt to excuse him. I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. There is no attempt to shield anybody, but these two Postmasters are so interlaced that the investigation of one can not be had without an investigation of the other.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I would ask if the Postmaster of the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses was not just as much interlaced in the charge as this one here.

Mr. STRUBLE. And the Silcott matter was also interlaced.

Mr. HOPKINS. Therefore I demand the previous question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will not make haste to hurry this through the House. This situation certainly grew out of a misapprehension on the part of the gentleman from Tennessee. He expected to discuss the matter further, and if by reason of any misapprehension he has lost control of the floor, I hope the gentleman will not press the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls for the previous question.

Mr. HOUK. I ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will yield to me for an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the previous question.

Mr. ENLOE. Will the Speaker allow me a single remark at this point?

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order and gentlemen will please resume their seats. The Chair will state the proposition now before the House. It is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois for the previous question. That is not debatable.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to say a word by way of explanation.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. HEARD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEARD. The inquiry is this: The gentleman from Illinois offered an amendment. I then offered a further amendment, to strike out certain words and insert certain other words in the amendment which he offered, and that amendment was entertained.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had not the floor.

Mr. HEARD. It seemed to be conceded then that I had.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by consent, and the question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I make an appeal to the gentleman from Illinois not to insist on the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Division.

The House proceeded to divide; and pending the division—

Mr. BLOUNT said: I ask for the yeas and nays. Let this covering-up performance go on record.

The affirmative vote was announced as 74.

Mr. DUNNELL. The other side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has the right to demand the yeas and nays. [After counting the other side.] Sixty-two in the negative. On this question the yeas are 74, the nays 62.

Mr. ENLOE. Let us have the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 108, nays 86, not voting 131; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of this day:

Mr. PUGSLEY with Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi.

Mr. BOOTHMAN with Mr. YODER.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered, and the question is on the amendment. The Chair understands that the Committee on Accounts has been substituted in the resolution for the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. The other amendment is the one offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand that the Committee on Accounts was to be substituted for the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Several MEMBERS. It was.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, if that is questioned, I will state that while I was on the floor and had charge of the resolution I modified it in that way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood, but was not quite certain. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed to report, from the select committee appointed to investigate the accounts of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, the bill which I send to the desk (H. R. 11928), and which I ask to have read and put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives to attend the House during its sittings, to maintain order under the direction of the Speaker, and, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, under the direction of the Clerk, execute the commands of the House and all processes issued by authority thereof, directed to him by the Speaker, keep the accounts for the pay and mileage of Members and Delegates, and pay them as provided by law.

Sec. 2. That the symbol of his office shall be the mace, which shall be borne by him while enforcing order on the floor.

Sec. 3. That the moneys which have been, or may be, appropriated for the compensation and mileage of Members and Delegates shall be paid at the Treasury on requisitions drawn by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and shall be kept, disbursed, and accounted for by him according to law, and he shall be a disbursing officer, but he shall not be entitled to any compensation additional to the salary now fixed by law.

Sec. 4. That the Sergeant-at-Arms shall, within twenty days after entering upon the duties of his office, and before receiving any portion of the moneys appropriated for the compensation or mileage of Members and Delegates, give a bond to the United States, with two or more sureties, to be approved by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, in the sum of $15,000, with condition for the proper discharge of the duties of his office, and the faithful keeping, application, and disbursement of such moneys as may be drawn from the Treasury and paid to him as disbursing officer of the United States, and shall, from time to time, renew his official bond as the First Comptroller of the Treasury shall direct. No member of Congress shall be approved as surety on such bond.

Sec. 5. That the bonds given pursuant to this act shall be deposited in the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury.

Sec. 6. That any person duly elected and qualified as Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives shall continue in said office until his successor is chosen and qualified, subject, however, to removal by the House of Representatives.

Sec. 7. That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives shall prepare and submit to the House of Representatives, at the commencement of each regular session of Congress, a statement in writing exhibiting the several sums drawn by him pursuant to the provisions of this act, the application and disbursement of the same, and the balance, if any, remaining in his hands.

Sec. 8. That there shall be employed in the office of Sergeant-at-Arms one deputy to the Sergeant-at-Arms, at a salary of $2,000 a year; one cashier, at a salary of $3,000 a year; one paying teller, at a salary of $2,000 a year; one book-keeper, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one messenger, at a salary of $1,200 a year; one page, at a salary of $720 a year; and one laborer, at a salary of $600 a year.

Sec. 9. That section 237 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 237. That the fiscal year of the Treasury of the United States in all matters of accounts, receipts, expenditures, estimates, and appropriations, except accounts of the Secretary of the Senate for compensation and traveling expenses of Senators, and accounts of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives for compensation and mileage of Members and Delegates, shall commence on the 1st day of July in each year; and all accounts of receipts and expenditures required by law to be published annually shall be prepared and published for the fiscal year, as thus established. The fiscal year for the adjustment of the accounts of Secretary of the Senate for compensation and traveling expenses of Senators, and of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives for compensation and mileage of Members and Delegates shall extend to and include the 3d day of July."

Sec. 10. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes with the unanimous report of the select committee appointed at the beginning of the session to investigate the accounts of the Sergeant-at-Arms. We have put into the bill the standing rules of the House regulating the duties of that office. We thought it necessary to do this because the rules do not run beyond the existence of the Congress for which they are made, the present Congress, for instance, while this officer's duties and the office itself run until the meeting of the next Congress and until his successor is chosen and qualified. We have also in express terms made the Sergeant-at-Arms a disbursing officer. We have also provided that he may draw from the Treasury on his own requisition the amount of the salaries and the mileage of Members and Delegates and pay it to them in the amounts provided by law. This does away with the system of giving receipts in advance and requiring the Speaker to give a certificate before the Sergeant-at-Arms can draw the money. It simplifies the method of conducting the business of the office. It adopts substantially the method employed by the Secretary of the Senate and now provided for by law.

Mr. FLOWER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. FLOWER. Our former Sergeant-at-Arms had eighty or ninety thousand dollars in his possession. Does your committee contemplate that the present Sergeant-at-Arms or any succeeding one may have as large an amount?

Mr. PAYNE. We understand from the officials of the Treasury Department that it is the custom and the rule of the Department to pay over to a disbursing officer only a sum equal to the amount of his bond, and that in order to get more money he is obliged to bring in vouchers for what he has already paid out and settle up his accounts; so that, as I understand the rule which prevails there, he could not get into his hands more money than the amount of his bond, which in this case is $50,000.

Mr. FLOWER. As I understand it, under our old custom we would sign vouchers for, say, five months in advance, so that the Sergeant-at-Arms could draw the money. Then when we adjourned in June and did not meet until the succeeding December he would have more than $50,000 in his hands. Now, why not make provision for a larger bond, say a hundred thousand dollars instead of $50,000?

Mr. PAYNE. Because he collects this money from the Treasury Department, or gets it on requisition every month, and disburses it every month on the receipts of members.

Mr. MORGAN. Would not the monthly installment required to pay members be over $50,000?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, it amounts to over $130,000; but, as I understand the rule of the Treasury Department, they pay out to a disbursing officer at any one time only an amount equal to his bond and he can not get any more.

Mr. FLOWER. Why not make the bond larger?

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish the gentleman from New York would state what is the practice of the disbursing officer of the Senate on this particular point.

Mr. PAYNE. The disbursing officer of the Senate gives a bond of only $20,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. But I wish the gentleman would state how the payments of that disbursing officer are regulated by the Treasury Department.

A MEMBER. Mr. Speaker, the confusion is so great that we can not hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order. The Chair would like at least to know how many gentlemen are occupying the floor at the same time. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLOWER. For one, Mr. Speaker, I did not occupy the floor except by consent of my colleague from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FLOWER] is unnecessarily sensitive, as the Chair had no reference whatever to him. The Chair had reference to gentlemen who were interrupting the business of the House by conversation.

Mr. FLOWER. Well, I want to ask my colleague now—

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] desires to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like the gentleman from New York to state the practice—

Mr. FLOWER. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. PAYNE. I yielded to the gentleman from Georgia for a question.

Mr. FLOWER. All right.

Mr. PAYNE. I supposed my colleague [Mr. FLOWER] was through.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood so far as he could understand anything in the confusion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York what is the practice of the Treasury Department with regard to advances to the disbursing officer of the Senate.

Mr. PAYNE. I believe the same rule is pursued with reference to that officer.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the Treasury Department advance to that officer at any time more than the amount of his bond?

Mr. PAYNE. I believe it does.

Mr. BLOUNT. My information is to the contrary; that the Department does not advance to that officer more than the amount of his bond, except after vouchers have been filed.

Mr. PAYNE. I think it does; but it requires regular and frequent accounting.

Mr. FLOWER. If the practice is what my colleague [Mr. PAYNE] now states, I say it is not business; and even if that is the practice in the case referred to, this House should not follow such a practice. We should require a bond large enough to prevent the recurrence of a deficit like that of last winter. I am in favor of enlarging the amount of the bond of this officer; I would make it $100,000. It should be so large that members of the House may always be secure in regard to their pay and that the Government may be secure.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask my colleague one question?

Mr. FLOWER. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Is it usual for business houses that have employes who give bonds to require a bond for all the money which goes through their hands or for all that is in their hands at any one time? Is that the rule with regard to the cashier of a bank or any employe of that kind?

Mr. FLOWER. It is certainly the rule in regard to every county treasurer, and, as I understand, in every case where a bond is required, that the bond shall be double the amount which is sought to be secured. Why should we not make a similar requirement?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. PAYNE. What is the amount of the bond of the subtreasurer at New York?

Mr. FLOWER. Two hundred thousand dollars, I understand.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer of the United States gives bond only in the sum of $100,000. It seems to me we ought to be reasonable in this case. The committee considered this subject carefully and thought that a bond of $50,000 would be ample.

Mr. FLOWER. The bond of the Sergeant-at-Arms is now $100,000.

Mr. PAYNE. No, $50,000.

Mr. FLOWER. He informed me himself that it was $100,000.

Mr. PAYNE. It has never been more than $50,000.

Mr. FLOWER. Then that is the reason why members lost their money at the beginning of this Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] allow me a moment for a correction?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman has spoken of an investigation of the office or accounts of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I want him, when he prints his remarks, to insert the word "ex" before Sergeant-at-Arms. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want it to be thoroughly understood that when I speak of the defalcation I mean the late Sergeant-at-Arms, not the present Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Will the gentleman from New York yield for an amendment adding to section 2 of this bill the following:

And the Treasurer of the United States shall disallow any payment made by the Sergeant-at-Arms in violation of the provisions of section 40 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think I can yield for that amendment. The existing law provides that members who are absent shall not receive any pay. We have law enough upon the subject; the only trouble is we do not enforce it.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. My amendment provides a means of enforcing it.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know how the Sergeant-at-Arms is going to get at that matter exactly; he might be caught "in a hole" by supposing that members were present when they were really absent. That is a question that we sometimes get "mixed" upon. I can not yield for an amendment of that kind.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If the gentleman from New York will yield to me for five minutes, I would like to make a point with reference to this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for five minutes.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, if I understood the reading of this bill it undertakes to make our Sergeant-at-Arms a civil officer of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. A disbursing officer.

Mr. BUCKALEW. A disbursing officer of the United States, and, of course, a civil officer. If there is nothing else defective in the bill I think there is a defect of form. The Constitution provides that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint certain civil officers of the United States, and further provides that Congress may by law vest the appointment of certain subordinate civil officers in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

Now, the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House, like our other officers, is an officer of the House in the view of the Constitution, as was held long ago in the Blount impeachment case in 1793. I understand that this bill proposes to make this officer of the House a civil officer of the United States. It can not be done. If you make him such an officer you must send his appointment somewhere else or after we appoint him you must get him another appointment.

I make this point because I was not present when the defalcation in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms was before the House on a former occasion. It struck me then that the arguments which were made in the House were defective, because they did not take into account the source of official authority under this Government with reference to civil officers of the United States as distinguished from officers of the respective Houses of Congress. This bill certainly ought to treat the Sergeant-at-Arms as an officer of the House. We may perhaps by statute say that he shall perform or execute certain duties which are ordinarily committed to the charge of civil officers of the United States without describing him as such.

Now, I apprehend that there may be some difficulty in the Executive Departments, or possibly in the courts, under the provisions of this bill for want of a recognition of the distinction which exists between those officials of this House appointed under the provisions of the Constitution, when you undertake to impose upon them civil duties, responsible legal duties, that do not properly pertain or strictly belong to their official functions under the law; and especially when you undertake to give them other designations.

I am only calling attention to this, not that I care anything specially about it, but simply want that the bill shall take the right shape. As it reads now I understand it is a misnomer, a misdescription, which may eventually lead to trouble.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this bill follows the language of the Revised Statutes in making the Secretary of the Senate a disbursing officer; and it also follows the decisions of the Court of Claims declaring that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House was such an officer.

I notice that in the printed bill there is a typographical error in line 7 of section 4; the word "fifteen" is printed instead of "fifty." It should be "fifty." I move to amend by making it "fifty," and ask the previous question on the amendment and on the engrossment and third reading and passage of the bill.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask the gentleman to make that "one hundred thousand."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has demanded the previous question.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The treasurer of my State gives a bond of $500,000.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in line 7 of section 4 by striking out the word "fifteen" and inserting the word "fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. In line 16 of section 9 the word "of," where it occurs in "Sergeant-of-Arms," should be stricken out and the word "at" inserted, making it read "Sergeant-at-Arms."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to. There was no objection.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Can I move an amendment?

The SPEAKER. Not since the previous question is ordered.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. But I made my motion practically before the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. But not before it was demanded. The previous question had been demanded when the gentleman from Ohio took the floor.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NICKEL-STEEL ARMOR.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, if in order I would like to make a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs and ask its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his request.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to report back, by instructions of the Committee on Naval Affairs, House joint resolution No. 228, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to purchase nickel ore or nickel matte for use in the manufacture of nickel-steel armor and other naval purposes, and ask its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will submit the request of the gentleman.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase, at his discretion, nickel ore or nickel matte, to be used in the manufacture of nickel-steel armor-plating for vessels already authorized or to be authorized to be constructed, and of armor-piercing projectiles, and for other naval purposes.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for this purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask that the accompanying report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred House joint resolution No. 228, having considered the same, submit the following report:

The recent armor tests at Annapolis having conspicuously demonstrated the superiority of steel plates containing an alloy of nickel, and the supply of that ore being limited, the committee coincide with the officers of the Navy Department in believing it to be of the highest importance that the Secretary be at once empowered to secure a supply of nickel to be utilized in the manufacture of the armor for our vessels of war, and for other naval purposes.

The committee recommend that the title of the joint resolution be amended by adding the words "and for other naval purposes," and that as so amended the joint resolution do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear some explanation of this before action is taken.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the question is on the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not want to object, but I think such a large appropriation, when it is brought before the House, ought to have some explanation, and that we could afford to listen for a little while at least to see what necessity exists for it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Naval Affairs would not have thought of calling on the House at this late stage of the session to consider a matter of this kind had they not believed the exigency was one of great importance.

All members of the House have unquestionably read with greater or less care the reports of the recent armor tests at Annapolis. It is enough to say of these tests that they have been very remarkable and in some respects startling in their character.

The tests consisted of trials of three different kinds of armor. First, the compound Cammel plate, which is used upon the armor-clads of Great Britain, a plate of armor consisting of a steel surface upon a wrought-iron backing; secondly, a steel plate manufactured in France at the works at Creusot; and, thirdly, a Creusot plate composed of steel with a nickel alloy of 5 per cent., from which remarkable results were anticipated with confidence from some experiments that had been previously made. Up to the recent experiments, however, there had never been in the ordnance history of the world any such accurate, complete, and conclusive tests of steel armor as those recently had at Annapolis.

The results in brief are, that under fire of a 6-inch rifle four shots practically demonstrated the inutility of the English Cammel plate. The steel face was shattered from its iron backing, and when the fifth shot from an 8-inch rifle was fired with a reduced charge, the plate was absolutely disintegrated, so that the shot passed through the plate, clear through the backing, and was dug out some 15 feet deep in the earth behind. The all-steel plate, believed by the French to be superior, resisted the fire of the 6-inch shots with comparative success, so that up to that point the difference in favor of the nickel was not so absolutely pronounced, but when the fifth shot was fired at the steel plate the result was, as the photograph shows, a cracking of the plate crosswise from corner to corner, absolutely disintegrating it.

On the nickel plate, however, the result was very different. The 8-inch shot broke off in the plate, showing a marvelous degree of tenacity and toughness, the metal being of that character of resistance that it shattered the breech of the shell into fragments, and yet of sufficient tenacity that it held the forward part of the shell like a vise, so that if it had been in actual warfare the shot could have done practically no harm, as it plugged the opening. The surface of the nickel-alloy plate shows no fissure whatever.

In the opinion of the experts of the Navy Department, the demonstration of the superiority of this nickel alloy is incontestable and remarkable.

We are under contract now for quantities of armor for use upon our battle-ships under construction and those which have recently been authorized; but there is still time for us to avail ourselves of the latest discoveries and obtain the most desirable materials. In order to do that, however, as the supply of nickel is limited, the Navy Department have deemed it imperative on their part, in order to secure for us in the composition of the armor upon which we are to depend in the construction of our heavy war-ships the very best material—have deemed it imperative that they should ask of Congress authority to promptly secure a quantity of this nickel ore, necessary to form the alloy for these armor-plates.

I will state in this connection, for the information of the House, that this appropriation does not involve in itself any initial addition to the annual expenditures in behalf of the Navy; it simply authorizes an expenditure of so much of a million dollars as may be necessary, in addition to what was provided in the regular annual bill, on account of authorizations for armament and armor already made by Congress. It simply adds this $1,000,000 to the $2,500,000 appropriated for armor and armament to which the Committee on Naval Affairs reduced the estimates of the Department, which were $3,971,000. In other words, the estimates by the Ordnance Bureau of the amount of appropriation necessary for these purposes for the current year, as sent to Congress last December, were $3,971,000. By carefully examining the probable expenditures during the current fiscal year the Committee on Naval Affairs reduced the actual appropriation to $2,500,000, or, in other words, reduced it by about $1,400,000.

This appropriation will simply make available $1,000,000 and enable the Department to make a purchase or to contract for the purchase of this material. Upon my responsibility as chairman, and speaking for my colleagues unanimously, speaking also for the Secretary and for the experts of the Navy Department, I assure the House that I believe this action to be imperative and important at this time for many reasons that it may not be practicable to state in extenso at this time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it proposed to buy this material at or about this time?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Where does the product of nickel come from?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will be very glad to answer the question of the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not a fact substantially that the American supply is exhausted?

Mr. HERMANN. It is not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does this bill provide for the immediate purchase or does it give discretion to the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It gives discretion to the Secretary of the Navy. It places the whole matter in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, where, of course, we are obliged to leave discretion in such matters.

Mr. BLOUNT. Do I understand the gentleman to urge this upon the House for reasons other than stated, because the reasons ought not to be stated in the public interests?

Mr. BOUTELLE. No; there is nothing that would do anybody any harm.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman misunderstood me. I can conceive of reasons for a public measure being adopted when there is an impropriety in stating those reasons.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Exactly.

Mr. BLOUNT. And I wish to know of the gentleman if it is what anybody might know who is in the confidence of his committee or the Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is exactly it. I will state there is nothing extraordinary about this matter, and no secret. I think that all that it ought to be necessary to state is the fact that this material is absolutely needed. The Department, its experts, and the committee are united upon that point; and we simply ask you to anticipate the appropriation of $1,000,000 which we should ask in the next session to enable the Secretary of the Navy to utilize the opportunity now afforded us to place us in the position to construct ships with the very best armor in the world; better than any other nation now has.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will this $1,000,000 now appropriated diminish the amount to be expended for the steel and iron armor heretofore appropriated?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It will, except in so far as nickel is more costly. There is only a small amount of nickel, however, to be used as an alloy to the extent of about 5 per cent.

Mr. HEIMANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman from Maine, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] as to the nickel in the United States probably being exhausted, that in my own State, in the southern portion of the county of Douglas, there are mines in which nickel has been discovered. The mines have been developed and are now in working order, and the only thing that prevents successful mining operations is the small duty now imposed upon foreign nickel. In connection with that, as this material has to be used, I wanted to know of the gentleman from Maine whether it would not be proper and consistent with our own interest that this discretion given to the Secretary should be limited to a certain extent as to the purchase of nickel mined in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended by adding the following: "And for any other naval purposes."

Mr. BOUTELLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IOWA JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. REED, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11154) to repeal part of section 6 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts," approved July 20, 1882.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 6 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts," approved July 20, 1882, as requires courts held under the provisions of said act to be held in buildings provided for that purpose without expense to the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? Mr. HOLMAN. I think we ought to have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. REED, of Iowa. Let the report on the bill be read. It will give an explanation.

The report (by Mr. REED, of Iowa) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11154) to repeal part of section 6 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts," approved July 20, 1882, submit the following report:

The sixth section of the act approved July 20, 1882, entitled "An act to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts," provides that the additional courts provided for by the act shall be held in buildings provided for that purpose, without expense to the United States. The courts at Fort Dodge and Sioux City have heretofore been held in the county court-house of the counties in which these cities are situated.

When the act was passed these buildings afforded ample facilities for both the State and Federal courts. Since that date, however, the business in the State courts has increased to such extent that those courts are in session the greater portion of the year. This is particularly true of the courts at Sioux City. There is then a constant conflict between the State and Federal courts in the matter of the occupation of the buildings, and in addition to that neither of the buildings has sufficient facilities for the offices of the clerk of the Federal courts.

The bill simply repeals this provision, and if it should become a law the Department would be enabled to rent the rooms or buildings necessary for the accommodation of the courts and the proper transaction of their business.

Your committee are of the opinion that a public necessity exists for the passage of the bill, and they therefore report it back with the recommendation that it be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE KENTUCKY RIVER.

Mr. DICKERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4322) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Kentucky River and its tributaries by the Louisville, Covington and Cincinnati Railway Company, the Carrollton and Louisville Railroad Company, and the Westport, Carrollton and Covington Railway Company, and their assigns.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the bill is in the usual form and has been reported by the committee unanimously. I therefore ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill.

Mr. DICKERSON. A bill identical with this has been reported by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Louisville, Covington and Cincinnati Railway Company, the Carrollton and Louisville Railroad Company, and the Westport, Carrollton and Covington Railway Company, corporations organized under acts of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, be, and they, their successors and assigns, are authorized to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges, and approaches thereto, over the Kentucky River, in the State of Kentucky, at or near Carrollton, at such a point or points as said companies may deem suitable for the passage of their said road or roads over said river or its tributaries, subject to approval of the Secretary of War. Said bridge or bridges shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains and, at the option of the company or companies by which it or they may be built, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers.

Sec. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge or bridges shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies; and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge or bridges, and approaches, for postal-telegraph purposes.

Sec. 3. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or companies shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of each bridge, and a map of the location thereof, giving the high and low water lines upon the banks of the river, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages of the water, with soundings accurately showing the bed of the stream, and the location of any other bridge or bridges; such map to be sufficiently in detail to enable the Secretary of War to judge of the proper location of said bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until such plan and location of the bridge or bridges are approved by the Secretary of War, no bridge shall be built or commenced; and should any change be made in the plan of such bridge or bridges during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and if the Secretary of War shall at any time think any changes necessary in the plans of said bridge or bridges, the said alterations shall be at the expense of the company or companies owning the same. The said bridge or bridges shall at all times be so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels and other water-craft through or under said structures, and for the safety of vessels passing at night there shall be displayed on said bridge or bridges, from the hours of sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals as may be prescribed by the Light-House Board.

Sec. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge or bridges shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon the payment of reasonable compensation therefor; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge or bridges and the company or companies desiring to use the same shall fail to agree upon the terms with reference to the use of the same, all matters of issue between them shall be decided by any court of competent jurisdiction, or by the Secretary of War, by agreement of the parties interested, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

Sec. 5. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge or bridges herein authorized be not commenced within two and completed within five years from the date hereof.

Sec. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, House bill 11758, on the same subject, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENLARGEMENT OF MILITARY POST, PLATTSBURGH, N. Y.

Mr. MOFFITT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 608) making appropriation for the construction of new buildings and the enlargement of the military post at Plattsburgh, N. Y., and I ask that the bill be now put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Secretary of War to enlarge the military post at Plattsburgh, N. Y., to the capacity of twelve companies, and for beginning the construction of the necessary buildings, barracks, quarters, kitchen, mess-hall, stable, storehouses, and magazines, there is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept, free of cost to the United States, a donation of a tract of 500 acres of land for a target range and other military purposes at or near the post of Plattsburgh Barracks, New York: Provided, That in his judgment the said tract of land is found to be in all respects adequate and suitable to meet the wants of the post, and that the title shall have been declared valid by the Attorney-General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. Let the report be read.

Mr. MOFFITT. Yes, Mr. Speaker, let the report be read for the information of the House. It sets forth the importance of Plattsburgh as a strategic point in all the wars that have occurred in the North, and shows that it must always be an important point in military operations on our northern frontier. The report is very complete. It explains the situation fully, and when it is read I am sure the House will see the necessity for this legislation.

The report (by Mr. KINSEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 608) making an appropriation for the construction of new buildings and the enlargement of the military post at Plattsburgh, N. Y., submit the following report:

Plattsburgh is situated on Lake Champlain, in the State of New York, and on the Canada border. From the earliest history of the country it has been a military post. Prior to the Revolutionary war it was the scene of many wars between first the French inhabitants of Canada and the Iroquois Indians, and afterwards between the French and the English colonists. It was on the line of march when Montcalm entered the territory of New York in 1759. It was part of the route taken by Burgoyne when he began the campaign which resulted in his defeat and surrender at Stillwater during the Revolution.

It was again the arena in which the American volunteers successfully engaged the British army under Sir George Prevost in the war of 1812. It will be perceived that in all the wars between our Government and the sovereigns of the Canadian Lake Champlain has been considered a strategic point. It must ever remain so because of its vicinity to the Canadian border and to the chief city of the Dominion, Montreal.

The suggestion made by the General of the Army that, because of its strategic value, it ought to be made a permanent point of location for a regiment which would not as a nucleus for the formation of an army or corps in case of war with England is approved by the committee.

It is near the Canadian border, is connected by lines of railway and a canal with the central portion of New York, giving easy modes of transport to troops and the material of war at any time. A concentration of troops on the lake would protect the country from invasion, and if intended for aggressive purposes the most convenient place for an invasion of Canada, being not more than a day's march from the St. Lawrence River.

Such a reservation and depot as is contemplated by the bill would be of inestimable value (should war with England occur) as a rendezvous for volunteer troops from the Atlantic States. The committee call attention to the recommendations of the General of the Army and Secretary of War, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 20, 1890.

SIR: I return herewith House bill 608, "making an appropriation for the construction of new buildings and the enlargement of the military post at Plattsburgh, N. Y.," referred to this Department on the 15th instant, and invite attention to the inclosed letter from the Major-General commanding the Army on the bill, and to the marked paragraphs on pages 5 and 18 of the accompanying copy of his annual report to the Secretary of War for the year 1889, and also to a copy of the telegram from Hon. Smith M. Weed to Major-General Schofield on the subject of the bill.

I concur in the recommendation of the Major-General commanding the Army, and strongly recommend favorable action on the bill.

Very respectfully,

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Secretary of War.

Hon. B. M. CUTCHERON,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, Washington, D. C., February 19, 1890.

SIR: Upon House bill 608, Fifty-first Congress, first session, "making an appropriation for the construction of new buildings and the enlargement of the military post at Plattsburgh, N. Y.," I have the honor to report that the possession by the Government of a valuable military reservation, with some good buildings, at Plattsburgh, suggests that point, rather than any other in that part of the country, for military occupation. If it be admitted, as suggested in my annual report, that it is not expedient to make any additions "to the old fortifications or armament of the military posts along the northern border of the United States," it becomes the more important "that a moderate force be maintained in barracks at those posts."

At least one regiment of infantry and a battery or two of field artillery should be stationed at Plattsburgh as a nucleus for the force, mostly State troops, which would be hastily assembled there in any emergency, for the purpose of crossing the northern border and taking possession of the channels by which an enemy might otherwise send armed vessels from the Lower St. Lawrence into the lakes. I regard this as one of the most important features of the present military policy of the United States.

The additional ground which is to be donated will not only serve as a target and drill ground for the regular garrison, but will afford the necessary camping ground for additional troops temporarily assembled there.

I respectfully recommend favorable action upon the bill.

Very respectfully,

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Major-General, Commanding.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

The committee recommend the passage of this bill with an amendment of section 2 thereof, so that said section shall read as follows:

"Sec. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept, free of cost to the United States, a donation of a tract of not less than 500 acres of land for a target range and other military purposes at or near the post of Plattsburgh Barracks, New York: Provided, That in his judgment the said tract of land is found to be in all respects adequate and suitable to meet the wants of the post, and that the title shall have been declared valid by the Attorney-General of the United States: And provided further, That no part of said sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the aforesaid tract of land shall have been conveyed to and accepted by the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee and set out in the report were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOFFITT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBERT S. HARGOUS.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution (S. R. 95) and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and hereby is, directed to deliver to the person justly entitled to the possession thereof twenty-seven several Mexican bonds, dated September 3, 1845, nine thereof being each for the sum of $5,000, five each for the sum of $2,000, four each for the sum of $1,000, four each for the sum of $500, and five each for the sum of $100, numbered, respectively, from 1341 to 1367, both inclusive; also nineteen several drafts, dated April 17, 1862, one being for the sum of $66,171.69, and the remaining eighteen each for the sum of $16,542.92 7/8, and drawn by Emmanuel Doblado, acting minister of finance to Mexico, on the Treasury of the United States, and all other papers relating to said bonds and drafts, or to claims of Louis S. Hargous against Mexico presented before the American and Mexican Mixed Commission, numbered 782, 783, and 784, and rejected by said commission for want of jurisdiction, and now in litigation before the courts of Mexico at the suit of Robert S. Hargous, administrator of said Louis S. Hargous, deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let the report be read.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Speaker, I will make a brief statement. These bonds came into the estate of Louis S. Hargous, and they were deposited in the State Department in the archives of the American and Mexican Mixed Commission. There is no reason why they should be kept in the Department, and there is a letter from the Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine, to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and also to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, in which he recommends the return of these bonds to the proper owners.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let that letter be read.

The letter to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs was read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 10, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, with its inclosures, relating to the delivery to the parties in interest of certain Mexican bonds alleged to have been erroneously deposited in this Department. In reply I have to state that I know of no reason for retaining these bonds on the files of this Department, but in order to determine which bonds the resolution intends to cover, it will be better to introduce in the resolution the name of the claimant as well as the number of the case in which they were filed.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

Hon. R. R. HITT,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that there is another letter.

Mr. QUINN. The other letter is in the same terms and is addressed to the Senate committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. QUINN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the House joint resolution of the same purport was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN; and it was rejected—ayes 24, noes 40.

Mr. HOLMAN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the business on the Speaker's table. First, there are two bills, H. R. 3070 and H. R. 5524, which were recalled from the Senate, and which, if there be no objection, will be referred to the Committee on Pensions. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2805) to provide for the disposal of the Old Fort Lyon and Fort Lyon military reservations, in the State of Colorado, to actual settlers under the provisions of the homestead laws.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which concurrence was requested, the bill (H. R. 11773) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary H. Cushing.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 2990) for the relief of J. L. Cain and others, asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. HIGGINS, and Mr. PASCO conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2623) to authorize the acquisition of lands for coke ovens and other improvements, and for right of way for wagon-roads, railroads, and tramways in connection with coal mines;

A bill (S. 4161) concerning agricultural entries of land on which mineral deposits are subsequently found; and Joint resolution (S. R. 125) to extend the time of payment to settlers on the public lands in certain cases.

REPEAL OF TIMBER-CULTURE LAW.

The SPEAKER, as the next business on the Speaker's table, laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7254) to repeal the timber-culture law, and for other purposes, with amendments of the Senate thereto and a request for a conference.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. PICKLER (after the reading had gone on for some time). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the conference requested by the Senate be agreed to.

Several members objected.

Mr. DUNNELL. This is a very important bill. It is wholly different from the House bill, and it ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The Clerk resumed the reading.

Mr. KILGORE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged motion. I want to move that the House adjourn.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not make a motion to adjourn while the Clerk is reading the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON (interrupting the reading). This amendment of the Senate is very long and it will take half an hour to read it. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD, so that the House may now adjourn.

Mr. PICKLER. I object. If unanimous consent can be had that the bill, without the reading of the Senate amendment, be referred to a conference committee as requested by the Senate, I have no objection.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The Clerk resumed the reading.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas (interrupting the reading). I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to ask whether the Chair has not the power to withdraw this bill for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has called for the regular order, and this is the regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. We would like to go home.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

Mr. MCCREARY. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] should withdraw the call for the regular order, will a motion to adjourn be then in order? I believe it will.

Mr. PICKLER. The reading of the bill has not been finished. How can it be interrupted?

Mr. MCCREARY. I have the right to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] objects, that is equivalent to a call for the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. From the hasty reading of the fourth section of this bill, it would appear to interfere very largely with the act we have already passed with regard to desert lands.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. Yes; it does.

Mr. PICKLER. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. PAYSON], who would have charge of this bill, is not here now. My object is to have the bill sent to a conference committee for consideration, as requested by the Senate. If by unanimous consent the reading can be waived and the conference agreed to, I shall not object.

Mr. WILSON, of Washington. But a number of us would like to know what is in this amendment. It seems to be an entire change of the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. PICKLER. Then let it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] asks unanimous consent that the bill with the amendment of the Senate be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILSON, of Washington. And let the bill and amendment be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the bill with the amendment of the Senate will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act to amend an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on the Western prairies," approved June 14, 1878, and all laws relating to or authorizing timber-culture entries, are hereby repealed: Provided, That all entries heretofore made may be perfected to patent in accordance with the provision of said act: And provided further, That all contests initiated against timber-culture entries prior to the passage and approval of this act shall be heard and determined in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing such cases and in force at the date of the passage of this act.

Sec. 2. That any person who has made entry of any public lands of the United States under the timber-culture laws, and who has for a period of four years in good faith complied with the provisions of said laws, shall be entitled to make final proof thereto, and acquire title to the same, by the payment of $1.25 per acre for such tract, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 3. That no land acquired under the provisions of this act shall in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefor.

The amendment of the Senate is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to encourage the growth of timber on the Western prairies,' approved June 14, 1878, and all laws supplementary thereto or amendatory thereof, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, except as to the State of Nebraska: *Provided, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the passage of this act may be perfected upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitations, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed: And provided further, That the following words of the last clause of section 2 of said act, namely, "That not less than twenty-seven hundred trees were planted on each acre," are hereby repealed: And provided further, That in computing the period of cultivation the time shall run from the date of the entry, if the necessary acts of cultivation were performed within the proper time: And provided further, That the preparation of the land and the planting of trees shall be construed as acts of cultivation, and the time authorized to be so employed and actually employed shall be computed as a part of the eight years of cultivation required by statute: *Provided, That any person who has made entry of any public lands of the United States under the timber-culture laws, and who has for a period of four years in good faith complied with the provisions of said laws shall be entitled to make final proof thereto, and acquire title to the same, by the payment of $1.25 per acre for such tract, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That no land acquired under the provisions of this act shall in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing of the final certificate therefor.

Sec. 2. That an act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following sections:

"Sec. 4. That at the time of filing the declaration hereinbefore required the party shall also file a map of said land, which shall exhibit a plan showing the mode of contemplated irrigation, and which plan shall be sufficient to thoroughly irrigate and reclaim said land, and prepare it to raise ordinary agricultural crops, and shall also show the source of the water to be used for irrigation and reclamation. Persons entering or proposing to enter separate sections, or fractional parts of sections, of desert lands may associate together in the construction of canals and ditches for irrigating and reclaiming all of said tracts, and may file a joint map or maps showing their plan of internal improvements.

*"Sec. 5. That no land shall be patented to any person under this act unless he or his assigns shall have expended in the necessary irrigation, reclamation, and cultivation thereof, by means of main canals and branch ditches, and in permanent improvements upon the land, and in the purchase of water rights for the irrigation of the same, at least $3 per acre of the whole tract reclaimed and patented in the manner following: Within one year after making entry for such tract of desert land as aforesaid the party so entering shall expend not less than $1 per acre for the purposes aforesaid; and he shall in like manner expend the sum of $1 per acre during the second and also during the third year thereafter, until the full sum of $3 per acre is so expended. Said party shall file during each year with the register proof by the affidavits of two or more credible witnesses, that the full sum of $1 per acre has been expended in such necessary improvements during such year, and the manner in which expended, and at the expiration of the third year a map or plan showing the character and extent of such improvements. If any party who has made such application shall fail during any year to file the testimony aforesaid the lands shall revert to the United States, and the 35 cents advanced payment shall be forfeited to the United States, and the entry shall be canceled. Nothing herein contained shall prevent a claimant from making his final entry and receiving his patent at an earlier date than hereinbefore prescribed, provided that he then makes the required proof of reclamation to the aggregate extent of $3 per acre: *Provided, That proof be further required of the cultivation of one-eighth of the land.

"Sec. 6. That this act shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued under said act of March 3, 1877, but all bona fide claims heretofore lawfully initiated may be perfected, upon due compliance with the provisions of said act, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed; or said claims, at the option of the claimant, may be perfected and patented under the provisions of said act, as amended by this act, so far as applicable; and all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

*"Sec. 7. That at any time after filing the declaration, and within the period of four years thereafter, upon making satisfactory proof to the register and the receiver of the reclamation and cultivation of said land to the extent and cost and in the manner aforesaid, and substantially in accordance with the plans herein provided for, and that he or she is a citizen of the United States, and upon payment to the receiver of the additional sum of $1 per acre for said land, a patent shall issue therefor to the applicant or his assigns: *Provided, however, That additional proofs may be required at any time within the period prescribed by law, and that the claims or entries made under this or any preceding act shall be subject to contest, as provided by the law relating to homestead cases, for illegal inception, abandonment, or failure to comply with the requirements of law, and upon satisfactory proof thereof shall be canceled, and the lands and moneys paid therefor, shall be forfeited to the United States.

"Sec. 8. That the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment, and the amendments thereto, shall apply to and be in force in the State of Colorado, as well as the States named in the original act."

Sec. 9. That section 2238 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 2238. Any bona fide settler under the pre-emption, homestead, or other settlement law shall have the right to transfer, by warranty against his own acts, any portion of his claim for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way of railroads, canals, or ditches for irrigation or drainage across it; and the transfer for such public purposes shall in no way vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to his claim."

SEC. 4. That section 2301 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2301. Nothing in this chapter shall be so construed as to prevent any person who shall hereafter avail himself of the benefits of section 2289 from paying the minimum price for the quantity of land so entered at any time after the expiration of thirty calendar months from the date of such entry, and obtaining a patent therefor, upon making proof of settlement and of residence and cultivation for such period of thirty calendar months."

SEC. 5. That whenever it shall appear to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that a clerical error has been committed, such entry may be suspended upon proper notification to the claimant, through the local land office, until the error has been corrected; and after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt upon any final entry under the pre-emption, timber-culture, desert-land, or homestead acts, or under this act, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that such duplicate receiver's receipt has been obtained by fraud, although the final proofs may be in due form and prima facie sufficient, the Secretary shall hold the entry for cancellation, and at once notify the claimant, which action shall become absolutely final, unless within sixty days from notice in writing served upon the claimant or other party in interest such party shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a written request for a judicial investigation, in which case the Secretary shall suspend further action and file without delay with the Attorney-General of the United States notice of such suspension, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to cancel such entry, if, in his judgment, such proceedings can be maintained; and if, in his judgment, such proceedings can not be maintained, or no proceeding shall be instituted one year after the filing in his office of the notice of the suspension, then a patent shall be issued upon such entry: Provided, That nothing herein shall be held or construed to impair the right of any bona fide purchaser or mortgagee of any such lands; and all purchasers, mortgagees, and parties in interest of record shall be made parties to such proceedings and may defend in their own right, and all entries made under the pre-emption or homestead laws, in which final proof and pay may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold or encumbered prior to the 1st day of March, 1883, and after final entry, to bona fide purchasers, or incumbrances, for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale or incumbrance. This section shall apply to all cases of suspended entries heretofore made under the United States pre-emption, timber-culture, desert-land, and homestead acts: Provided, That after the lapse of two years from the date of the issuance of the receiver's receipt upon the final entry of any tract of land under the homestead, timber-culture, desert-land, or pre-emption laws, or under this act, and when there shall be no pending contest or protest against the validity of such entry, the entryman shall be entitled to a patent conveying the land by him entered, and the same shall be issued to him; but this proviso shall not be construed to require the delay of two years from the date of said entry before the issuing of a patent therefor.

SEC. 6. That suits by the United States to vacate and annul any patent heretofore issued shall only be brought within five years from the passage of this act, and suits to vacate and annul patents hereafter issued shall only be brought within five years after the date of the issuance of such patents. And in the States of Colorado, Montana, Idaho, North Dakota, and South Dakota, and the gold and silver regions of Nevada, and the Territory of Utah, in any criminal prosecution or civil action by the United States for a trespass on such public timber lands or to recover timber or lumber cut thereon, it shall be a defense if the defendant shall show that the said timber was so cut or removed from the timber lands for use in such State or Territory by a resident thereof for agricultural, mining, manufacturing, or domestic purposes, and has not been transported out of the same. But nothing herein contained shall operate to enlarge the rights of any railway company to cut timber on the public domain: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make suitable rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 7. That hereafter no public lands of the United States not heretofore offered at public sale, except abandoned military or other reservations, isolated and disconnected fractional tracts authorized to be sold by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes, and mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having a local application, shall be sold at public sale.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall change, repeal, or modify any agreements or treaties made with any Indian tribes for the disposal of their lands, or of land ceded to the United States to be disposed of for the benefit of such tribes, and the proceeds thereof to be placed in the Treasury of the United States; and the disposition of such lands shall continue in accordance with the provisions of such treaties or agreements.

SEC. 9. That until otherwise ordered by Congress lands in Alaska may be entered for town-site purposes, for the several use and benefit of the occupants of such town sites, by such trustee or trustees as may be named by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, such entries to be made under the provisions of section 2287 of the Revised Statutes as near as may be; and when such entries shall have been made the Secretary of the Interior shall provide by regulation for the proper execution of the trust in favor of the inhabitants of the town site, including the survey of the land into lots, according to the spirit and intent of said section 2287 of the Revised Statutes, whereby the same result would be reached as though the entry had been made by a county judge and the disposal of the lots in such town site and the proceeds of the sale thereof had been prescribed by the legislative authority of a State or Territory: Provided, That no more than 640 acres shall be embraced in one town-site entry.

SEC. 10. That any citizen of the United States twenty-one years of age, and any association of such citizens, and any corporation incorporated under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory of the United States now authorized by law to hold lands in the Territories now or hereafter in possession of and occupying public lands in Alaska for the purpose of trade or manufactures, may purchase not exceeding 160 acres, to be taken as near as practicable in a square form, of such land, at $1.50 per acre: Provided, That in case more than one person, association, or corporation shall claim the same tract of land, the person, association, or corporation having the prior claim by reason of possession and continued occupation shall be entitled to purchase the same, but the entry of no person, association, or corporation shall include improvements made by or in possession of another prior to the passage of this act.

SEC. 11. That it shall be the duty of any person, association, or corporation entitled to purchase land under this act to make an application to the United States marshal, ex officio surveyor-general of Alaska, for an estimate of the cost of making a survey of the lands occupied by such person, association, or corporation, and the cost of the clerical work necessary to be done in the office of the said United States marshal, ex officio surveyor-general; and on the receipt of such estimate from the United States marshal, ex officio surveyor-general, the said person, association, or corporation shall deposit the amount in a United States depository, as is required by section numbered 2401, Revised Statutes, relating to deposits for surveys.

That on the receipt by the United States marshal, ex officio surveyor-general, of the said certificates of deposit, he shall employ a competent person to make such survey, under such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make his return of his field-notes and maps to the office of the said United States marshal, ex officio surveyor-general; and the said United States marshal, ex officio surveyor-general, shall cause the said field-notes and plats of such survey to be examined, and if correct, approve the same, and shall transmit certified copies of such maps and plats to the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

That when the said field-notes and plats of said survey shall have been approved by the said Commissioner of the General Land Office, he shall notify such person, association, or corporation, who shall then, within six months after such notice, pay to the said United States marshal, ex officio surveyor-general, for such land, and patent shall issue for the same.

SEC. 12. That none of the provisions of the last two preceding sections of this act shall be so construed as to warrant the sale of any lands belonging to the United States which shall contain coal or the precious metals, or any town site, or which shall be occupied by the United States for public purposes, or which shall be reserved for such purposes, or to which the natives of Alaska have prior rights by virtue of actual occupation, or which shall be selected by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries on the islands of Kodiak and Afognak for the purpose of establishing fish-culture stations. And all tracts of land not exceeding 640 acres in any one tract now occupied as missionary stations in said district of Alaska are hereby excepted from the operation of the last three preceding sections of this act. No portion of the islands of the Pribylov Group or the Seal Islands of Alaska shall be subject to sale under this act; and the United States reserves, and there shall be reserved in all patents issued under the provisions of the last two preceding sections, the right of the United States to regulate the taking of salmon and to do all things necessary to protect and prevent the destruction of salmon in all the waters of the lands granted frequented by salmon.

SEC. 13. That until otherwise provided by law the body of lands known as Annette Islands, situated in Alexander Archipelago, in Southeastern Alaska, on the north side of Dixon's entrance, be, and the same is hereby, set apart as a reservation for the use of the Metlakatla Indians, and those people known as Metlakatla Indians who have recently emigrated from British Columbia to Alaska, and such other Alaskan natives as may join them, to be held and used by them in common, under such rules and regulations and subject to such restrictions as may be prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 14. That town-site entries may be made by incorporated towns and cities on the mineral lands of the United States, but no title shall be acquired by such towns or cities to any vein of gold, silver, cinnabar, copper, or lead, or to any valid mining claim or possession held under existing law. When mineral veins are possessed within the limits of an incorporated town or city, and such possession is recognized by local authority or by the laws of the United States, the title to town lots shall be subject to such recognized possession and the necessary use thereof, and when entry has been made or patent issued for such town sites to such incorporated town or city, the possessor of such mineral vein may enter and receive patent for such mineral vein, and the surface ground appertaining thereto: Provided, That no entry shall be made by such mineral-vein claimant for surface ground where the owner or occupier of the surface ground shall have had possession of the same before the inception of the title of the mineral-vein applicant.

SEC. 15. That reservoir sites located or selected and to be located and selected under the provisions of "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," and amendments thereto, shall be restricted to and shall contain only so much land as is actually necessary for the construction and maintenance of reservoirs; and that the provision of "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes," which reads as follows, namely, "No person who shall after the passage of this act enter upon any of the public lands with a view to occupation, entry, or settlement under any of the land laws shall be permitted to acquire title to more than 320 acres in the aggregate under all said laws," shall be construed to include in the maximum amount of lands the title to which is permitted to be acquired by one person only agricultural lands and not to include lands entered or sought to be entered under the coal-land laws, mineral-land laws, or timber and stone act.

SEC. 16. That the right of way through the public lands of the United States is hereby granted to any canal or ditch company formed for the purpose of irrigation and duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory, which shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation, and due proofs of its organization under the same, to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the canal and its laterals, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof; also the right to take, from the public lands adjacent to the line of the canal or ditch, material, earth, and stone necessary for the construction of such canal or ditch.

SEC. 17. That any canal or ditch company, desiring to secure the benefits of this act shall, within twelve months after the location of 10 miles of its canal, if the same be upon surveyed lands, and if upon unsurveyed lands, within twelve months after the survey thereof by the United States, file with the register of the land office for the district where such land is located a map of its canal or ditch; and upon the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior the same shall be noted upon the plats in said office, and thereafter all such lands over which such rights of way shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such right of way. Whenever any person or corporation, in the construction of any canal or ditch, injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

SEC. 18. That the provisions of this act shall apply to all canals and ditches heretofore or hereafter constructed, whether constructed by corporations, individuals, or association of individuals on the filing of the certificates and maps herein provided for. If such ditch or canal has been or shall be constructed by an individual or association of individuals, it shall be sufficient for such individual or association of individuals to file with the Secretary of the Interior, and with the register of the land office where said land is located, a map of the line of such canal or ditch, as in case of a corporation, with the name of the individual owner or owners thereof, together with the articles of association, if any there be. Plats heretofore filed shall have the benefit of this act from the date of their filing, as though filed under it: Provided, That if any section of said canal shall not be completed within five years after the location of said section, the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to any uncompleted section of said canal or ditch, to the extent that the same is not completed at the date of the forfeiture.

SEC. 19. That nothing in this act shall authorize such canal or ditch company to occupy such right of way except for the purpose of said canal or ditch, and then only so far as may be necessary for the construction, maintenance, and care of said canal or ditch.

Passed the Senate with amendments September 16, 1890.

Attest:

ANSON G. MCCOOK, Secretary.

Mr. McCREARY. I now move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, September 26, 1890.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial signed by a large number of citizens of Champaign, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of any bankruptcy law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a letter from the Coal Rollers' Benevolent Union of Louisiana, an organization numbering 1,700 colored men, inclosing their memorial protesting against the passage of the Conger lard bill, stating "we have viewed this bill with great apprehension, affecting as it does an industry in which we and our fellow-citizens are deeply interested." They also pray for the appointment of a commission to examine into the condition of the cotton industry and the effect of this bill upon that industry. I move that the letter and memorial be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I present a petition of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of Boston, Mass., and also a like petition of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of New York, praying for the passage of Senate bill 3991, known as the pure-food bill. I also present a similar petition from Ross & Co., of Pittston, Pa. I move that these petitions be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER presented the petition of Farmers' Alliance, No. 67, of Burns, La Crosse County, Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1978) to establish ports of delivery at Meridian, at Jackson, and at Greenville, in the State of Mississippi, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HALE. By direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. R. 129) making an appropriation to purchase nickel ore or nickel matte to be used for certain naval purposes. I ask that the joint resolution lie on the table, as the House of Representatives has passed a similar measure, and when it reaches the Senate I shall ask it to take up the joint resolution I now report and substitute the House joint resolution for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6052) granting a pension to Martha A. Bowling;

A bill (H. R. 9026) granting a pension to N. W. Leasure;

A bill (H. R. 5835) to increase the pension of Mrs. Maria B. Judah; and

A bill (H. R. 11650) granting a pension to Emily Fry.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6338) granting a pension to Eben Muse;

A bill (H. R. 3796) granting a pension to Abraham Zimmerman; and

A bill (H. R. 6916) for the relief of Adeline Bly, widow of a soldier of the war of 1812.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7375) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan A. Dean;

A bill (H. R. 4825) granting a pension to Arthur Connery;

A bill (H. R. 2002) granting a pension to John C. Morrieon; and

A bill (H. R. 4179) granting a pension to Nancy J. Dorlos.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9565) granting an increase of pension to Joseph M. Wilson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4424) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to complete the appraisement and sale of lands patented to certain Flat-head Indians in the Bitter Root Valley in Montana, and providing for the removal of said patentees to the Jocko reservation, reported it without amendment.

SALLIE DOUGLASS HARTRANFT.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1840) granting a pension to Sallie

Dougllass Hartranft, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to said bill, and agree to the same.

C. K. DAVIS,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
E. N. MORRILL,
S. A. CRAIG,
CLARKE LEWIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report requires no action by the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 4430) providing for the purchase of the Maltby House for the use of the Senate; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to state the reason why this matter has been delayed so long. The Committee on Rules were of opinion early in the session that this property ought to be purchased. It was mentioned and acquiesced in pretty generally, but at that time it was discovered that there was a controversy about the title, the parties owning the property being in litigation with each other. That litigation has finally been settled, and now the property is offered to the Government upon the terms proposed in this bill. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, expressing my opinion that the offer ought to be accepted, if the property is to be purchased at all. Originally I think the proposition came from the Committee on Rules, but I simply introduce the bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 4431) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Joseph G. Utter; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SANDERS introduced a bill (S. 4432) for the relief of Henry R. Horr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 4433) directing the payment to Thomas F. Richardville his fees and expenses as delegate for the Western Miami Indians, of Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 4434) for the relief of Henry Bazinsky, administrator of Abraham Bazinsky, of Warren County, Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4435) for the relief of T. J. Powell, administrator of Warren M. Benton, deceased, of West Carroll Parish, Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SANDERS introduced a bill (S. 4436) for the relief of Ellen P. Clark; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

DISTRICT PUBLIC PARK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (S. 4) authorizing the establishment of a public park in the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report is in order. The question is on concurring in the report of the conference committee.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I have since the adjournment last evening read the conference report very carefully, as well as looked over the proceedings that preceded it in both Houses. I take it for granted from what the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, stated on the floor of the Senate last evening, that probably at this late hour in the session no better adjustment of the matter can be made than is contained in this report, and that its rejection would in all probability lead to further delay, if not the entire postponement of securing this property. I therefore shall content myself with saying that I trust at some early date the Senator in charge of this bill, who is the chairman of the committee, will endeavor by proper legislation to adjust this matter so that it will be more equitable to the people of this District, and that the government of this park may be taken out of the hands of the military and put where it properly belongs, under civilians, either the commissioners of the District of Columbia or others.

I regret to see that in the consideration of this bill the army officer assigned as one of the commissioners of the District of Columbia is alone selected to the exclusion of the two civilians. It is true that the bill provides that the President shall appoint three other persons to act with the engineer officer in charge of the District affairs. But I think the provision is unfortunate. I think the whole tendency of our legislation in the past has been to place under the control of army officers the construction of public buildings, the supervision of public parks, and other matters that properly belong to civilians. I am aware that the Engineer Corps of the Army stand high, and that in all the works they have had under their charge they have conducted the affairs very well, and economically in all probability, but I do not believe that it is wise policy to assign officers either of the Army or the Navy to employment where civilians alone have heretofore been engaged in the control. It seems, however, that we have reached a point in the history of the country when not only officers of the Army, but of the Navy, are constantly adding to their duties and making such encroachments. I think it is to be regretted. I think it ought to be checked.

At the same time I should not be willing to contest this report and delay it if I could, because I believe that the whole country is interested in having this great national park here at the Capital. I think it has probably been already too long delayed. Ten years ago the property could have been had for less than half of its present value, and a delay for a year or two longer I have no doubt would increase the cost of it half a million dollars, or more.

I therefore shall content myself with voting for the report with the expression of the hope that the chairman of the committee will at the next session of Congress bring in a bill remedying the defects of this measure both as to the amount to be paid by the people of the District of Columbia and as to the government of the park.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I have felt very great interest in the establishment of the Rock Creek Park. It is my fortune to be very familiar with the area of land embraced in it on account of my custom to ride a great deal on horseback. I do not believe that there can be found anywhere in the world a region of country more suitable for a public park than this. I think at the same time that we are placing an unjust burden upon the people of the city of Washington because it is proposed that they shall be taxed for one-half of the expense. The National Government should pay for the whole of it, but I am so anxious to see it established that I shall vote for the bill just as it is, hoping for amendments hereafter.

I think that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] makes a mistake in supposing that this park is to be under the officers of the Engineer Corps of the Army. I find in section 7 of the bill "that the public park authorized and established by this act shall be under the joint control of the commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, whose duty it shall be," etc. So it appears from the bill itself that the commissioners taken from civil life as well as the engineer officer, who constitute the government of the District of Columbia, will have charge of this park.

I have but one apprehension about the whole matter, and that is that the engineers will go in there and despoil the park of its natural beauties. The less work done upon it, the better. At a point just beyond Blagden mill there is an elbow in Rock Creek forming a dell which is one of the loveliest spots in the neighborhood of Washington, and I hope that it, at all events, may be preserved just as it is.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I shall vote against concurring in this report, because I do not think it was necessary to have provided for 2,000 acres of land for a park at the cost which is to be incurred for it. There are 700 acres, I believe, in the park for the great city of New York, and I have never heard any complaint that that was not large enough. Why we should put 2,000 acres in a park here, and put some of it so remotely from the city as this is for a park, I can hardly understand. Certainly the necessity for 2,000 acres for a park does not appear, especially when it is to be obtained at an expense of $600,000 to the District and $600,000 to the general Treasury, for of course the maximum will be reached, whatever that is, and it is just as well to say that that much shall be paid for the property.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have always been in favor of the establishment of this park. Years ago, when the subject was first broached, it was supposed that the park could be purchased for about $200,000. I have no doubt it could have been purchased at that time for $200,000 or less. Then all this property was suburban. It is not fit for cultivation as farms. It is open land. Every one who has ridden over it, as I have both on horseback and in carriages and in almost every way, knows that it is utterly useless for ordinary farming purposes. But the extension of the city streets and the extension of the city authority through the District of Columbia has now made this property more valuable, so that probably it is worth six times as much to-day as it was twenty years ago when the subject was first broached. It was a great mistake not to buy it then.

The Senator from Texas thinks that the amount of 2,000 acres is too much. I have no doubt that this will be the most valuable purchase ever made by the Government since the first foundation, because these 2,000 acres will increase enormously in value from year to year. The great mistake made in the bill, in my judgment, is that the Government takes the corporation of Washington into partnership with it in this purchase. I think, in the first place—I hardly like to use the word, but I regard it as a mean thing to do. The Government is able to pay for this property, and the District is not. There is no reason why the people of Washington should be compelled to pay for a portion of the property. The Government ought to own it. It would be a good investment taking that narrow view, but in any way you look at it the Government ought to own it absolutely.

Besides that, I do not think either the army engineers or the District commissioners ought necessarily to have any part or lot in it. We have now in the employ of the Government three men who are specially fitted for this particular work, men who have been trained by life-long experience, and who have the taste, the experience, and the ability to perform this duty especially, above all others, and I know no reason why an army officer is prepared for this kind of work. We have here three gentlemen who have had charge of this magnificent planting of trees in this city. All of them are landscape gardeners, all of them familiar with the selection of the ground to be taken and the lines of curvature, because it is a very irregular piece of land that is appropriated by this bill, and the lines of curvature, the questions of taste, have much more to do with it than the question of quantity. The boundaries of this reservation ought to be defined by men who know how the grounds can be improved, how they can be reclaimed, how a tree planted here or an open glade there will add to the beauty and value of the park. We have three men of that kind in the city of Washington, who are probably unsurpassed with but one exception. I know one, and that is the gentleman who prepared the plan of ornamenting the grounds about the Capitol. Those three men are admirably qualified for this work.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him that the bill provides for the appointment of three civilian commissioners by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not to lay off the grounds.

Mr. HARRIS. These experienced persons that the Senator refers to may be selected by the President, if the President chooses to select them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am very glad to hear it. I supposed the accomplished Chief Engineer of the Army and the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia were the persons designated to prescribe the boundaries of this park.

Mr. HARRIS. And there are three civilian commissioners besides.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I am glad if they are to be added. Now, in respect to any other objections that may be taken, it is only a question of the cost of the park, but it will be improving year by year.

If the objections I have made—and I have not examined the report very carefully—have been met by the appointment of three civilian commissioners, I have no opposition whatever to make to the passage of the bill; indeed, I think the sooner it is done the better, and then I hope the Government of the United States next winter instead of asking the city of Washington to pay a portion of this money especially for maintaining the park in the order which will be required, will repeal that clause and assume the whole burden of this matter and withdraw it from the District of Columbia.

Another thing that is unjust is to assess any of the supposed benefits of this park upon the adjoining proprietors. We had some such experience as that in Ohio at one time, and the law was repealed there, and there were none but the absolute and direct benefits or injuries to be considered. The idea of assessing a portion of this cost upon the truck farms and little patches that may be in the neighborhood or near by, or that, in the opinion of speculators and land-grabbers, may be supposed to be benefited by this park, it seems to me is not exactly the fair thing.

I know a little off from the line of this park there are many persons owning lands in small quantities used for garden patches and who raise truck for market; and to put upon them a special tax in the nature of an improvement or benefit to them is, it seems to me, unjust. It is true they may, on selling their homesteads and little places, get an increased price for the land they have to sell, but most of them do not want to sell, and they should not be burdened with special taxes of this kind; but I suppose this has gone too far to have it changed now, and therefore I hope the report will be adopted and the bill passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report of the conference committee.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 4322) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Kentucky River and its tributaries by the Louisville, Covington and Cincinnati Railway Company, the Carrollton and Louisville Railroad Company, and the Westport, Carrollton and Covington Railway Company, and their assigns; and Joint resolution (S. R. 95) to surrender certain bonds, drafts, and other papers in the Department of State to Robert S. Hargous, administrator of Louis S. Hargous, deceased.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 608) making an appropriation for the construction of new buildings and the enlargement of the military post at Plattsburgh, N. Y.;

A bill (H. R. 11154) to repeal part of section 6 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts," approved July 20, 1882;

A bill (H. R. 11928) defining certain duties of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 228) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to purchase nickel ore or nickel matte for use in the manufacture of nickel-steel armor, and for other naval purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 179) granting a pension to Ellen Courtney;
A bill (S. 577) granting a pension to Laura J. Ives;
A bill (S. 626) granting a pension to Mary E. Williams;
A bill (S. 754) granting a pension to James Malin;
A bill (S. 768) granting a pension to Frederick H. Macke;
A bill (S. 1059) granting an increase of pension to William W. Bliss;
A bill (S. 1154) to increase the pension of James Johnston;
A bill (S. 1237) granting a pension to Mary E. Crimmins, widow of Patrick Crimmins;
A bill (S. 1456) correcting the military history of David A. Parkhurst;
A bill (S. 1463) granting a pension to Betsey A. Mower;
A bill (S. 1480) granting a pension to Wick Morgan;
A bill (S. 1552) granting a pension to Louise Selden;
A bill (S. 1640) granting a pension to Helen A. Beebe;
A bill (S. 1696) for the relief of Asher W. Foster;
A bill (S. 1705) granting a pension to Ira Manley;
A bill (S. 1706) granting a pension to John Morgan;
A bill (S. 1712) granting a pension to Cynthia A. Gudgeon;
A bill (S. 2086) to correct the military record of John Hunsman, late of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Cavalry;
A bill (S. 2216) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna S. Taylor;
A bill (S. 2238) granting a pension to Elizabeth Rumsey, army nurse;
A bill (S. 2560) to increase the pension of Nelson Monroe;
A bill (S. 2597) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William S. Bennett;
A bill (S. 2750) to remove the charge of desertion against Almon R. Tobey;
A bill (S. 3183) granting a pension to Amanda M. Smyth;
A bill (S. 3191) for the relief of Albert Shell;
A bill (S. 3332) granting an increase of pension to Margaret E. Pierce;
A bill (S. 3342) granting a pension to Andrew Hopper;
A bill (S. 3414) granting a pension to James Melvin;
A bill (S. 3448) granting a pension to Clara H. McIntire;
A bill (S. 3538) granting a pension to John W. Bennett;
A bill (S. 3560) granting an honorable discharge to Almon Wetmore;
A bill (S. 3750) for the relief of William Elmendorf;
A bill (S. 3816) granting a pension to Margaret D. Marchand;
A bill (S. 3948) granting a pension to Morris Leavy;
A bill (S. 3988) granting a pension to Joseph B. Sellers;
A bill (S. 4209) granting a pension to Henry W. Haley;
A bill (S. 4243) granting an increase of pension to Gurden L. Wight;
A bill (S. 4254) granting a pension to Eliza Wallace;
A bill (H. R. 571) extending the limit of cost for public building at Hoboken, N. J., to meet the requirements of site;
A bill (H. R. 3857) to provide for the disposal of a portion of the United States military reservation at Baton Rouge, La.;
A bill (H. R. 7983) amending an act of Congress passed July 12, 1882, relative to fire limit of site of post-office and Federal building, Brooklyn, N. Y.; and Joint resolution (S. R. 128) to correct an error in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes," approved August 30, 1890.

JAMESTOWN AND NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar is now in order for one hour.

The bill (S. 1816) granting a right of way to the Jamestown and Northern Railway Company through the Devil's Lake Indian reservation, in the State of North Dakota, was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT QUINDARO, KANS.

The bill (S. 4405) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point within 1 mile above or below the town of Quindaro, in the county of Wyandotte and State of Kansas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NICKEL ORE OR MATTE FOR THE NAVY.

Mr. HALE. I call up the House joint resolution No. 228, which has been received from the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be twice read by its title.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 228) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to purchase nickel ore or nickel matte for use in the manufacture of nickel steel armor, and for other naval purposes was read twice by its title, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of that. Is it a House joint resolution?

Mr. HALE. It is a House joint resolution identical with the resolution which was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. I hope it will be passed, and the Senate joint resolution can then be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CAMERON. I offer an amendment to the House joint resolution, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 1 the following proviso:

Provided, That such nickel ore or nickel matte so purchased shall be equitably apportioned among the contractors for nickel-steel armor-plate for the vessels herein described.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. CAMERON.

Mr. INGALLS. Now let the joint resolution be read as it will stand if the amendment be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read as it will stand if amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase, at his discretion, nickel ore or nickel matte to be used in the manufacture of nickel-steel armor-plate for vessels already authorized or to be authorized to be constructed, and of armor-piercing projectiles, and for other naval purposes: Provided, That nickel ore or nickel matte so purchased shall be equitably apportioned among the contractors for nickel-steel armor-plate for the vessels herein described.

Sec. 2. That the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for this purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DOLPH. Of course I am not versed in the affairs of the Naval Committee, and I wish to ask a question for my own information. Where were the nickel plates which were experimented with at Annapolis manufactured?

Mr. HALE. In France. The nickel plates were manufactured at the establishment of Schneider & Co.

Mr. DOLPH. I understand they are forged steel plates with an alloy of 5 per cent. of nickel.

Mr. HALE. The plate which stood the test so remarkably as to attract the attention of the world is distinguished from other plates in the manner indicated by the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon by an alloy of about 5 per cent. of nickel, which gives greater tensile strength to the plate.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to inquire whether there are any other satisfactory tests of nickel plate for armor besides the one at Annapolis.

Mr. HALE. The matter has been before the naval world and the scientific world for some time, and experiments have been made leading in this direction and to this result. There have never, I may say, been so complete and convincing tests of the relative merits of armor plate as were made at Annapolis in the two trials which have taken place within the last fortnight. That is the most complete and the most demonstrative test which has been made.

Mr. DOLPH. Is the Senator able to state in a word what have been the results of other tests which have been made elsewhere—I mean in other countries?

Mr. HALE. The tests that have been made at Muggiano, Aboukoff, Russia, at Havre, in France, and Woolwich, England, had little to do with the nickel plate. They were confined to steel and compound plates. There has been no test, as I have said, in a complete way until that under the Secretary of the Navy at Annapolis. The result of that test was somewhat remarkable. Of course it is not intended that testing shall cease, and whatever is done will be done under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy; but that test demonstrated, if it demonstrated anything, and that in a remarkable way, that the nickel plate is far superior to either the solid steel plate of the French establishment or the compound plate of the Cammel Company which is the plate used upon English ships.

I have photographs which show the result of the test, and it demonstrates the use and benefit of the alloy of nickel to so great an extent that the Secretary of the Navy deems it essential that he shall while the opportunity offers, and it ought to be done at once, secure contracts for nickel enough to be used by the establishment that is using this plate-forging as an alloy, which he can furnish them as we furnish other substances to contractors, charging them accordingly; and it will enter into and be a component part of the plate that is to be made.

The Committee on Naval Affairs had a full hearing upon this subject, in which the matter of tests was submitted to them, and the Secretary and the officers in charge of the Ordnance Bureau appeared, and the committee unanimously authorized the report. The House of Representatives have passed a joint resolution the same as ours, and it is very desirable that it should pass to-day.

Mr. DOLPH. So that recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy and the action of the committee and of the House are based mainly upon the one experiment at Annapolis.

Mr. HALE. It is based largely upon that, although the whole matter had been in the mind of the Secretary and naval officers.

Mr. DOLPH. I inquire whether the contracts have already been made for the armor for the vessels referred to.

Mr. HALE. They have been made.

Mr. DOLPH. So that it will require a modification of them.

Mr. HALE. That is a matter which has been already gone over by the Secretary with the contractors, and they are entirely willing that this introduction of amalgamation of nickel as part of the plates should be incorporated in their work, which has not proceeded in any respect so far that it can not be done conveniently.

Mr. DOLPH. It will require, however, a modification of their contracts, and I suppose the nickel will be more expensive than forged steel.

Mr. HALE. Nickel is, of course, per pound more expensive than forged steel, but the Government supplies that and gets the benefits in the new contracts.

Mr. DOLPH. The benefit which the Government does receive in the way of reduction of price is a matter of agreement?

Mr. HALE. It is a matter of agreement between the Secretary and the contractors.

Mr. DOLPH. Is that covered by an existing law? I suppose the original proposition provided for forged steel armor, did it not?

Mr. HALE. No, there is no specification.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to ask another question. Can the Senator state what facilities there are in the United States for furnishing nickel or where it can probably be obtained?

Mr. HALE. The great supply of nickel in the world is found in two places—in Canada at Sudbury and in New Caledonia. The Canadian mine is owned by our citizens. There is no question of duty upon it, and these gentlemen are entirely willing to furnish the Government with this nickel unless I may say—and that is one reason for action now—the owners of the mines can sell the entire product to foreign powers who are desirous of getting it.

Mr. DOLPH. Does not the tariff bill which recently passed both Houses put nickel on the free-list?

Mr. HALE. Yes, all sent in crude, which is what is called nickel pig.

Mr. DOLPH. I would ask whether there are any mines that are being worked in the United States.

Mr. HALE. There is some product in Pennsylvania, but that has been to all intents and purposes exhausted.

Mr. DOLPH. I observe that the Representative from Oregon in the other House stated what I know to be a fact, that there are mines in Oregon.

Mr. HALE. It does not in any way interfere. I wish to say before sitting down that I do not think there is any necessity for the amendment presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. The Secretary of the Navy in dealing with this subject of course, more than any one, has the responsibility of carrying out the great work of rebuilding the Navy, which has been adopted by Congress, upon his shoulders, and he will, in arranging with the contractors, do what is the best and wisest thing under the circumstances. I doubt the advisability of directing him in terms to apportion this among the contractors. That is what, of course, he will endeavor to do. I hope the Senator will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. CAMERON. I shall insist upon a vote on my amendment at any rate. I think it is only proper that every person competing for this work should have equal advantages. Some of the contracts have already been made and others will be made, and no advantages should be given to persons who are supposed to be more favored than others. All should be treated alike, and no advantage should be given to one that the ordinary manufacturer would not have. It seems to me that the amendment will do no harm at all.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it has been claimed that the present Secretary has any favorites, as a rule.

Mr. CAMERON. I know that, but some other Secretary might have.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no objection in the world to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I think that if the joint resolution is to pass it is very wise that the provision should be made. Therefore, if the Senator desires to take a vote upon that amendment, I have no objection to doing that and going on with what I have to say about this resolution afterwards.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. GORMAN. Not yet.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous of hearing the Senator from Maryland and I can not hear a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. GORMAN. This joint resolution, coming in as it does at this late hour of the session, appropriating an additional million dollars for the naval establishment, it seems to me is very extraordinary. The terms of the resolution itself are more extraordinary, in my judgment, than the proposition to increase the already very large appropriations which we have made for the naval establishment by $1,000,000. For the past six years, during the entire last Administration and during the present Administration up to this time, the management of the Navy Department has given great satisfaction to the people of this country. The system inaugurated by Secretary Whitney, and practically followed out and probably increased in its efficiency by the present able Secretary of the Navy, has been a matter that all Americans have rejoiced at; but it was upon a theory well defined and adopted after long discussion, that, in the procurement of all the material necessary for the construction of vessels, contracts should be made on bids open to every manufacturer in the country. The result has been that three or four great establishments have been created and have given an impetus in the manufacture of steel and structural iron that was unknown in the history of the world until the past six years. In the construction of the vessels alone the Government shops have been in competition with the private establishments. But now comes the proposition under this resolution for the Government to enter into partnership in procuring the material that is used in the construction of the steel armor plates.

Up to this time the ingenious and enterprising men engaged in the private manufacture of steel have been the ones to procure from abroad by purchase and otherwise the right to use the various processes in the manufacture of steel, and all that the Government has done or attempted to do or can wisely, in my judgment, attempt to do, is to fix the standard of the steel that it desires to have placed in these vessels. Hence the contracts were made and a close inspection of all the steel furnished that has been made from the very incipency until the completion of the plates and their attachment to the ribs of the vessels.

These contracts have been made, and the steel is on hand to some extent, when suddenly, with only a single test, although it has been looked at heretofore and elsewhere in other countries—I mean with a single test of these plates at Annapolis—a very remarkable test, it is true, in support of the efficiency of this particular steel plate treated with nickel, a proposition comes in here at the very last hours of the session to increase the appropriation for the naval establishment from two and a half million dollars to three and a half million dollars, or another million dollars, and the Government is to enter into partnership with the manufacturers. How will the Secretary of the Navy be able to hold the contractors responsible for the efficiency of plates to be made hereafter, when he furnishes a part of the material? If it comes, then, to the point of want of endurance or bad construction, the contractor will say he is not responsible, and you will have more suits on hand than you have ever had before, at least since the spring of 1885, when this new arrangement with the Navy Department began. It must be unsatisfactory.

Besides that, I think it is the height of unwisdom to place in the hands of any one officer of this Government a million dollars with which he may go out and buy nickel ore and nickel matte and to buy this material upon the basis of a single trial at Annapolis.

We on this side can not probably stay this matter, but it does seem to me the height of unwisdom, and while I have great respect for the present honorable Secretary of the Navy and believe that he intends to perform his duty as faithfully as did his predecessor, this is, in my judgment, going back to the old system which was carried on for twenty years in this Department, and which resulted in the unanimous opinion of both parties in this country that it ought to be changed. It was changed, and, as I said, to the great gratification of the American people. Now we go back practically to the old line, for this is the first step, of buying the material and going into joint partnership with the contractors who are to make these plates hereafter. It can have in the end but one result, inefficient work for the Government, and extravagance, if not corruption, will follow in its wake.

I do not believe, with all the improvements that are being made in metals, that it is wise, upon a single experiment at Annapolis, for the Government to enter at once into the market as a purchaser for all the nickel in Canada. I am aware that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has stated that there is a deposit in his State. There are several deposits in this country. It may be that with this large sum of money you can open up additional mines and find this metal here, but as the case stands now it is practically an appropriation to buy the product of a single mine in Canada.

If the Government desires that metal, if this one single test is a demonstration that it is the best which can be used in the construction of these vessels, the Secretary of the Navy has ample authority, under the appropriation of two and a half million dollars, to change his contracts with the Bethlehem works and change his contracts with Mr. Cramp and the other contractors who are constructing these vessels, and provide that those plates shall contain a certain per cent. of nickel, and care should be taken that it is inspected in every process from the ore to the plate, as is done now and was done so satisfactorily under the last administration, and has been up to this time under the present administration.

There is no necessity for this appropriation and this departure, except to give the administration, as I believe without proper consideration, in the last hours of the session $1,000,000 more of the people's money to be expended.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, by the rule under which the Senate has been acting by consent for the last two weeks, after the routine morning business one hour has been devoted to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII. This is not a Calendar proposition. This is a matter which came over from the other House this morning and was laid before the Senate at once. I think it ought to proceed, with the understanding that when concluded an additional fifty-three minutes shall be devoted to the consideration of the Calendar, for we only consumed some seven minutes in its consideration this morning, when this subject was interposed. I ask that that understanding may be had.

Mr. HALE. I think that is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Calendar is to be under consideration for one hour, and with that understanding the Chair is of opinion that the time devoted to this joint resolution should not come out of the hour devoted to the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR. If the debate upon this proposition is to continue, I shall reserve the right to interpose an objection at any time.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall be glad to say a few words about the joint resolution. I am very sorry to hear the remarks of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and I wish it were proper to state all that we know about this matter.

One of his points is that we have hitherto provided carefully that all material for our new ships and armor should be of American production. Now, the tendency of experiments for some time, and especially the culminating experiment at Annapolis the other day, shows that if we are to make the best kind of plate, it should have 1 or 2 or 3 per cent. or a fraction more of nickel in it. That is settled.

Mr. COCKRELL. Five per cent.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Secretary said three and a fraction, but it is known that it should be from one to five or anywhere along there. I think that is clearly decided. That is the judgment of armor and gun makers. Now, we have not enough nickel in this country. We cannot supply it.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Connecticut entirely misunderstood me.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought the Senator made the point that this was not of American production.

Mr. GORMAN. Not at all. I understand perfectly that the party in power and a very large number of us here believe that is the right policy, and we have so required in the manufacture of guns.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is the right policy.

Mr. GORMAN. I made no reference to the fact that this article was of foreign production. The point I make is that the Secretary of the Navy, if this resolution shall pass, will reverse the policy of the Government by entering on the purchase of the material itself out of which these plates are to be made, and that it will lead to extravagance and, in my judgment, in the end to corruption. We ought to rely upon the manufacturers to procure their own material, as they do in the case of the steel plates.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut will permit me a word further, I wish to say that I purposely avoided any reference to the improvement feature of this thing, noting at the same time mentally that we have reached a point in the construction of our Navy where that policy can be carried out absolutely and rigidly as the majority party heretofore have intended that it should be.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have heard these matters discussed elsewhere and among scientific men and among experts for a good while, and I know the precise situation of the case. I know that, to be valuable to the United States, quick action is necessary. I believe the transaction to be not only wise, but in an eminent degree honorable to the energy and patriotism of the Secretary of the Navy, and I think that a prolonged discussion of the matter will entangle it and be an injury to the country.

Mr. HALE. I agree entirely with what the Senator from Connecticut has said. This is a matter about which every well-wisher of the country can have but one sentiment. There may be differences of opinion, like those developed by the Senator from Maryland, as to the manner of doing the thing, but that everybody desires that in this great work, which we have embarked in, of building up the Navy, the proper material should be put into the new ships, is an admitted fact.

Now, this emergency comes late in the session because the situation has been developed of late. The matter was brought before the Naval Committee in a very full meeting, and on seeing the facts every member of the committee on both sides of the Chamber, representing both parties, said to the Secretary, "We give you our God-speed, and this subject can hardly give rise to debate or to bringing out facts and circumstances and situations that would embarrass the Secretary, but we will take hold and help carry it through the Senate as a wise and patriotic measure."

Rather than take up more time in answering in terms the Senator from Maryland, I very much desire that we should get a vote upon this joint resolution. There is no departure from the policy of the Government, excepting as the emergency requires a variation of it, and the Secretary can be trusted in this matter as we trust him in relation to the making of contracts. I hope we may dispose of the joint resolution promptly.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to trust the Secretary of the Navy within certain reasonable limits in regard to all matters that come within his proper jurisdiction. I regard him as a singularly able, efficient, and patriotic person, animated by but one desire, and that is what is the best possible for the service of which he is the head. But it seems to me we are going off rather suddenly upon this matter. A single experiment of plate manufactured, no one knows how and practically no one knows where, has seemed to demonstrate that a combination of iron and nickel makes a metal or substance which is better for armor plates than iron alone or steel alone.

But, Mr. President, the plate which was tried at Annapolis was made in France. I am not informed that the plate was subjected in the process of manufacture to the inspection of Government officials, so that we do not know exactly what the compound was. It may be entirely different from what we suppose it to be. It is a single experiment anyhow. Of course I defer to those who have heard more than I have, but I have never heard of there having been more than one experiment made to test the comparative merits of steel alone and steel and nickel combined.

The very first thing that will result from this is the legal consequences if this project shall be carried out, that the Government, and not the contractors, will become responsible for the quality of the plate furnished. No matter what amount of nickel may be furnished or what combination may be used, if the plates which result from this combination are what they ought not to be, the Government, and not the contractors, will be responsible, and therefore it introduces a new element into all these contracts, and, instead of holding the contractor responsible for the character, the strength, the durability, or the efficiency of the plate which he is to make and with which we armor our ships, the Government assumes that responsibility alone.

The Secretary of the Navy of course would not put plates on a ship that were not good. I agree to that. But how do we know that it will not be discovered to-morrow that some other combination is even better than this, and if we are to do this thing, if we are to depart from the contract and from precedent, if we are to ignore all the safeguards with which we have surrounded this question of the construction of ships, why not say—and that would be better—that, if the Secretary of the Navy in the progress of the construction of these ships shall discover any material better than that which is now being used according to the contract or which may be supplied under the terms of the contract, he may contract for the substitution of that metal with such addition to the price as in his judgment may be correct in order to make up the additional cost to the contractor?

Mr. President, there have been experiments in other directions made, equally interesting, but perhaps not on so large a scale, but to some extent as satisfactory as the one of which we have had information as having recently occurred at Annapolis. The introduction of aluminum into the pores of the iron, whereby the pores are filled in the first place, results in making the metal more dense, whereby also the refractory substances are expelled, not only by reason of the introduction of aluminum, but by reason of the fact that the metal remains liquid for a longer period of time, whereby the gases and other substances, such as phosphorus, sulphur, and things of that sort in the metal, are allowed to escape. The sudden congealing of iron after melting always prevents this escape of the gases. The increased rigidity of iron and steel by the introduction of aluminum tends to produce in many cases this very result.

I do not say that for the purpose of putting aluminum against nickel, but I only say this is a good wide field, upon the borders of which alone we have touched, and I think it would be a great deal wiser (if we are to commit this discretion to the Secretary of the Navy to abolish these contracts and substitute something else) to say so and let it apply in the very widest possible way and confer on him ample discretion and give him ample funds to meet that discretion, and let him avail himself of the best the market affords, nickel, if it is nickel, to-day, and aluminum, if it is aluminum, to-morrow, or a combination of those two, and the steel besides, if that is found better.

In other words, I would put the Secretary in a position to avail himself of the present condition of things and of what may be developed from time to time; but on a single experiment to authorize him to purchase nickel—not that the contractors may purchase nickel, but that the Secretary shall purchase nickel to be furnished to the contractors whereby the discretion of the Government and the authority of the Government and the risk of the Government are to be substituted for the risk and the discretion and the authority of the contractors as to the entire structure—if that is to be done, as it will be done if this resolution passes, we ought to say so directly, and, instead of saying it as to a single material, as the result of a single experiment not yet published, probably, in one-tenth of the papers of this country, we ought to say that, in view of these changing conditions, and they are such, and are so recognized everywhere, that we give to the Secretary authority to postpone contracts, to change contracts, and substitute new materials in whole or in part for the materials which contracts made under the law now require.

I object to this resolution because of these reasons, because it is a dangerous thing at the close of a session, when everybody is willing that almost anything shall be done that he is not absolutely certain is wrong, and we are all waiting for the words which shall dismiss us from a long and tedious service and enable us to get away, to bring in a measure of this kind which overturns the entire substance and effect of all the contracts and all the elaborate legislation we have provided heretofore in regard to the construction of ships. There is nothing left of it; but simply on the result of two or three shots fired at Annapolis we propose to undo everything that has been done after years of patient labor to provide the ways and means whereby the Navy may be built up without the resulting scandal which has come heretofore from unlimited executive discretion.

But I do not object now to the discretion if the Secretary of the Navy should say as to one ship or two ships as to any work which is to be done during the time that is to elapse before Congress again reassembles, within a two or three months' limit until the first day of the next session, he ought to have discretion to experiment with one of these ships or two of them. I am willing to say so; but I would make the change of the contracts merely pro tanto. I would make it apply to a limited extent. I never would commit myself to a policy, following so narrow an experiment, that nickel should be purchased by the Government to be supplied to the contractors, as being the one thing needful to make improved armor for our ships and warrant us in getting away from all those safeguards which by the language of the statute we have placed around the exercise of executive functions in the construction of these ships. I would not commit myself at this moment to a project of that sort.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question in regard to the utilization of aluminum. I understand that it is now claimed by some company in Chicago that they can manufacture it at about 15 cents a pound. I heard that they claimed that some time ago.

Mr. PLUMB. It is claimed that aluminum can be manufactured a great deal cheaper than that. There is no metal that is so widely diffused, so plentiful in the world as aluminum. All clays practically contain aluminum, some more and some less, but the difference in the value of the clay which contains the aluminum is not so much in the amount of aluminum, but in the absence or presence of refractory substances in combination. But it has been stated to me on what appeared to be very good authority that aluminum can be made for 3 or 4 cents a pound. I am told that the added cost where it has been used in combination with iron is very slight indeed, and it is made by a cheap, inexpensive, and comparatively familiar process. But I do not dwell upon that except merely by way of suggestion to show that there are other fields of investigation besides nickel, and other combinations besides that of steel and nickel, which may be expected to yield some fruitful results in the near future.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to ask right in that line if the Senator has any information or data in regard to experiments made upon steel or iron with the addition of aluminum or any compound of them. I think some years ago the Senator showed me a piece of iron that was supposed to have in some measure absorbed some aluminum, and I would like to know the effect of it and what the experiments have shown.

Mr. PLUMB. Some months ago I was told by a gentleman connected with an establishment in New Jersey that in a factory there this process of combination was being used to the effect of not only making a very much better material, but by reason of the greater liquidity of the material 30 tons could be made a day in place of 20 by the same machinery. But I do not speak of this as evidencing that there is that definiteness of result which might be looked for or required in a case of this kind; but that that is to be one of the results of the combination between aluminum and steel and iron for the purpose of making a better metal than either I have no doubt is to come in the near future, if it has not already come.

All I want is that the Secretary shall have that wide authority to enable him to say, "I have done the best I could with relation to modern discoveries and not been limited to one single thing which may prove a failure."

Mr. GRAY. The joint resolution which has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Naval Affairs after a meeting which was a full meeting, which every member of that committee attended, and after a conference between that committee and the Secretary of the Navy, is one that seems to me ought not to receive much opposition in its passage from the Senate after they understand the leading reasons which provoked the offering of the resolution.

The circumstances in which we find ourselves in regard to naval architecture are somewhat exceptional. It has been the good fortune of the United States in its happy-go-lucky policy that during the last quarter of a century we have not entered into the competition that has been going on all over the world between artillery and armor. Those costly experiments have been made by other nations, by England, by France, by Germany, and we are now the heirs, so to speak, of the results which have been arrived at from the experiments that have been made at the expense of other peoples. We have arrived at the point when the American people seem to think we can no longer pursue that policy and must make for ourselves a navy. At the very outset, while these experiments are still being made, by what seems to be a very happy discovery, if the succeeding experiments shall vindicate the results of the first test that was made at Annapolis the other day, it appears that the combination of steel and iron armor is inferior to the amalgam of steel and nickel, which for the first time, by experiment made by the ordnance officers of the United States Navy at Annapolis, demonstrated its superiority to the other.

The Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Ordnance, and the gentlemen who are conducting these experiments seem to have been wide awake and alert and properly enterprising in this matter, and they have called the attention of Congress to the necessity of pursuing these experiments, and if they shall vindicate the results of the first experiment, that we shall be able to reap the beneficial results to the naval architecture of this country which alone can make those experiments useful.

Now, it so happens that the supply of nickel in the world is not deposited universally over the surface of the earth. The sources of nickel supply, I believe, are largely found upon this continent. There is a nickel mine in Canada and there are one or two deposits in the United States, but not in sufficient quantity in the United States to justify the belief that if these experiments are to produce the same results that the first have produced we can hope to receive from the mines of the United States within our borders a sufficient supply to amalgamate the steel needed for the armor of all the vessels which are now contracted for; and therefore the Secretary of the Navy, very wisely, I think, has asked for authority of law to purchase nickel in his discretion in such wise that he may be prepared to reap the results that may be demonstrated to be proper and useful by the continuance of these experiments which have been commenced at Annapolis, at the proving-grounds, that he may be able to provide for the Ordnance Department a supply of nickel, and prevent its being engrossed and forestalled by competing nations that are quite as wide awake as we are, and who were probably informed as soon as the public in the United States of the result of the recent experiments at Annapolis of the 8-inch gun on this plate of amalgam of steel and nickel.

We should not be in such a situation and should not so cripple the executive hand of the Government that we can not in a businesslike way and on proper grounds be able to demonstrate and, as I said before, reap the result of our own experiments and of the skill and enterprise of our own ordnance officers. As I understand, the million dollars that is put at the disposal of the Secretary of the Navy for this purpose will, in his opinion, enable him to control a sufficient amount of this nickel to supply the contractors, if it shall be demonstrated by a further line of experiments that that is the proper amalgam to make and is going to be the toughest and most capable of resistance of any of these armor-plates that have yet been constructed.

Of course these experiments are expected to be carried on to a larger extent. The Secretary will then be, if this joint resolution passes, in a condition to avail himself of the results of our own genius and the experience and enterprise and skill and invention of our own people.

I therefore think, Mr. President, it is eminently wise that under these exceptional circumstances, not reversing the policy, not making it a precedent in these matters, but solely upon the exceptional reasons I have given and others that might be given and are understood by the Executive, we should pass this resolution and give him the authority and the means to make fruitful the course of experiments that he has already entered upon.

Now, I for one am perfectly willing to trust this discretion to the Secretary of the Navy. I do not think that there is any branch of this Government that is more wisely and more honestly administered than the Navy Department. I think, of all the eminent Secretaries who have preceded the present incumbent of that office, none has better assured the people of the United States of the honesty and integrity and intelligence with which the Department is administered than the present head of that Department, and I for one am perfectly willing to trust him on these exceptional grounds with this discretion in regard to this purchase of nickel.

It may be possible, but is not probable, that further experiments may lead to a different result than that which is now indicated. That is possible; but the nickel which is purchased by the Secretary, I am sure, will be purchased in such fashion and on such terms that there will be no loss to the United States, and the price at which it is bought and the manner in which it is bought will insure the United States against loss, or a very small loss in that direction. I think we can very well take the risk, under the circumstances I have detailed, of a small loss in that respect in order not to be bound after these experiments are made, and absolutely disabled from going ahead and reaping the fruits of our discoveries.

I therefore hope that this joint resolution will pass and pass promptly.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I will not object to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest that the joint resolution lie over until it can be looked into a little to see if it can not be further amended in such a way as to make it safer perhaps in any event. There can not be any question about it between to-day and to-morrow. Certainly for myself, having contributed somewhat to build up the most elaborate structure of legislation that clothed the Secretary of the Navy with more power than statute ever provided before, I feel a little bit against turning that over in the way which the Senator from Maine proposes. Of course, he has had much more to do with it than I have had, but it is a dead give-away so far as the executive control is concerned. I hope he will consent to have the joint resolution go over until to-morrow so that it can be examined and we can see if there can not be something added to it which will make it a little bit more palatable and at the same time a little more certain that we shall not wake up at the next session, or at some other, feeling that we had put our foot into it.

Mr. INGALLS. May I inquire what bill we are acting upon?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the joint resolution will be reported.

The SECRETARY. House joint resolution 228, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to purchase nickel ore or nickel matte.

Mr. INGALLS. When did that come to the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It came to the Senate this morning.

Mr. INGALLS. It can only be read once to-day, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. The joint resolution was laid before the Senate and read twice, and taken up.

Mr. INGALLS. Any Senator has a right to object at any stage to another reading of the bill, and if it is thought that there is not sufficient information it is in the power of any Senator, under the rule, to call for the regular order in connection with the parliamentary stage of the joint resolution. I have no desire to interfere, so far as I am personally concerned, but at the same time it is proper that those who are opposed to this joint resolution should understand that it is within their power to prevent the third reading to-day, that no consent can be given, because unanimous consent would apply only to the reading that was called for.

Mr. HALE. There is no doubt about the point made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], and it is a point that can be made on at least a large proportion of the legislation that we enact, so far as the Senate does enact it. We have at the end of a session to depend largely upon unanimous consent for the doing of business, and it is one of the strong points in the Senate that under unanimous consent and under a liberal system of rules, with no coercion, the Senate does the business of the country.

Now, if any Senator feels that this matter is one that ought to go over for a day and is inclined to invoke the rule, of course it must go over. It is a very important measure. It is a measure in which there are no real dangers. It is a measure the failure of the passage of which may be attended with grave difficulties and dangers, and I have been very desirous that we should get it through to-day. To-morrow we may be in the face of the tariff bill or other bills that are upon the Order of Business, and I should be very glad if we could come to a conclusion and vote upon this proposition. I have no fear that when the Senate votes upon it the joint resolution will not be adopted by the Senate. I am only seeking to avoid delay, and I should be very glad to have a vote now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Maine will permit the joint resolution to lie over until to-morrow. I do not see that that can in any way interfere with its passage. There will be no trouble, so far as I am concerned, about getting unanimous consent to take it up to-morrow. This, however, is an extraordinary proceeding, and it appears from what the Senator from Maine himself has said, and the Senator from Delaware, that there may be state reasons, which it is thought proper not to communicate to members of the Senate outside of the secrets of the committee-room, why this joint resolution should be rushed through at this time, and they may be perfectly good.

The Senator from Maine went so far as to say that all patriotic men would be in favor of the passage of the resolution instantly. I confess there are quite a number of us who believe we are patriotic and are very anxious to give the Navy all that is necessary. I have great confidence in the present Secretary, as I stated when on the floor before, and hesitation here on this question is no reflection upon him, on his integrity or his ability; but this is the first time in my service that I have known in a matter of construction of vessels of war, the purchase of material of any sort or description for the use of the Government, that the fullest and the freest information has not been given inside of the committee and outside of the committee. Now, I know nothing personally about the circumstances surrounding this case except what I have gathered.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

Mr. GORMAN. One moment, if the Senator will permit me, and I want him to have the benefit of what I say, so that he may throw light upon the subject. We know nothing except that which comes through the public press and through the sources from which we gather information about the doings and affairs of the Government, that five or six Americans have purchased a mine in Canada, which they claim is one of the greatest mines in the world producing nickel. It has not been profitable on their hands up to this time, and with the knowledge that the Governments which are trying the experiment of the manufacture of plates composed of steel and of nickel from this mine, the process of which is not known except to the manufacturers, patented, as I am informed—of course, I do not claim that this information is accurate—now comes the single test, having great success, as the officers of the Navy Department claim, at Annapolis, and on that single test a joint resolution is to be rushed through at the closing hours of the session, authorizing an officer of this Government to contract for the whole output of that mine.

Now, it may be all right; it may be that the British Government or the French Government are bidders in secret and that our officers have an advantage by outbidding them, and it requires a million dollars to take it; but I submit that Senators who have voted as I have for liberal appropriations of twenty-three or twenty-four million dollars for the Navy this year are entitled at least in private to some more information than we get, and it will not do for my friend from Maine, whom I respect, as he knows, to intimate in his statement that every patriotic man who wants to build up the Navy will be in favor of this measure. It is possible I may be in favor of it. I have never hesitated, as the Senator knows perfectly well, to vote for most liberal appropriations for the Navy, to put in the hands of the present Secretary any power that was necessary and proper to enable him to go on with the Navy, for I have great confidence in him and respect for him, but I do insist that we are entitled to a little more light on this subject, and I hope the Senator will permit the joint resolution to go over.

Mr. HALE. I rose, Mr. President, for the purpose of acceding to the suggestion that the joint resolution go over until to-morrow, all the more willingly because I know that in this matter Senators have the same patriotic purpose in view, whatever may have been their suggestions in the course of this debate or wherever they may sit in this Chamber. I have had too long experience with the Senator from Maryland on this floor and upon important committees to in any way question either his patriotism or his singular good sense and wisdom as a legislator; and I am all the more willing that the measure should go over to be called up to-morrow morning at the end of the routine morning business, because I would be glad for the Senator to inform himself more fully, not that I mean to intimate that he lacks information upon the matter or upon any phase of the subject that will tend to give more light. The more this is looked into the more it will be seen that it is important now to pass it. The difference between to-day and to-morrow is not vital.

I would say in answer to one suggestion of the Senator that the company which owns the Canadian mine has made a plate to be tested; that the Canadian mine people knew nothing whatever about it but the test made by the great establishments abroad; that each of the tests was furnished by the establishments abroad as their best specimens for resisting projectiles; and it is not a matter of any account to the owners of the Canadian mine whether the Government takes this or not. They can sell it abroad. They can sell every pound that they can produce there and at larger prices than it can be bought by us. But we are confronted with an emergency that has come about now in the last days of the session. We have got to act upon it and meet it or reject it. I have no fear that the Senate, if this measure goes over until to-morrow, will reject the proposition, and therefore I consent that it may go over without any formal point of order being made, and I shall call it up, with the leave of the Senate, to-morrow morning directly after the routine morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over. The renewed consideration of the Calendar will now commence, with fifty-three minutes remaining of the hour allotted to it.

FLORIDA LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL in relation to the claims of Florida under the swamp-land grant.

Mr. SAWYER. That resolution is adversely reported. Let it go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It goes over under Rule IX.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL relating to the improper and unlawful selections under alleged railroad and swamp and overflowed land grants in Florida.

Mr. PASCO. The same course may be pursued as to that resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under Rule IX.

LIST OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask leave to submit a resolution at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and read, if there be no objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate cause to be prepared an alphabetical list of all private claims which have been before the Senate, with the action of the Senate thereon, since the 4th day of March, 1881; and that he communicate the same to the Senate when completed.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the resolution must go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. It will involve, if adopted, ultimately an expenditure of money.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator if the resolution is reported from a committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I was just stating that I supposed it must be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. It is not reported, but introduced.

Mr. PADDOCK. The inquiry I made was whether it was reported.

Mr. SPOONER. It is just introduced.

Mr. PADDOCK. Then I suggest that it be referred to the proper committee having charge of such subjects.

Mr. SPOONER. I say it must be sent to the Contingent Expenses Committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, we can not hear a word of what is going on over there.

Mr. SPOONER. I introduced the resolution with the statement that if it is adopted by the Senate it will involve ultimately the expenditure of some money, and for that reason I suppose it must be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I ask that it be so referred.

Mr. PADDOCK. The inquiry I put to the Senator from Wisconsin was if it had been reported from any standing committee having jurisdiction of the particular subject covered by the resolution itself. I think it would be better to have it go to the Committee on Claims and get a report from that committee, and then refer it to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I think that method has obtained generally in respect to such resolutions. For one, as a member of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, I think it would be very desirable, and that committee would be gratified to have resolutions of this kind go to the committee having jurisdiction of the subject to first consider them.

Mr. SPOONER. Similar work has been done by the Secretary of the Senate before under resolutions identical with this one, and it need not go to a standing committee to be reported on its merits. It must be quite apparent to any Senator, I think, that it is important to the Committee on Claims in the discharge of its duties, and also to Senators, that we may be able to turn to an index of all the private claims.

Mr. PADDOCK. Undoubtedly it would be important.

Mr. SPOONER. The Committee on Claims will have no further meetings at this session of Congress. I think, under the rule, the resolution ought to go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. If the committee desire to report it back with the recommendation that it be referred to a standing committee, that course can be pursued.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. There is a list made up by the Secretary of the Senate to the 4th day of March, 1881.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a list from the foundation of the Government.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, up to that date.

Mr. COCKRELL. The list is contained in different documents, and some of them are accurate and some of them are not. The first reports were published in quarto form, and they are quite large. Then there were two volumes of reports published some years ago bringing the list of claims presented to the Senate and House of Representatives down to 1881; and as this additional list can not be completed in time for our use at the coming session it ought to include claims to the 4th of March, 1891, and the order ought to so specify.

Mr. SPOONER. It would be a continuation of the record in alphabetical form, a transcript of a portion of which heretofore printed I hold in my hand. It is an alphabetical list of private claims. It shows in separate columns the name of the claimant, the nature or object of the claim, the Congress and session in which it was introduced and considered, how brought before the Senate, whether by petition, memorial, or bill, the committee to which referred, the nature of the report, the number of the report, the number of the bill, how disposed of in the Senate, whether laid upon the table, or recommended, or passed, with a statement under the head of "remarks." These claims are coming in all the time. There are now over a thousand before the Committee on Claims, and it seems to me quite obvious that this record should be completed. I think the suggestion which the Senator from Missouri makes, as all suggestions which he does make on such subjects, is a valuable one and ought to be adopted.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt that we ought to have the index, and it ought to go up to the 4th of March next.

Mr. SPOONER. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it will be from the 4th of March, 1881, to the 4th of March, 1891.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the resolution go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses and they can report upon it.

Mr. PADDOCK. As the precedents run in that direction, I withdraw my objection to a reference to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. COCKRELL. First let the resolution be amended so as to take the index up to the 4th of March, 1891.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so amended, and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

OSAGE RIVER BRIDGE IN MISSOURI.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2396) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Osage River at some accessible point in the county of Benton, in the State of Missouri.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, after the word "Springfield," to strike out "Railway" and insert "Railroad;" so as to read: That the Chicago, Hannibal and Springfield Railroad Company, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 3, after the word "river," to strike out "beyond what is necessary to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted;" in line 9, after the word "location," to strike out "the topography of" and insert "the high and low water lines upon;" in line 11, after the word "river," to strike out "the shore lines at high and low water" and insert "the direction and strength of the currents at all stages of the water, with the soundings accurately showing the bed of the stream and;" in line 14, after the word "bridges," to insert "such map to be sufficiently in detail to enable the Secretary of War to judge of the proper location of said bridge;" and in line 20, after the word "be," to insert "commenced or;" so as to make the section read:

That said bridge shall be constructed and built without interference with the security and convenience of navigation of said river; and in order to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of one-half mile above and one-half mile below the proposed location, the high and low water lines upon the banks of the river, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages of the water, with the soundings accurately showing the bed of the stream, and the location of any other bridge or bridges, such map to be sufficiently in detail to enable the Secretary of War to judge of the proper location of said bridge, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, after line 18, to insert:

All changes in said bridge required at any time by the Secretary of War shall be made at the expense of the persons or corporation owning or controlling said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 2, after the word "way," to insert "across said bridge and its approaches;" and in line 3, after the word "lines," to strike out "across said bridge;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for such postal and telegraph lines as the Government may construct or control.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE FOR POSTAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask that House bill 10086, which was passed over, reserving its place, the other day, may now be taken up. It grants the opportunity of a vacation of fifteen days to the post-office clerks.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10086) granting leaves of absence to clerks and employes in first and second class post-offices.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was read when formerly considered, and the amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. When this bill was called up on a former occasion I objected to its further consideration, and it was allowed to pass over without prejudice. While I do not abate my opposition to the policy of the bill and while I shall vote against it, I do not feel that I should be quite justified in standing in the way of the Senate taking a vote upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting leaves of absence to clerks and employes in first and second class post-offices, and to employes of the Post-Office Department employed in the mail-bag repair shops connected with said Department."

PORTRAIT OF JOHN PAUL JONES.

Mr. VOORHEES. I beg the indulgence of the Senate to turn back to Order of Business 824, being the bill (S. 3397) for the purchase of George B. Matthews's portrait of John Paul Jones, reported from the Committee on the Library some time ago and passed over in my absence. It is the only portrait of him that we shall own if we purchase it, and it is an admirable work of art.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $750 for the purchase from George B. Matthews of his portrait painting of John Paul Jones.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALTAMAHA RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 10289) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Altamaha River was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, which were, in section 3, line 4, after the word "same," to insert "and its approaches;" in line 6, after the word "freight," to strike out "over said bridge;" in line 8, before the word "shall," to strike out "they" and insert "it;" and in line 11, after the word "telegraph," to insert "and telephone;" so as to make the section read:

That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same and its approaches of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States, or passengers or freight than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads or public highways leading to said bridge, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads of the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for said postal-telegraph purposes.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SAWYER, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

ADMINISTRATRIX OF GEORGE W. LAWRENCE.

The bill (S. 3270) for the relief of the administratrix of the estate of George W. Lawrence was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to inquire into and determine how much the hull of the United States double-enders Agawam and Pontoosuc cost the contractor, George W. Lawrence, over and above the contract price and allowances for extra work, and to enter judgment in favor of Thankful Lawrence, administratrix of said George W. Lawrence: Provided, That the judgment shall not exceed the sum allowed by the board convened in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate of the United States, dated March 9, 1865, of which Thomas O. Selfridge was the president, the said allowance being set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 18, Thirty-ninth Congress, first session.

Sec. 2. That at the hearing or on the trial of any suit so commenced either party, plaintiff or defendant, shall have the right to use before the court any testimony or documents which may be relevant to and competent upon the issues joined between the parties, and that the proceedings, trial, decision, and judgment of the said court shall be had in the same manner as in all other cases before the said Court of Claims, and have the same effect; and that either party, plaintiff or defendant, may appeal from the decision or judgment of the said Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner as now provided for in other cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let a part of the report in that case be read, the report without the exhibits. It is short.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HIGGINS September 19, 1890:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3270) for the relief of the administratrix of George W. Lawrence, have had the same under consideration and respectfully report:

George W. Lawrence, the decedent, on the 9th of September, 1862, entered into two agreements with the United States, through the Navy Department, for the construction of the hulls of two wooden double-enders, called the Agawam and Pontoosuc. The contract provided that the vessels should be launched within one hundred and twenty-six days, and then be delivered to the Government, who through other contractors would supply the machinery. Fifty days were allowed for the attachment of the machinery; whereupon George W. Lawrence was to do that work which followed and was necessary to secure the machinery in place.

The fifty days for the attachment of the machinery expired in the case of the Agawam on June 10, 1863, and in the case of the Pontoosuc on July 9, 1863. Through no fault of Mr. Lawrence or his agents, the machinery was not attached to the Agawam until December 9, 1863, and on the Pontoosuc until May 16, 1864. During this prolonged time the advance in the price of labor and material accompanied the rise in gold prices, and this delay imposed upon the contractor, through no fault of his, the loss resulting from purchase of material and the employment of labor at the enhanced prices. The contract price for each vessel was $75,000.

Mr. Lawrence completed his vessels and delivered them to the Government. That they were satisfactory is manifest from the fact that his bills were entertained and considered by the Selfridge board, composed of Commodore Thomas O. Selfridge, Chief Engineer Alexander Henderson (succeeded July 8 by Montgomery Fletcher), and Paymaster C. H. Eldredge, which convened at the Brooklyn navy-yard June 5, 1865, and continued in session for more than six months. This board convened under the following resolution of the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 9, 1865.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to organize a board of not less than three competent persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and determine how much the vessels of war and steam-machinery contracted for by the Department in the years 1862 and 1863 cost the contractors over and above the contract price and the allowance for extra work, and report the same to the Senate at its next session, none but those who have given satisfaction to the Department to be considered.

They reported (inter alia) (see Senate Ex. Doc. No. 18, Thirty-ninth Congress, first session, pages 61, 62) as follows:

"The board, after a critical examination of the bills of cost presented by the several contractors for vessels and steam machinery contracted for in the years 1862 and 1863, who have appeared and made sworn statements, has determined the excess of cost in the several cases over and above the contract price and allowance for extra work to be as follows:

"Double-ender Agawam, wooden hull, G. W. Lawrence $8,610.77
"Double-ender Pontoosuc, wooden hull, G. W. Lawrence 8,610.77

"All of which is respectfully submitted.

"THOMAS O. SELFIDGE,

"Commodore and President of Board.

"MONTGOMERY FLETCHER,

"Chief Engineer.

"CHAS. H. ELDREDGE,

"Paymaster.

"Hon. GIDEON WELLES,

"Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C."

On January 31, 1866, this report was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, who thereupon, March 22, 1866, reported a bill for the payment of the awards thus made. This bill (S. 220, first session, Thirty-ninth Congress), passed the Senate. In said report (No. 45, first session, Thirty-ninth Congress) the committee says:

"From June till December last, the board organized by the Secretary of the Navy under the Senate resolution, composed of eminent officers of the Navy, was engaged in hearing evidence and investigating the claims of these parties. That investigation seems to have been fairly, carefully, and thoroughly made. It was by officers of the Department, and the award, which the committee believe to be substantially right, should be adopted as the basis of relief to the parties, and therefore the committee report the accompanying bill."

Your committee recognize the merits of the claim, but recommend to the Senate the accompanying substitute, which gives to the claimant the opportunity to go before the Court of Claims and prove how much the vessels cost the decedent, but limits the right of recovery to the sum found by the Selfridge board.

Hereto is appended a copy of the contract for the Agawam. The contract for the Pontoosuc, entered into the same day, is identical with it in all its provisions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RHODA BUCK.

The bill (H. R. 8713) granting a pension to Rhoda Buck was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Rhoda Buck, widow of Haddon A. Buck, late of Company K, Seventh Michigan Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARK F. CARTER.

The bill (S. 573) granting an increase of pension to Mark F. Carter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Mark F. Carter, late a member of Company E, Second Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, a pension of $50 a month, in lieu of that which he now receives.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER September 20, 1890:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 573) granting an increase of pension to Mark F. Carter, have examined the same and report:

In the immediately preceding Congress a bill was introduced granting an increase to this claimant from $30 to $50 a month. He was at that time receiving the highest rate for his disability, as it then existed, provided for by the general law, and the report of the committee was adverse.

It appears from evidence now in the hands of the committee, that his disability is progressive, and that since the above report was made he has become almost helpless. The claimant was a member of Company E, Second Iowa Regiment.

John K. Price, of Fairfield, Iowa, testifies that he has known him twenty years; that his health during that time has been very poor; and that he has never been able to do a day's work; that at the present time he is unable to perform any manual labor; that it is not safe to leave him alone, and that it is necessary for some one to be with him all the time. Affiant knows these facts because he has been his near and intimate neighbor.

Dr. W. Fordyce, of Glasgow, Iowa, testifies that he has known him the last fifteen years, and has been his physician six years; that he is to all intents and purposes helpless; that he is dependent upon his pension.

A. G. Smith, postmaster at Lockridge, Iowa, testifies that he has known claimant for years; that he is very weak and practically helpless; that he needs an attendant always at night and in cold weather; that he is always confined to the house.

Dr. R. B. Stephenson, of Lockridge, testifies that claimant is suffering from heart trouble and nervous prostration; that he is subject to smothering and sinking spells at night, on account of which he needs an attendant. John Heron, of the same place, gives similar testimony; from all of which it is apparent that his disability is progressive; that he is unable to engage in any kind of employment; that he is nearly helpless, and that he will never be any better.

It is not doubted that his condition is due to his service.

Senator WILSON, of Iowa, knows the witnesses and assures the Senator who makes this report that they are reliable men.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT RANDALL MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on House bill 789.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 789) opening to settlement a portion of the Fort Randall military reservation in South Dakota and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. PASCO were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 181) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Niles, deceased;

A bill (S. 1195) for the relief of Snowden & Mason;

A bill (S. 3798) to authorize the Mobile, Jackson, and Kansas City Railroad Company to cross certain rivers in the State of Mississippi;

A bill (S. 3852) to authorize the Eagle Pass Water Supply Company and the Compañía Proveedora de Aguas de Ciudad Porfirio Diaz to connect their water-works communications across the Rio Grande River at Eagle Pass, Tex.;

A bill (S. 3996) to repeal sections 3952 and 3953 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 123) to enable the commission having charge of the preparation and erection of the statue, with suitable emblematic devices thereon, on one of the public reservations in the city of Washington, to the memory of General Lafayette and his compatriots, to execute the purpose expressed in the concurrent resolution adopted by the two Houses of Congress on the 28th day of August, 1890.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print the reports of the United States commissioners to the Centennial International Exhibition at Melbourne, 1888.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 11627) to authorize the issuance of subpoenas for the attendance of witnesses before town-site trustees in Oklahoma; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 214) extending the "Act fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia if paid within a time specified," to October 31, 1890.

ALIEN-LABOR CONTRACTS.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to call up House bill 9632, which was passed over without prejudice yesterday, being the alien-labor-contract bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9632) to amend "An act to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia."

Mr. PLUMB. I move an amendment, in section 5, line 14, page 5. After the word "actors" I move to insert the words "musical or other."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. After the word "actors," in line 14, section 5, page 5, insert the words "musical or other;" so as to read:

Nor shall the provisions of this bill apply to professional actors, musical or other artists, lecturers, regularly ordained ministers of the gospel, etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. What will be the effect of that amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. It simply enumerates musical persons as artists, that is, provided they have attained that skill in their profession which entitles them to recognition as such elsewhere or in this country.

Mr. BLAIR. Artists in art or music?

Mr. PLUMB. Artists in the art of music.

Mr. BLAIR. Experts?

Mr. PLUMB. Experts; "musical or other artists."

Mr. DAWES. All artists are in the bill now?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly, all artists are in the bill; and artists are permitted to come in now without reference to this bill; but the question has arisen under the present law under which the Treasury Department seems to hold that a musician can not be an artist.

Mr. DAWES. It is to cover that idea?

Mr. PLUMB. It is to cover that idea.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection. If there be no further amendment offered, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. CARLISLE. I did not know that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas had been disposed of.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was not submitted to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair announced that the amendment would be regarded as agreed to if there were no objection.

Mr. CARLISLE. I was waiting to offer an amendment myself.

Mr. BLAIR. I would rather the Senate would act upon that amendment. I do not know just how broad its scope might be.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. PLUMB. There would certainly not be any reason for including actors in the ordinary sense of the term and excluding musical artists.

Mr. CARLISLE. The amendment is still pending, I understand. I rose to offer another amendment, and will do so when this one is disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not suppose that includes the very highest order of musical artists.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. But I wanted the Senate to act upon it.

Mr. CULLOM. I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator who reports this bill, the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, to explain the difference between the bill under consideration and the two or three several acts heretofore passed with reference to this subject; for instance, "the act prohibiting the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia," approved February 26, 1885, and another one of the same general tenor, approved February 23, 1887; and there was still another one, I believe, after that. All of them seem to have for their purpose the prohibition of certain classes of people from coming to this country. What I desire is that the Senator should give a general explanation of the scope and purpose of this bill and the difference between it and the acts that have heretofore been passed.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the Senator from New Hampshire before he proceeds allow me to propose an amendment?

Mr. BLAIR. The pending amendment has not been disposed of.

Mr. CARLISLE. It has been agreed to, I understand.

Mr. HARRIS. It was announced as agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. While it has been so announced from the Chair, it has been the understanding of the Senate that the amendment was not agreed to and the Senator from New Hampshire has been upon the floor saying it was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the question formally upon agreeing to the amendment. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARLISLE. I move to amend, in line 15, section 5, page 5, by inserting after the word "ordained" the words "or constituted" and by striking out the words "the gospel" and inserting the word "religion." The bill as it now stands reads "regularly ordained ministers of the gospel," and if passed in that shape would confine it alone to ministers of the christian religion and exclude Jewish rabbis and others.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why?

Mr. CARLISLE. Because they do not come in as ministers of the gospel.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment moved by the Senator from Kentucky will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, line 15, after the word "ordained," insert "or constituted" and strike out the words "the gospel" and insert the word "religion;" so as to read:

Lecturers, regularly ordained or constituted ministers of religion, learned professors, etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether this amendment would exclude the ministers of the Chinese religion, those who conduct joss services, or the Mormons, or the ministers of anything else called religion. It seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is entirely too broad; that a Chinese minister conducting the services in their temple, worshipping at the shrine of their joss, could come in under this provision, and also a Brahman, or a Mormon—and a great many Mormons are coming in now—and Mussulmans, or anything of the kind. I think the amendment is entirely too broad.

Mr. BLAIR. I expect that would be the effect of the amendment; but this is a free country, free in religion as in everything else.

Mr. CARLISLE. I suppose we do not propose to make a discrimination among the various religious beliefs. This simply permits them to come here. If they should be guilty of any action in violation of our law after they come, of course they would be punished as others. The Chinese are excluded now by law, not because they are ministers of religion, but simply because of their nativity and race.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think the Senator quite explains to the Senate (at least I do not quite catch it; there has been a good deal of confusion here) the difference between a minister of the gospel and a minister of religion. I wish he would do so.

Mr. CARLISLE. As I understand it, this provision would entirely exclude Jewish rabbis, because they are not ministers of the gospel, but they are ministers of religion. Of course there is a little difficulty in selecting the exact language which would include just what we want to include, but it occurred to me that that was the very best phrase we could use. The bill as it stands now would exclude ministers of every religion whatever except the Christian religion. It is confined alone to ministers of the gospel, thus making a distinction between different religious beliefs, which I do not think we ought to make.

Mr. PLATT. If I may be permitted, having asked one question, to say another word, I do not think any one would desire to exclude Jewish rabbis, but there may be some persons who would come in under what might be called religion that it would be quite well for this country not to have included.

Mr. BLAIR. This bill does not undertake to exclude or to interfere with religion or religious belief at all. It is designed to prevent the introduction of alien contract labor. It seems to me that the amendment which the Senator from Kentucky suggests can hardly be objected to.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to it.

Mr. BLAIR. There is the Jewish religion and the Mohammedan religion, and there are other religions, all of which we tolerate, and I do not see how we can well undertake to interfere with the right of religious belief by enacting legislation to exclude those who may teach those beliefs.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not hear distinctly the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky. I certainly think the persons he named ought not to be excepted from the bill as a class.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The Chief Clerk read Mr. CARLISLE'S amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose that while the amendment would admit the class referred to by the Senator from Kentucky, it might also admit persons coming here intending to preach the Mormon religion as well. I do not know whether that would be a class that it would be desirable to have admitted into this country more than we have them now. However, what I desire to inquire is, of the Senator who reports and has charge of this bill, whether it enlarges or modifies the scope of the present law.

Mr. BLAIR. I have examined this bill in connection with the existing acts. It seems to be rather a combination or condensation of what is to be found in the others into a single act. In some respects it does not seem to me to be any more stringent, if as much so, as the existing law.

Mr. CULLOM. I feared it was less stringent. That is the reason why I made the inquiry.

Mr. BLAIR. In some respects; but it has been sent here with the impression that it was considerably more stringent at the points where difficulty has been found in the enforcement of the idea of the existing law, which is to actually keep out alien contract labor. The third section is substantially the same as the existing law so far as the master of a vessel is concerned, but in addition to the liability of punishment placed upon the master under the law, as it now is, his vessel itself is made liable to seizure, to be held, and he is subjected to penalty to a greater extent than under the existing law. There are one or two provisions with reference to the liability of the master not found in existing law, to which some objection has been made. The law as it now is holds the master responsible who shall knowingly bring within the United States, etc., any such labor the introduction of which is prohibited by the act generally, and it punishes the man who knowingly brings such labor in here—

The VICE-PRESIDENT (at 2 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.). The hour for the consideration of bills on the Calendar has expired.

Mr. FRYE. About twenty minutes of that hour was taken up with a conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That has been taken out.

Mr. BLAIR. I think if there can be unanimous consent to go on with this bill for a few moments we may complete its consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that will be allowed. Let us get the bill passed while we are upon it. There does not seem to be a disposition to discuss it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the further consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANSOM. I will not object to it now, but unless it is finished very soon I may be obliged to object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the consideration of the bill will be continued. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE].

Mr. HISCOCK. While the Senator from New Hampshire is referring to section 3 of this bill, I desire to call his attention to the language in lines 1 and 2.

Mr. BLAIR. That is a matter which I had alluded to. The Senator's colleague has an amendment which he proposes to offer.

Mr. HISCOCK. Which is satisfactory?

Mr. BLAIR. It is satisfactory that he should move it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I was not aware that my colleague had prepared an amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the amendment of the Senator from New York been offered?

Mr. BLAIR. It has not been offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add after the word "artists," in line 14 of section 5, the word "musicians;" so as to read:

Musical or other artists, musicians, lecturers, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, line 14, after the word "artists," insert the word "musicians;" so as to read:

Musical or other artists, musicians, lecturers, regularly ordained or constituted ministers of religion, etc.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be considered as agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well; if there is no objection to it.

Mr. BLAIR. I object to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say in regard to the amendment that it seems to me this proviso is designed to exclude persons who are not engaged in manual labor from the terms of the exclusion contained in the preceding portion of the section. There are excepted professional actors, and I take it that that is done in order that there may be no interruption of the pleasures which grow out of performances of a theatrical and other character, and which are not bounded by the boundary lines of nations or anything of that sort, but which represent a calling that is common to all the world, and that all the world desire to enjoy and have the pleasure of seeing and hearing the people who bring new forms and styles of acting, etc., from foreign shores. If that is true, there is every reason in the world why artists should also be included in this exception; and that has been done; and it has seemed to me that for just the same reason musicians should be included.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to say that already we have put in professional singers? That might be held to exclude musicians.

Mr. PLUMB. I was just about to say in regard to that, and I have before me the law, that some years ago a law was passed in which I moved to insert this word, I think, but the Treasury Department seemed to stick in the bark and there was a good deal of trouble about it, and I was appealed to to know the view which I had in mind in making the motion to amend. We are in this same domain again. It does not touch upon the domain of manual labor. It is not competitive in the ordinary sense of the term. Our musicians go all over the world, and similarly we want other musicians to come here. It seems to me to be rather a narrow idea to exclude this class of people from coming into this country. The art of music is not only widely diffused, but it is the occasion of as much pleasure as any other art, not only to those who practice it, but to those who listen, and its profession and practice mark a high state of civilization.

Mr. FRYE. A large number of teachers of music from Germany are now in this country.

Mr. PLUMB. As the Senator from Maine prompts me, there are a large number of teachers here now from Germany.

Mr. BLAIR. They would come in under the amendment already made.

Mr. PLUMB. I hardly think so. The trouble is just this about it: As the bill already contains the word "artists" as a qualifying term, it might be held to exclude musicians. If the Senator from New Hampshire says that it does not exclude musicians, then there will be no harm in putting them in by an actual term of inclusion, and if he does think it excludes them, I beg to differ with him, with all respect, in regard to the opinion expressed.

Mr. BLAIR. The idea of these exceptions is to allow those into the country whose skilled labor in art as well as in other occupations may be a source of instruction to our own people. There is a large class of people in our country who get their living by their practice of music, pursuing it as an avocation. There are at least 20,000 who are in an organized musical union, a union of the common average laborers in music, you may say. They are called musicians; they call themselves musicians; and the term which the Senator would now insert in the bill would bring the common, average, every-day musician of Europe with his low prices and his low rates of compensation directly in competition with the general American musician. It is the object of the bill to exclude those as well as others who come in competition with those who practice the art as an avocation of common life.

As the amendment which the Senator desired has been made, which does exclude all those who can give us special entertainments, who can give us instruction, who can afford a music to be imitated by our people at large, so that by the contact with them a general improvement in the art of music may come to our people at large, which amendment is entirely consonant with the spirit of the bill itself, I hope he will not press this other amendment, for it does bring the common street musician of Europe in direct competition with the musician of America, and it is a very large class.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would the Senator from New Hampshire deprive the American citizen of the hand-organ and monkey?

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, they get here as it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am astonished to learn that he would.

Mr. BLAIR. But the contracting to bring them here in masses to break down the common business of the American musician I object to; at least the bill objects to it; and if those who are engaged in the common work of life are to be protected against that sort of competition, if the miner is to be protected against it, with probably a hundred thousand people in this country who obtain their livelihood in this way, why ought they not to be protected against the contract musical labor of the Old World?

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator whether there is to be any protection to the people who have to listen to this street music?

Mr. BLAIR. This bill will afford a great deal of it. It will prevent the wholesale competition from abroad, which is in the line of the Senator's thought. The bill ought not to be amended in such a way as to destroy it.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from New Hampshire says he wants to protect the street music we already have. I should like to see the street music we already have improved, and I think the people who have to listen to it have a right not to be disbarred from the chance of having it improved.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not think the Senator could claim that it would be improved by bringing here by contract large masses more of the same style as the present, and an inferior style of it.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest to the Senator while legislating on this subject that I chanced the other day to be in a city not far from Washington and when in conversation with the dean of the medical faculty of that city, an Italian was playing a hand-organ near by, and this professor told me there was a great trust in this country formed among the Italians and others who had hand-organs and monkeys.

Mr. FRYE. Is that on account of the tariff?

Mr. GIBSON. That is on account of the tariff which the Senator from New Hampshire proposes, and I think in order to break this trust in monkeys and hand-organs it would be well if we could apply a little free trade to this thing. I merely make the suggestion.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I am a high protectionist.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. The amendment will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not keep up with the Chair. I should like that the question be put.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators in favor of the amendment will say "ay;" the contrary "no." [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to have the yeas and nays on that amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, let me say a word.

Mr. BLAIR. No; I shall not ask for the yeas and nays, because I wish the bill to get through. We can dispose of that in conference.

Mr. HAWLEY. Just let me say a word. The class of musicians the Senator refers to, the ordinary band players, will come over here without any contract and with the right to come. Such a man knows, if he is a good player on any one of the many instruments, that he will stand a fair chance in some one of the innumerable establishments to get employment, and there is no trouble about his coming at all. But I doubt very much whether under this clause Ole Bull could come over here under a contract to give a series of concerts.

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, he is a musical artist.

Mr. HAWLEY. But that is the question you have been arguing exactly.

Mr. BLAIR. Not at all. That amendment is made.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well, I have got the Senator's point. Why, then, does he put in "professional singers?"

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will inform the Senator that Ole Bull is dead.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator is practical. He is dead, of course, but his successor, if there ever will be one, could not come in under that clause. Why use the words "professional singers?"

Mr. BLAIR. I think they are included in the words "musical artists." "Musical" was not before "artists" until the amendment already adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no word "musical" here.

Mr. BLAIR. Yes, it has been inserted by an amendment. The term "professional singers" was in the bill from the beginning and in the law from the beginning, I think.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move in section 5, line 16, to add after the word "singers:"

Nor to any organization of musicians or orchestras.

As I understand, organizations of musicians and orchestras come over with actors, not only in connection with the performances of a high grade, but they come over themselves for the purpose of forming an organization, and this is in the same line. It seems to me that none of us want, I am sure the Senator from New Hampshire does not want, the question who shall be admitted under this section to be strained in the custom-house in such a way that some person may be excluded on technical grounds whom we want to have come in. I am in entire sympathy with his view as to keeping out the people who come in competition with those persons in this country who perform manual labor; that is to say, that we shall prevent them from coming here by contract; but the Senator will see that this is an entirely different field. Those persons who come here to perform manual labor to be contracted for by the year, by the week, by the day, go to particular places where the exercise of their functions displaces other labor already engaged in the same line.

This is what Mr. Conkling would call "the upper air and solar walk of things." This is up in the domain in which the competition is of a different kind entirely. The pay for it comes from persons who are able to indulge in the luxury of it, whether poor or rich, and certainly these persons are as much entitled to come in as ordained ministers of the gospel, for I have no doubt the Senator would testify of his own knowledge that the ministers of the gospel in this country are the poorest paid of all the people who labor, and if ministers of the gospel from England, Germany, France, and all the world are to come in to compete with our two or three or four hundred dollar per annum preachers, I think it is straining the matter a great deal, and it would not put any more strain on it to let in these orchestras.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will not treat the subject with such undue levity.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not mean to treat it with levity. I am just as serious as the Senator, although I do not look so serious. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—

Mr. PLUMB. I beg the Senator's pardon; I have moved the amendment with perfect seriousness. It seems to me to make the fifth section complete and to cover the very point spoken of a moment ago of putting a construction upon similar callings by a custom-house officer who was not in sympathy with this divine art of music or with those who practice it, and probably whose soul did not beat at all to the sounds of sweet music.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator should be cautious. He is evidently verging upon a point where he is inclining to ridicule. If there is anything in the amendment which has already been adopted, the phrase "musical and other artists" covers all that the Senator claims to desire to cover by this last amendment, and unless the entire musical population of the Old World is to be let in free to compete with the average musician in this country, the amendment it seems to me ought not to be adopted. Of course the bands of Europe can be hired to come here and play at the head of our political processions for 25 or 50 per cent. of what an American band-player must have in order to live and support his family; and to the musicians it is really a pretty serious matter. I do not know whether there is any music in the State of Kansas, but I imagine that there is, and that the Senator will find that the musicians of Kansas would be opposed to an amendment of the kind he here proposes.

But, Mr. President, I do not wish to take time with this bill, and would like to have a vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, if this, instead of being entitled "An act to amend an act to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia," were entitled "An act of fraudulent pretenses," it would be nearer the truth than anything else.

Mr. President, let us glance at this question and take a common-sense view of it. On the 4th day of July, 1864, Congress enacted a law entitled "An act to encourage immigration," which is found in volume 13, Statutes at Large, pages 385, 386, and 387. That law appropriated $25,000 to carry its provisions into effect, and authorized the appointment by the President of a commissioner of immigration with a twenty-five-hundred-dollar salary. Then section 2 provided—

That all contracts that shall be made by emigrants to the United States in foreign countries, in conformity to regulations that may be established by the said commissioner, whereby emigrants shall pledge the wages of their labor for a term not exceeding twelve months, to repay the expenses of their emigration, shall be held to be valid in law, and may be enforced in the courts of the United States, or of the several States and Territories; and such advances, if so stipulated in the contract, and the contract be recorded in the recorder's office in the county where the emigrant shall settle, shall operate as a lien upon any land thereafter acquired by the emigrant, whether under the homestead law when the title is consummated or on property otherwise acquired until liquidated by the emigrant.

And then in section 5 it was provided—

That no person shall be qualified to fill any office under this act who shall be directly or indirectly interested in any corporation having lands for sale to immigrants, or in the carrying or transportation of immigrants, either from foreign countries to the United States and its Territories, or to any part thereof, or who shall receive any fee or reward, or the promise thereof.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am reading from the statute itself. I have read from the statute of July 4, 1864, to show what that law was for. I have read this part of section 5 to show that it was not for the purpose of inducing immigrants to come and settle along the lines of the railroads then being constructed to the Pacific Ocean and throughout the great West; it was not for the purpose of settling up the unfilled lands of the United States, but it was to put employes in manufacturing establishments.

That continued to be the law until February 25, 1885. On the 25th day of February, 1885, there was enacted a law entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia." The law of July 4, 1864, was made for the encouragement of the importation under contracts made in foreign countries of the servile labor of the world, to bring those laborers here and put them in the manufacturing establishments, and it offered a bounty upon them practically.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me one word?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, I will.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator will examine the reports that were made in favor of that law, he will find that it was put upon the ground that so many people had been drained from the farms of the United States there were not enough left to cultivate the farms, and it was asked that foreign labor might be introduced in order that farms might be cultivated. If he will examine the reports—

Mr. COCKRELL. I have read every report that was made on that question, and I say to the Senator that he is mistaken. It was not placed upon the ground of bringing farm laborers here, but it was placed upon the ground of bringing laborers here for the manufacturing establishments. There was a prohibitory clause inserted in the law that no corporation, no railroad company that had any lands for sale should have anything to do with the officers of this company, one of whom got $2,500 a year, but the superintendent of a manufacturing company could be the president of this company and get $2,500 a year. There was no mistake in the object of the law. Take the reports that were made at the time, take the discussion, and it was for the express purpose of furnishing labor, cheap labor, in the manufacturing establishments of this country, and those laborers were brought there and they have been kept there ever since. No effort was made to prevent the importation of that kind of contract labor until the passage of the law of February 26, 1885.

I shall ask that this law—it is not very long—may be inserted in my remarks, that we may have a history of this question continuously.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection.

Mr. DAWES. Has the Senator got the report here that he will read from to show what the purpose of the law was?

Mr. COCKRELL. It shows upon the face what the purpose of the law was. A blind man can see it.

Mr. DAWES. I thought the Senator said he had the reports.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have them, bound up, but not at my desk. I can get them and bring them here.

Mr. DAWES. My memory would contradict the statement of the Senator from Missouri. I was in the House of Representatives when that act was passed, and my memory does not serve me precisely as the Senator's. I did not know but that he had the report here.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have all the reports, every one of them.

Mr. DAWES. I understood that the purpose of that law was to fill up and supply the dearth of labor, both on the farms and on railroads, especially those transcontinental railroads that were being built at that time. That was my memory, and I did not know but that the Senator might have the report, so that he could show which was right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I expected the Senator would bring in that very point, and I am exceedingly gratified that he has done so. Was it for the purpose of furnishing labor on the railroads?

Mr. DAWES. It was, as I said, for the purpose of supplying the dearth of labor on the farms and on the railroads, and on all the great works that were being carried on at that time, in the midst of war.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, Mr. President.

Mr. DAWES. That is the way I remember it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us read section 5 of the law and see what the Senator says to that—

That no person—

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will allow me, we were proceeding by indulgence under the five-minute rule. I hoped we might finish the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. As the Senator has been taking up the morning here till nearly 3 o'clock, I supposed I should be allowed to have a few minutes. Otherwise I object to the bill, and it may go over under Rule IX.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator asked that the law might be printed as a part of his remarks; and to that there was no objection. I certainly do not object to his proceeding under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask if we are proceeding under the five-minute rule, and, if so, under what order?

Mr. COCKRELL. Nobody has ever heard it until the Senator from New Hampshire gets a little impatient and then brings down the five-minute rule. He spoke half a dozen times this morning in violation of the rule.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is quite mistaken.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that this is Calendar business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GIBSON in the chair). The Senate is proceeding under the five-minute rule, subject to any objection from a Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill came up in the morning hour under the five-minute rule. The morning hour expired and I asked the indulgence of the Senator having charge of the land-court bill, which is the unfinished business, that we might complete this. I supposed that we should proceed under the same rule. Of course what I am anxious for is to get the bill acted upon. The Senator from Missouri is quite mistaken in saying that I have occupied much time.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator spoke twice, at least, regularly.

Mr. BLAIR. I have answered several questions.

Mr. COCKRELL. He has spoken half a dozen times, and if he pleases he can stop the bill. We shall discuss it under the general rule or not at all. He can let it go on if he pleases. I am indifferent to it. I wanted to show that this thing was a mere pretense. It is not as good as the existing law. It is a relaxation of the law, trampling under foot the present restrictive law, and doing it in the name of the laborers of this country. It is a fraud upon them of the basest character, and I want to show it.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to say that I had that fear from a glance at the bill, and I was desirous that it should be explained before it was passed, lest we might liberalize the statute and let the people in whom we do not want here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood that the Senator from New Hampshire objected to my speaking longer than five minutes, and thereupon I objected to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not object to the Senator's going on, but as we are proceeding under the five-minute rule I supposed he would be bound by it. I am perfectly willing that the Senator should go on. I do not raise the point.

Mr. RANSOM. I suggest that the Senator from Missouri be allowed to finish, and then I shall call up the land-court bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have read sections of the law of 1864 to show the true object of them, and I will read section 5 again for the Senator from Massachusetts:

That no person shall be qualified to fill any office under this act who shall be directly or indirectly interested in any corporation having lands for sale to immigrants, or in the carrying or transportation of immigrants, either from foreign countries to the United States and its Territories, or to any part thereof.

Everybody connected with the settlement of land, the selling of land, the renting of land, the leasing of land, everybody connected with transportation along the lines necessarily of railroads was prohibited from having a hand in these matters as officers of the immigration company.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me interrupt the Senator. Mr. President, I am decidedly of the belief that that was intended as a measure of protection to immigrants, so that the immigrant commissioners and their subordinates should not be the mere drummers of land agencies. I know that the immigration of those days was very largely stimulated by organizations in the Western States, by corporations formed out there with large bodies of land that they tried to fill up; I have never had any interest in it myself, but friends had a very large body of land in one of the Western States and they exerted themselves to fill that land with the best classes of people that they could from Norway and Sweden. They did not probably bring out one man for an Eastern manufacturer. The Senator is so bitter against the wicked and piratical class of people who manufacture anything in the United States that he sees mischief in everything.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely mistaken. He is the gentleman who has the prejudices, and not I. I am talking facts. Talk about bringing immigrants here to settle along the lines of the railroads! What did this country behold after it granted $64,000,000 in bonds and hundreds of millions of acres of the public domain to the Pacific railroads that they might build a great transcontinental line? We beheld the officers of the Pacific railroad companies importing from China 5,000 Chinese laborers, and placing them along the line of those railroads to build them—Chinese laborers, who worked by the day at cheaper wages than American laborers or any European laborers who might be imported into this country would work, and who gathered up all their earnings and sent them back to their fatherland, and even when they died their remains were to be carried back and buried in China.

Talk now about the settlement of our Western lands and the construction of our railroads in the West by this system! Not a word of it, sir. Instead of those great railroads taking immigrants from Europe and building the roads and paying them in lands and settling them along the line as farmers and laborers so as to build up and develop that great Western country, they took the Chinese and shipped them from point to point, and to-day thousands and millions of acres of land along the side of those railroads are unoccupied, with not a solitary settler there.

Mr. President, I want to bring a little Republican testimony to bear on this point. I want to quote what the distinguished Senator from California, who now sleeps "the sleep that knows no waking," said in this Senate Chamber on the 28th day of February, 1882, the late General Miller:

The average American manufacturer is interested generally in two things, namely, the highest protective tariff and the cheapest labor. * * * It is not difficult to perceive the origin of that political economy which suggests high protective tariff and at the same time advocates the admission of servile laborers into this country without limit. It means high prices for the products of manufacture and low prices for the labor which produces them; the aggrandizement of capital and the debasement of labor; greater wealth to the wealthy and greater poverty to the poor.

Now, I want to quote another distinguished Republican leader, who is now a member of the Finance Committee and whose clarion voice has been heard in this Senate Chamber in behalf of the protective system, pleading for it, as if it were possible for him to ignore his past and make the country believe that protection was the only thing that would benefit the laborers of the land. I now refer to the distinguished senior Senator from Nevada, Hon. JOHN P. JONES, and I quote from what he said in this Senate Chamber on the 9th day of March, 1882:

I have noticed, Mr. President, that most of those who are in favor of the largest liberty being extended to the Chinese immigrant to this country are also in favor of a tariff—a tariff which has been urged as necessary to protect the American laborer from the degradation of competition with the pauper labor of Europe, as it is usually termed.

Oh, how sonorously these words sounded during the recent discussion of the tariff bill! The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] further said:

In reality, if we may judge of their motives by the action of the men who are now advocating a tariff, it was not the American laborer they wished to protect against the pauper labor of Europe; but it was the American capitalist, the lordly manufacturer, that they wished to protect against the free competition of the capitalist of Europe.

Does my distinguished friend from Connecticut hear this very grave language of his brother Republican Senator, JOHN P. JONES?

Mr. HAWLEY. I hear it, but I do not think it has anything to do with the business under consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the Senator's judgment.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator had his say on the tariff bill. If the Senator wants to open a regular war on the manufacturing interests, let us have the whole subject up, and appoint a day for it and go into it. I am ready for it, and I should like it; but we have a good deal of other business. We have discussed the tariff in the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am just as good a business Senator as the Senator from Connecticut, and do as much business in the Senate as the Senator from Connecticut does; but when the yoke begins to pull down on his neck he begins to squirm. Do not let him make that kind of appeal to me. We are discussing how these pauper laborers got into this country, who brought them here, and why the necessity of this legislation, and it is perfectly legitimate. I know it hurts—

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say, for the benefit of any stranger who may have come into the room, that I am not in the fashion of interrupting, and I do not care how much in a passion the Senator gets, and I do not care what he says anyhow.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not said a word against the manufacturer, and yet the Senator is trying everlastingly, when any gentleman on this side speaks of a manufacturer, to turn around and snarl and say "Oh, you hate the manufacturers." Now, I am giving you a dose of Republicanism on manufacturers. You squirm, do you? I will read it again. Some other people have talked about manufacturers besides Democrats. JOHN P. JONES, the man you put forward as your champion here to defend the laborers of the country and protection, said:

In reality, if we may judge of their motives by the action of the men who are now advocating a tariff, it was not the American laborer they wished to protect against the pauper labor of Europe, but it was the American capitalist, the lordly manufacturer, that they wished to protect against the free competition of the capitalist of Europe. Our capitalist manufacturer wanted a larger interest on his money than the capitalist of Europe was willing to accept, and he was given the benefit of a tariff.

Let us see how that tariff works. It works in this wise, that everything that the capitalist manufacturer has to sell he sells in a protected market, he sells in a market in which foreign capitalists can not compete with him.

How is it with what he has to buy? For the principal article he has to buy—to wit, the labor of men—he demands free trade in the broadest sense, not only free trade in bringing in laborers of our own race who can soon accommodate themselves to our conditions of life, but the bringing in a class of laborers who have been inured to poverty by thousands of years of training. The capitalist asks the broadest free trade for that, his own market in any event being protected.

Now, how is it with the laborer? Everything he wants to buy he has to buy from his capitalist master in a protected market; everything he has to sell, to wit, his labor (and, unlike the capitalist, he can not hold it away from sale; unlike the capitalist, he can not wait for better times or travel here and there where he pleases to sell it, but he must sell it every day), he must sell in the openest market in the world. This is the theory in favor of the laborer that the gentleman [Mr. DAWES, of Massachusetts] propounds to us. We reject it, and by this bill propose to bar out this degrading, this shocking competition with our own people. And yet he tells us we are striking a blow at labor, that we are proposing to inflict injury on the laborers of our country.

That simply shows how those distinguished Senators at that time regarded this question. The idea that this bill is for the purpose of protecting American laborers in any branch is simply a mere pretext.

I have in my hand the act of February 23, 1887, entitled "An act to amend an act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia." I also hold in my hand the general deficiency bill approved October 19, 1888, which contains two clauses amendatory of this law. These are the only laws which have been passed upon that question, and I shall ask that they may be printed in my remarks in consecutive order: first, the law of February 26, 1885, then the law of February 23, 1887, and then these two extracts on pages 2 and 3 of the law of October 19, 1888, and they will show the legislation and to what extent it has gone. Now I will read the first section of the law of February, 1885:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation, or in any way assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien or aliens, any foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, under contract or agreement, parole or special, express or implied, made previous to the importation or migration of such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia.

Then section 2 provides that all these contracts shall be null and void, etc. We destroyed the law of July 4, 1864, which made valid and binding contracts made in foreign countries and made them enforceable in the courts of the United States just the same as if made within the territorial limits of our own country and made them liens upon the labor and products of labor of the employés.

This law is an extension of this. It is no stronger than this, and, notwithstanding the stringency of the law of February 26, 1885, the records of our country show that protected manufacturers have brought in contract laborers—not that you could prove that they had made a contract in writing, express, or even implied, but they have evaded the law and they are evading it to-day, and this bill will only enable them to evade it still more.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. In the line of his remarks I wish to say that I have information showing that persons on our Northern border come down across the line and work in the United States during the winters or during the months when they are not engaged at home, and when they get ready to go back they go back and take with them whatever they have earned on this side of the line.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt about that, and how is it done? A gentleman will go along among the class of people where laborers can be found and will tell some one, or have some friend to say to him, "If laborers go down to B. at a certain place I am pretty sure they can get wages and employment there." There is no contract. He does not offer them anything, and your law does not cover the case. The man comes down from Canada all along our border whenever he is idle in Canada and competes with American laborers, and your law does not touch him.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is quite mistaken about that. It is a violation of the law to encourage men to come.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no encouragement—none in the world. They simply tell the truth. A man simply says, "Go to so and so, and labor will be furnished and pay will be given." There is no inducement about it. And Europe has been filled with these men tramping from place to place where laborers could be found, and telling them the same thing. The laborers come here; they land; they are not under a contract; there is no agreement, express or implied; they want to go to a certain locality in the United States. Well, any man raised in Europe would be glad to find out different localities; but they go to that locality, and it happens to be exactly where some persons want to employ labor. They go to the coal mines, or they go to some establishment where large numbers of hands are employed, just after a strike, or just preceding a reduction of wages. There they are. You can not prove any contract, express or implied, or anything of the kind. Your law does not cover such a case; and this is a mere subterfuge; it is a mere pretense that you are trying to prevent the importation of laborers here to compete with the laboring citizens of the United States in the different industries of our country. It is doing no such thing. It is relaxing the law.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What method of prevention would the Senator suggest?

Mr. COCKRELL. If I were drawing a law, I should make it a great deal more rigid than this.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Some of us would be very glad if it were possible to make it more stringent, and if the Senator will suggest some way whereby it can be more completely covered, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Permit me to say that you would not vote for it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator is mistaken. I would.

Mr. COCKRELL. I would prohibit the employment of any of these men in any employment that receives aid and protection from the Government of the United States. You will not vote for that.

Mr. HOAR. What men?

Mr. COCKRELL. These imported contract laborers, these laborers brought from foreign countries as they would be brought here to establish your tin-plate industry.

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand the Senator to say he would be in favor of a law that would prohibit any person of foreign birth that comes to this country from getting work?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. HOAR. That seems to be the argument.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. The Senator has now disclosed this. He understands how they get laborers here in the manufacturing establishments. That discloses it. Oh, no, you are not going to exclude foreigners; not at all! They come here to work and become citizens. Oh, yes, and they go right to your manufacturing establishments where there is a strike or a reduction of wages.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to interrupt the Senator long enough to say that this bill provides expressly for the return of these people when such things are discovered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, that is where there is a contract, express or implied. You can not read it that way and you know it. That is a mere subterfuge. This is a mere false pretense held out to make the laborers believe that you are protecting them at the same time that you are protecting what Senator JONES calls the capitalist manufacturers, the lordly manufacturers, as the distinguished Senator calls the protected manufacturers. It is nothing but a sham, a fraud, and a pretense.

Mr. President, I ask that all these laws may be inserted in the RECORD so that we shall see the whole list in consecutive order.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I ask that the pending bill may be printed in the RECORD as an absolute denial and contradiction of every sensible assertion the Senator has made.

Mr. PLATT. When the Senator from Missouri first commenced—

Mr. RANSOM. Having permitted the Senator from Missouri to go on, I shall permit the Senator from Connecticut to reply to him.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—

Mr. PLATT. I just want a moment.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall ask that the bill go over myself, but I shall ask that it displace the unfinished business very soon unless that is disposed of, because I can not trifle with the slight remainder of the session, for it is necessary to get some action upon some bill on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, when the Senator from Missouri first commenced his remarkable speech, in which he seemed to be tormented by the vision of the manufacturers pursuing him, he said that the law of 1864 was passed for the purpose of getting immigrants at work in the factories; and having on some former occasion read the report which accompanied the passage of that bill I remarked to the Senator that if he would read that report he would find that it was put very largely upon the necessity of having people to settle up our lands and work our farms. I thought I was not mistaken about it. So I sent for the report, and I want to read one extract from it, the report made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], from the Committee on Agriculture. It says:

The increase in the inhabitants of the great Middle States has been at the rate of 25 per cent. during the last decade, while that of the northwestern group has been 100 per cent. It is to the less populous States and to the Territories that the influx of immigrants can be best directed, alike as regards their own welfare and property and the benefits they will confer on the nation.

Well, it is not the less populous States and Territories in which manufacturing are situated. It goes on:

The growth of these States represents the reclamation of new lands from the waste forests and prairies, to be a possession for civilized man forever. It indicates the development of mining, agricultural, and pastoral wealth out of the natural riches provided for the use and enjoyment of man, but yet chiefly unappropriated. The increase in the population of these States is directly due, in a great degree, to the settlement of immigrants; and the whole population of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, and Kansas, added together, exceeds only by one-tenth the number of foreign passengers to this country since 1819, to say nothing of their increase by the ordinary laws of population.

The advantages of foreign immigration, as between the United States and the people of European countries, are mutual and reciprocal. If our prairies and mineral lands offer inducements to the immigrant and promise him requital for the pangs of severed family ties and separation from the scenes of his early childhood, he, in his turn, contributes to the development of the resources of our country and adds to our material wealth. Such is the labor performed by the thrifty immigrant that he can not enrich himself without contributing his full quota to the increase of the intrinsic greatness of the United States. This is equally true whether he work at mining, farming, or as a day laborer on one of our railroads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to understand what the matter was that was desired by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. The law of February 26, 1885, followed by the law of February 23, 1887, and two sections of the deficiency bill of October 19, 1888.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri that these matters be inserted in the RECORD as part of his remarks? The Chair hears none.

The laws referred to are as follows:

[Public—No. 52.]

An act to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation, or in any way assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien or aliens, any foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, under contract or agreement, parol or special, express or implied, made previous to the importation or migration of such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That all contracts or agreements, expressed or implied, parol or special, which may hereafter be made by and between any person, company, partnership, or corporation and any foreigner or foreigners, alien or aliens, to perform labor or service, or having reference to the performance of labor or service by any person in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia previous to the migration or importation of the person or persons whose labor or service is contracted for into the United States, shall be utterly void and of no effect.

SEC. 3. That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same, by knowingly assisting, encouraging or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parol or special, with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, previous to becoming residents or citizens of the United States, shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor including any such alien or foreigner who may be a party to any such contract or agreement, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the circuit courts of the United States; the proceeds to be paid into the Treasury of the United States; and separate suits may be brought for each alien or foreigner being a party to such contract or agreement aforesaid. And it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such suit at the expense of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within the United States on any such vessel, and land, or permit to be landed, from any foreign port or place, any alien laborer, mechanic, or artisan who, previous to embarkation on such vessel, had entered into contract or agreement, parol or special, express or implied, to perform labor or service in the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 for each and every such alien laborer, mechanic, or artisan so brought as aforesaid, and may also be imprisoned for a term not exceeding six months.

SEC. 5. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent any citizen or subject of any foreign country temporarily residing in the United States, either in private or official capacity, from engaging, under contract or otherwise, persons not residents or citizens of the United States to act as private secretaries, servants, or domestics for such foreigner temporarily residing in the United States as aforesaid; nor shall this act be so construed as to prevent any person or persons, partnership, or corporation from engaging, under contract or agreement, skilled workmen in foreign countries to perform labor in the United States in or upon any new industry not at present established in the United States: Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise obtained; nor shall the provisions of this act apply to professional actors, artists, lecturers, or singers, nor to persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as prohibiting any individual from assisting any member of his family, or any relative or personal friend, to migrate from any foreign country to the United States, for the purpose of settlement here.

SEC. 6. That all laws or parts of laws conflicting herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Approved February 26, 1885.

[Public—No. 77.]

An act to amend an act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That an act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia, approved February 26, 1885, and to provide for the enforcement thereof, be amended by adding the following:

"SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby charged with the duty of executing the provisions of this act, and for that purpose he shall have power to enter into contracts with such State commission, board, or officers as may be designated for that purpose by the governor of any State to take charge of the local affairs of immigration in the ports within said State, under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by said Secretary; and it shall be the duty of such State commission, board, or officers so designated to examine into the condition of passengers arriving at the ports within said State in any ship or vessel, and for that purpose all or any of such commissioners or officers, or such other person or persons as they shall appoint, shall be authorized to go on board of and through any such ship or vessel; and if in any such examination there shall be found among such passengers any person included in the prohibition in this act, they shall report the same in writing to the collector of such port, and such persons shall not be permitted to land.

"Sec. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish such regulations and rules, and issue from time to time such instructions, not inconsistent with the law, as he shall deem best calculated for carrying out the provisions of this act; and he shall prescribe all forms of bonds, entries, and other papers to be used under and in the enforcement of the various provisions of this act.

"Sec. 8. That all persons included in the prohibition in this act, upon arrival, shall be sent back to the nations to which they belong and from whence they came. The Secretary of the Treasury may designate the State board of charities of any State in which such board shall exist by law, or any commission in any State, or any person or persons in any State, whose duty it shall be to execute the provisions of this section, and shall be entitled to reasonable compensation therefor to be fixed by regulation prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe regulations for the return of the aforesaid persons to the countries from whence they came, and shall furnish instructions to the board, commission, or persons charged with the execution of the provisions of this section as to the time of procedure in respect thereto, and may change such instructions from time to time. The expense of such return of the aforesaid persons not permitted to land shall be borne by the owners of the vessels in which they came. And any vessel refusing to pay such expenses shall not thereafter be permitted to land at or clear from any port of the United States. And such expenses shall be a lien on said vessel. That the necessary expense in the execution of this act for the present fiscal year shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"Sec. 9. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

"Sec. 10. That this act shall take effect at the expiration of thirty days after its passage."

Approved February 23, 1887.

[Public—No. 327.]

An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

That the act approved February 23, 1887, entitled "An act to amend an act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia," be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in case he shall be satisfied that an immigrant has been allowed to land contrary to the prohibition of that law, to cause such immigrant within the period of one year after landing or entry, to be taken into custody and returned to the country from whence he came, at the expense of the owner of the importing vessel, or, if he entered from an adjoining country, at the expense of the person previously contracting for the services.

That the act approved February 26, 1885, entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to an informer who furnishes original information that the law has been violated such a share of the penalties recovered as he may deem reasonable and just, not exceeding 50 per cent., where it appears that the recovery was had in consequence of the information thus furnished.

Approved October 19, 1888.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to understand what the Senator from New Hampshire desired to have inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask to have inserted at the point where I made the request, before the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut, the bill which is pending before the Senate (H. R. 9632); also, printed in connection with it the memorial of the Federation of Labor of this city, signed Paul T. Bowen, H. J. Schulteis, and also a brief statement presented by Mr. Charles H. Cramp.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish, before the insertion of this voluminous matter in the RECORD, simply to say that the act of 1864 was passed, as we all know, as a matter of course, in the midst of the civil war, when there was a demand for labor in every department of industry, in all species of manufacturing, mining, on the farm, and everywhere else before the great inventions of modern times had revolutionized the process of farming and manufacturing. I wish to say that when that bill was introduced and passed it was voted for, if I remember correctly, by every member of the Senate, Democrat and Republican alike.

It was based upon the condition of things as it then existed. Senators will remember that at that time the North and the South were in a fierce and desperate struggle for what they believed to be on their respective sides the justice of their cause. The whole country was denuded of labor. Nearly all the laboring men of our country, North and South, entered the army on one side and the other; and that bill which has been commented upon and drawn into debate here several times in the progress of the last five or ten years as a matter of reproach against the framers of the bill, against those who supported it, was not only supported by every one, but sanctioned by public opinion throughout the United States.

If it contributed in any respect to supply the want of labor in that period of adversity, it did great good. I have no doubt the immigration invited under the provisions of that bill probably aided us to recover from the very grave and serious depression of industry from which the country was then suffering. That is all I wish to say. I should like to have that date marked as the explanation of the whole merit of the bill.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to print in the RECORD the papers referred to by him, and it will be so ordered.

The matter to be inserted is as follows:

An act (H. R. 9632) to amend "An act to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, persons, or corporation, in any manner or way whatsoever, to aid, assist, or encourage the importation or immigration of any alien into the United States under contract or agreement, parole or special, express or implied, made previous to such alien becoming a resident of the United States, to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States; any such contract shall be utterly void and of no effect; and it shall be unlawful for any alien to enter the United States under any such contract.

SEC. 2. That any person, persons, or corporation entering into a contract prohibited by section 1 of this act with any alien, or who shall knowingly assist, encourage, or solicit the importation or immigration of an alien into the United States, to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement, parole or special, express or implied, with such alien, made previous to his becoming a resident of the United States, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000, or imprisoned for a period not exceeding six months, or both, at the discretion of the court. The proceeds of fines collected under this act shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. And in addition to the above penalties, any person, including the alien party to said contract, may institute a suit in the proper circuit court of the United States, in the name of the United States, against the person, persons, or corporation entering into the prohibited contract, and shall have the right to recover the sum of $1,000 for each alien imported into the United States in pursuance of such contract. A separate suit may be brought for each alien included in such contract; and it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the proper district to appear and prosecute such suit at the expense of the United States. And it is further provided that no fine, penalty, or judgment recovered by the United States under the provisions of the act to which this act is an amendment, or which may hereafter be recovered by the United States under this act, or the act to which this act is amendatory, shall by any officer or agent of the United States be compromised for any sum of money less than the amount of money claimed or recovered for the violation thereof.

SEC. 3. That the master of any vessel who shall (knowingly) bring within the United States, on any vessel, or who shall land or permit to be landed from his vessel, from any foreign port or place, any alien laborer, mechanic, or artisan, who, previous to embarking on such vessel, had entered into contract or agreement, parole or special, express or implied, to perform labor or service in the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $500 for each and every such alien laborer, mechanic, or artisan so brought or landed as aforesaid, and may also be imprisoned for a term not exceeding six months, and shall return such alien to the port at which he embarked; and the above fine shall be a lien upon such vessel; and such vessel shall not have clearance from any port of the United States until such fine is paid. (The fact of such bringing or landing shall be prima facie evidence of such knowledge.)

SEC. 4. That it shall not be lawful for any person, persons, or corporation to encourage any alien laborer, mechanic, or artisan to migrate from any foreign country to the United States, by promise of employment, through advertisement or otherwise, and any such alien who shall thus be encouraged to immigrate to the United States, or who shall be a party to a contract prohibited by section 1 of this act, shall not be permitted to remain, but shall be returned to the port from whence he sailed; and the expense incurred by the United States in the enforcement of this section may be collected from the person, persons, or corporation who has thus encouraged the immigration of the alien, by suit in the proper United States circuit court; and all such encouragement of immigration by promise of employment, through advertisement or otherwise, shall be construed as a violation of section 1 of this act, and shall subject any person, persons, or corporation so encouraging the immigration to the penalties provided in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 5. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent any citizen or subject of any foreign country temporarily residing in the United States, in any private or official capacity, from engaging, under contract or otherwise, persons not residents of the United States to act as private secretary or household domestics for such foreigner temporarily residing in the United States as aforesaid; nor shall this act be so construed as to prevent any person, persons, or corporation from engaging, under contract or otherwise, skilled workmen in foreign countries to perform labor in the United States in or upon any new industry not at present established in the United States: Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be obtained in the United States; nor shall the provisions of this act apply to professional actors, artists, lecturers, regularly ordained ministers of the gospel, learned professors for colleges and seminaries, or professional singers; nor to persons employed strictly as household domestics or servants traveling in the United States with their employers: Provided also, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prohibit any individual from assisting, by donations of money, any member of his family, or any relative, to migrate from any foreign country to the United States for the purpose of permanent residence in the United States.

SEC. 6. That any person arriving in this country on any vessel may be interrogated, under oath, to ascertain whether he is embraced within any of the provisions of this act; and any officer appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to aid in the enforcement of this act, or of the act referred to in the title of this act, or any act amendatory thereof, shall have the power to administer oaths and to examine on oath any person supposed to be engaged in a violation of this act, or any of the acts above referred to, or any witness produced; and any false statement willfully made by such person or witness in the course of his examination is hereby declared to be perjury and shall subject the person guilty thereof to all the pains and penalties of perjury prescribed by law. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby charged with the duty of executing the provisions of this act, and for that purpose he shall have the power to establish such rules and regulations and issue from time to time such instructions not inconsistent with law as he shall deem best calculated to enforce the provisions of this act, and shall have the power to withhold entry and clearance from any vessel used in violating the provisions of this act, or either of the acts in this section referred to, or the master of which refuses obedience to the provisions of said act; and when it shall be determined that any person arriving on any vessel within the jurisdiction of the United States in violation of the provisions of this act, and when a return of such person to the country from whence he came has been ordered, it shall be the duty of the master of the vessel on which such person was imported, at the demand of the Secretary of the Treasury, or other proper officer, to detain said person on board said vessel and transport said person to the country from whence he came at the expense of said vessel.

SEC. 7. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

FEDERATION OF LABOR, Washington, D. C., September 15, 1890.

To the United States Senate:

The following bills have passed the House of Representatives and are now pending in the Senate:

H. R. 3226, to prevent the use of the product of convict labor by the Government;

H. R. 3928, to prevent the employment of convict labor on public buildings;
H. R. 9632, to amend the act to prohibit the importation of foreign labor under contract;
H. R. 11120, to adjust the accounts of laborers, etc., arising under the eight-hour law; and
H. R. 9791, constituting eight hours a day's work for laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, etc.

CONVICT LABOR.

The general purpose of the bills H. R. 3286 and 3928 is to prevent the competition of convict labor with free and honest labor. Experience has shown the evils of such competition, and in the various States where it has been presented to the people as an issue the verdict has always been against such competition. The enactment of these laws will place the National Government in line with the most progressive State governments, and, while enlarging the field of honest and free labor, relieve the convict from the barbarities of contract slavery, which too often disgrace our penal administrations.

IMPORTED CONTRACT LABOR.

The policy upon which the bill H. R. 9632 is based is already recognized in the enactments of Congress. It has been discussed amply, so we need add no arguments in its support. Existing law has been found inadequate to suppress the evils of the importations of labor under contract, and this bill is designed to remedy the defects of the old law. It is needless to say that it is the only measure that directly and plainly protects American labor from competition with foreign laborers, by excluding a part of the latter who would come to this country to work. If there is anything in the policy of "protection," a measure like this should stand at the head and not at the rear of the legislation on the subject, and the law should not be made ridiculous by the prosecution of importers of high-priced preachers and professors, while its real violators are ignored or lightly prosecuted and allowed to compromise suits for nominal sums. We bespeak not only the passage of this law, but an earnest and sincere administration of it.

ADJUSTMENT OF EIGHT-HOUR ACCOUNTS.

The bill H. R. 11120 comes to the Senate as an evidence that the eight-hour law of 1868 has been ignored, obstructed, and violated by hostile administrative officers. The intent of the law was that the usual or normal day's pay should be given for eight hours' work; but employees of the Government were repeatedly told that they must accept a reduction of pay, or work ten hours, or leave the Government service. The question is whether they shall have what the law intended—a full day's pay for eight hours' work—with additional compensation for extra labor exacted by Government officials in violation of law. Assuming that the Senate will give them that, we call attention to the last proviso in the bill, lines 47 to 50, page 4. The bill may as well be ignored or defeated as to be passed with that proviso. We know by experience what to expect from antiquated judges seeking laboriously to discover "implied contracts" to bar claims growing out of the violation of the eight-hour law. The presumption that men who are entitled to a day's pay for eight hours' service voluntarily gave the Government two hours more work every day "for the fun of it," seems irresistible to many judges, but it is pure poppycock to workmen not learned in the law.

If those last claims are to be paid it will be necessary to strike out the proviso on page 4 of the printed bill. We therefore urge the passage of this bill as reported to the Senate from the Committee on Education and Labor.

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The eight-hour law of 1868 was passed because, in the opinion of the working people and the Congress that enacted it, the time had come when our productive agencies enabled a worker to produce as much in eight hours as formerly in ten or twelve hours. It was believed that considerations of physical and mental welfare demanded a reduction of the hours of labor. It was seen that such a reduction was needed to give employment to those whose labor would otherwise be supplanted by machinery. It was hoped that the action of the Government would prompt private employers to adopt the same rule, and that a public eight-hour day would incite all workers to successful efforts to establish a similar work-day in private employment.

These good results have not been realized, because:

First. Administrative officers and Federal courts have held that the law gave no right to a full day's pay for eight hours' work; that it permitted employees to "contract" to work as many hours as were demanded for as little pay as was offered; and that Government officers could exact such length of service as they pleased, and "permit" employees to work as long as they liked.

Second. Administrative officers have, in nearly all cases where possible, placed public work in the hands of contractors, whose relation with their workmen was regarded as a private and not a public one.

It follows that an eight-hour law is needed which can neither be violated nor evaded with impunity by executive officers or their agents, and which will provide in substance:

1. That eight hours shall be as much as any individual shall be employed per day.

2. That for eight hours' work the Government shall pay at least the rate of wages paid per day for similar labor in the vicinity where the labor is performed.

3. That Government contractors are Government agents; that their employees are employed by and on behalf of the Government, and that contracts shall stipulate for the employment and payment of laborers and mechanics in accordance with the eight-hour law.

4. That appropriate penalties shall be inflicted for violation of the law.

The bill H. R. 9791 will do all this when it shall have been passed with the amendments herein suggested.

In line 7, section 1, after the word "Columbia," insert the words "and no officer of the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia shall require or permit any laborer, workman, or mechanic to work more than eight hours per calendar day." This is necessary, because, though the bill defines a day's work, and in section 2 prohibits contractors from requiring more, it nowhere, except by inference, forbids Government officers from requiring or permitting men to work more than eight hours. This prohibition must not be left to inference, for it will never be inferred by our courts and administrative officers, as past experience has demonstrated.

In line 15, section 1, after the word "wages," insert the words "for similar services."

Strike out all after the word "subcontractors" in line 27, section 1, to the end of the section. These words were not in the bill as reported to the House from the Committee on Labor, and ought to be stricken out because they conflict with and nullify the latter clause of the second proviso of section 1. The Government should be held responsible for the acts of its agents, including contractors, to the same extent that private citizens are held responsible for the acts of their agents.

In line 4, section 2, after the word "work," insert the words "shall be," to complete the grammatical construction.

In line 7, section 2, after the word "require," insert the words "or permit."

The words "or permit" are vital to the purpose of the law. The present eight-hour law is extensively violated because workmen are employed over time. It is true that now, as a rule, they receive a day's pay for each eight hours, and, by making extra time, make extra pay. But we protest particularly against this practice. The eight-hour law is meant to get a time advantage and not a money advantage for workmen. When a man has worked eight hours and earned a day's pay we want him to quit for his own physical and mental good, and also to make room for some other worker to earn his living. It will no doubt be conceded that it would be in accordance with the principles of justice and equity to employ six hundred persons at $4 per day of eight hours than to employ four hundred at $6 per day of twelve hours, especially when two hundred persons are thereby deprived of the opportunity to labor at all.

Among all the ways of violating the spirit of the eight-hour law there is none we detect so much as the "permitting" of favored Government employees to grab all the work and all the pay. If that is all the law is to accomplish it would better be repealed. If any man wants to work ten, twelve, or fourteen hours so badly that he seeks and obtains "permission," let him do it for a regular day's pay. When there is no extra pay (except in the cases of "extraordinary emergency" named in the bill) for overtime there will be no "permission" violators of the eight-hour law.

Of course the rule that applies to Government officers should apply to Government contractors, as section 2 contemplates. But in the original bill the words "or permit" followed the word "require," in line 7, section 2, and were stricken out. They must have been stricken out to enable contractors to "permit" men to work more than eight hours. It must have been contemplated that contractors would want to "permit" men to work ten or more hours per day or the amendment would have no purpose. If a contractor is allowed to permit men to work as long as they please for any wages he pleases, it may be safely predicted that no one will be employed by contractors except those who seek permission to work more than eight hours. The force of the whole section rests on the two words "or permit," and we sincerely hope the Senate will restore them, and that the House of Representatives will concur in such action.

In reply to the charge that this section (2) infringes the rights of citizens (contractors and laborers), we contend that they have no rights in this respect except such as grow out of a contract with the United States. To its contracts the Government can add any conditions it may choose, and the full and complete freed man of the citizen is secured by his right to accept the contract with those conditions or let it alone.

So, too, with workmen. The Government, through its administrative officers or its agents (the contractors), for reasons of public policy, offers employment upon the condition that a full day's wages will be paid for eight hours' work, but that no overtime can be made and no extra pay can be earned. In this case every one is free to accept or reject such employment, and the freedom of the working people is in no way limited. There need be no misgivings that the Government or its contractors will lack willing workers because they are not permitted to work ten hours a day when they are guaranteed a day's pay for eight hours.

The time when the Government might have taken the lead in the movement for a reduction of the hours of labor to eight hours per day has long since passed, for, without the help of any law, and with very little encouragement from any source outside their own ranks, many trades and individuals have achieved an eight-hour day. Others will do so, and the rule will become universal, as now nearly all admit and hope. But the effort, expense, and strife incidental to the development of an eight-hour day are sore burdens to those who bear them, and, on the principle of "better late than never," the Government can give the movement a great impetus, and make the transition much easier than it will otherwise be, by the passage of House bill 9791, which, with the amendments suggested, will, we believe, compel officers and agents of the Government to enforce the law of 1868 in accordance with its true spirit and intent, and confer upon the country and the working people the benefits sought from such legislation.

In conclusion, we earnestly urge the Senate to pass the five bills herein specified, with amendments as stated, at the present session.

In our opinion, the passage of these bills by Congress, and their honest enforcement by the Executive Departments of the Government, will be fully appreciated by the wage-workers of the United States.

By direction of the Federation of Labor.

Committee.

At a regular meeting of the Federation, held this date, the above memorial was unanimously indorsed.

JOS. K. PATTEN,
Secretary Federation of Labor.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR:

It will be practically impossible under the conditions of the bill (H. R. 9791) for ship-builders to avail themselves of the privilege of building Government vessels.

The bill prevents employers from contracting with their employees for compensation or for quantity of work done, and it destroys all well-defined methods resulting from years of experience for carrying on their work, and substitutes none in their places.

It will be impossible for officers of the Government to ascertain and satisfy themselves that the provisions of the act have been violated, as matters that enter into the construction of a modern man-of-war are so numerous and various in character that they can not be followed up to their sources.

It is certain also that Government and private building can not go on in the same establishment at the same time, while for private work where there is freedom and unrestricted liberty to make such arrangements between employer and employed as they deem best suited to their interests and profession, and where for Government work iron-clad and adverse laws with severe punishment is the rule.

It would be well for the Senate to avail themselves of the discussions of the Trade Union Congress, Hope Hall, Liverpool, whose week's sittings concluded on September 6 of this month.

The eight-hour question was the principal subject engaging their attention. The representatives of those unions, composed of skilled artisans, such as the amalgamated engineers, cotton spinners, and others, were opposed to Parliamentary interference with personal rights and to measures tending to pauperize skilled industries.

That great representative of the people and level-headed statesman Mr. Bradlaugh was one of the many who took strong grounds against the efforts to establish by Parliament a parental care over any class of the citizens of Great Britain, and has attacked the scheme of Parliamentary rates for wages and time for work.

No harm can come from investigating this subject, and all the facts bearing on the case should be ascertained by the Senate before finally settling this great question.

In fact, there should be an amendment to the bill, if it must pass so soon, providing for the appropriation of — millions to purchase the various ship-building and other establishments destroyed in consequence of the passage of this bill.

CHAS. H. CRAMP.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill which has been under consideration will be returned to the Calendar, retaining its place.
Mr. BLAIR. Without prejudice.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 25th instant approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

An act (S. 745) for the relief of Henry G. Healy;
An act (S. 750) for the relief of Christian Fredericksen;
An act (S. 897) to establish a port of delivery at Sioux City, Iowa;
An act (S. 2835) to amend an act approved March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to amend sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, and making Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry in place of Middletown;"

An act (S. 2553) to remove the charge of desertion and of having enlisted in the Confederate service from the records of the War Department standing against John McFarland, and to grant him an honorable discharge;

An act (S. 3089) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to survey and mark the seventh standard parallel between the States of North and South Dakota;

An act (S. 3130) to correct the military record of William Smith, of Tennessee;

An act (S. 3843) to provide for the establishment of a port of delivery at Rock Island, Ill.;

Joint resolution (S. R. 6) granting permission to officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy of the United States to wear the badges adopted by military societies of men who served in the war of the Revolution, the war of 1812, the Mexican war, and the war of the rebellion;

Joint resolution (S. R. 102) to print the annual reports of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the years 1889 and 1890; and Joint resolution (S. R. 109) providing for the printing of the Agricultural Report for 1890.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 20) granting right of way across United States lands in St. Augustine, Fla.;

An act (S. 1872) to restore telegraphic communication between Taosch Island and Port Angeles, Wash.;

An act (S. 3751) to grant to the Mobile and Dauphin Island Railroad and Harbor Company a right to trestle across the shoal water between Cedar Point and Dauphin Island;

An act (S. 4278) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Knoxville, Tenn.;

An act (S. 4280) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Chattahoochee River, in the State of Georgia; and

An act (S. 4581) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Oconee River, in the State of Georgia.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. STEWART. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow.
The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7666) making an appropriation to construct a road and approaches from the city of Alexandria, Va., to the national military cemetery near that city, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio, Mr. KINSEY, and Mr. LANHAM managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5067) for the relief of Archibald Hunley, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OSBORNE, Mr. LANSING, and Mr. LANHAM managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3716) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army, and to regulate promotions therein, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to a conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CUTCHERON, Mr. OSBORNE, and Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2048) granting right of way to the Junction City and Fort Riley Street Railway Company into and upon the Fort Riley military reservation, in the State of Kansas, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio, Mr. KINSEY, and Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 473) for the relief of the Portland Company, of Portland, Me.;

A bill (S. 497) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas;

A bill (S. 1187) for the relief of the Washington Iron-Works;

A bill (S. 3801) authorizing the use of the Louisville and Portland Canal basin on certain conditions;

A bill (S. 3830) to prohibit book-making of any kind and pool-selling in the District of Columbia for the purpose of gaming;

A bill (S. 3895) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within 5 miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within 5 miles of Farrowtown, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois," approved March 3, 1883;

A bill (S. 4064) for the relief of William J. Martin;

A bill (S. 4074) to provide an American register for the bark Campanero, of Baltimore, Md.;

A bill (S. 4297) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases; and

A bill (S. 4334) to authorize the building of a bridge at Dardanelle, Ark., across the Arkansas River.

UNITED STATES LAND COURT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1042) to establish a United States land court, and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 13, page 18, strike out the seventh subdivision and insert in lieu thereof:

Seventh. No confirmation shall in any case be made or patent issued for a greater quantity of land than was originally granted by the Government under which the claim had inception, or for any greater quantity of land than was legally granted by such Government when the same was made.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, the bill before the Senate has been attacked with great vigor and severity, and perhaps I may add bitterness. The Senator from Colorado has said with reference to it that its passage would be a disgrace.

The bill as it stands is utterly unjust and unfair and indefensible. It is a bill which is asked for by nobody who has valid interests in the grants from Mexico, and a bill which is desired by no good citizen who wishes that this should fulfill its obligations.

He said further with reference to it:

The bill proposes to tear up and destroy these titles which have never been questioned and to authorize this Government to seize and to steal all these valid grants exceeding 11 square leagues.

Also:

Such a course is iniquitous, and under no pretense of right or justice can it be in my opinion sustained.

It is because of this attack upon the bill that I feel impelled to take a part in the discussion in order that I may bear my full share of responsibility as a member of the committee which reported the bill.

The contention upon which the opposition to the bill rests is mainly with reference to the status of what are known as perfect claims. It is argued that all claims and grants originating during the Spanish and Mexican occupation of the States and Territories where this bill is to be operative will be forever barred unless since the cession to the United States they have been confirmed by Congress or finally decided upon by other lawful authority. An examination of the bill, as already stated by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] and by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], will show that it provides for no action with reference to titles and grants which were perfect at the time of the cession. Such titles need no aid. They stand confirmed by the terms of the treaty.

Yesterday while the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] was upon the floor I referred to the case of the United States vs. Wiggins, in 13 Peters, on page 350. In that case, which arose under a Spanish grant, the distinction is drawn between a perfect title and an incomplete title. The court says with reference to the former:

That the perfect titles made by Spain before the 24th of January, 1818, within the ceded territory, are intrinsically valid, and exempt from the provisions of the eighth article, is the established doctrine of this court, and that they need no sanction from the legislative or judicial departments of this country.

In speaking of the other classes of claims it says:

But that there were at the date of the treaty very many claims whose validity depended upon the performance of conditions, in consideration of which the concessions had been made, and which must have been performed before Spain was bound to perfect the titles, is a fact rendered prominently notorious by the legislation of Congress and the litigation in the courts of this country for now nearly twenty years. To this class of cases the eighth article was intended to apply; and the United States were bound, after the cession of the country, to the same extent that Spain had been bound before the ratification of the treaty, to perfect them by legislation and adjudication; and to this end the Government has provided that it may be sued by the claimants in its own courts, where the claims shall be adjudged, and the equities of the claimants determined and settled according to the law of nations, the stipulations of the treaty, and the proceedings under the same, and the laws and ordinances of the government from which the claims are alleged to have been derived.

These are the rules of decision prescribed to the courts by Congress in the act of 1824, chapter 173, section 2, passed to settle the titles of Missouri and Arkansas, and made applicable to Florida by the act of 1828, chapter 70, section 6. By the sixth section of the act of 1824 the claimant who has a decree in his favor is entitled to a patent from the United States, by which means his equitable claim draws to it the estate in fee. These are the imperfect claims to which the eighth article of the treaty with Spain refers.

Under statutes which were passed with reference to the settlement of these claims both the holders of the perfect and the imperfect claims were required first to go before the commissioners and afterwards before the courts for the settlement and adjudication of those claims. It was decided in another case, which I have here, that even the action of the commissioners upon perfect claims, when it was unfavorable, did not prevent the courts afterwards from deciding differently and from declaring that they were perfect claims and that the titles were good. The case to which I refer is The United States vs. Percheman; it is found in 7 Peters, page 51. It was a case argued with great ability. Attorney-General Taney was upon one side, who afterwards became Chief-Justice of the United States, and Colonel White, who at that time or about that time represented the then Territory of Florida as a Delegate, were the counsel before the court, and the opinion was rendered by Chief-Justice Marshall.

In this case the parties had gone before the commission. They had there failed. The United States afterwards permitted itself to be sued in its own courts in order that the validity of the grants might be adjudicated. Those cases which had been before the commissioners were not, by the language of the law, to be considered by the court afterwards, but in this case the parties filed their petition before the court, notwithstanding the previous rejection, and Mr. Taney, representing the United States, argued in the Supreme Court, among other things, that the court had not jurisdiction in the case under the act of Congress of May 26, 1830, the claim in question having been finally acted upon and rejected by the register and receiver, who were the commissioners. The position taken by Mr. White was that it was not competent for Congress to pass any law authorizing any tribunal created under its authority to invalidate a perfect title confirmed by the treaty of the 22d of February, 1819.

I will read a short extract from the opinion of the court, found on the eighty-sixth and eighty-seventh pages. The court say with reference to the rights of persons owning land in the ceded territory who had obtained their grants and held perfect titles under the previous government:

It may not be unworthy of remark that it is very unusual, even in cases of conquest, for the conqueror to do more than to displace the sovereign and assume dominion over the country. The modern usage of nations, which has become law, would be violated, that sense of justice and of right which is acknowledged and felt by the whole civilized world would be outraged, if private property should be generally confiscated and private rights annulled. The people change their allegiance; their relation to their ancient sovereign is dissolved; but their relations to each other and their rights of property remain undisturbed.

If this be the modern rule, even in cases of conquest, who can doubt its application to the case of an amicable cession of territory? Had Florida changed its sovereign by an act containing no stipulation respecting the property of individuals, the right of property in all those who became subjects or citizens of the new government would have been unaffected by the change. It would have remained the same as under the ancient sovereign. The language of the second article conforms to this general principle: "His Catholic Majesty cedes to the United States, in full property and sovereignty, all the territories which belong to him situated to the eastward of the Mississippi, by the name of East and West Florida."

A cession of territory is never understood to be a cession of the property belonging to its inhabitants. The king cedes that only which belonged to him. Lands he had previously granted were not his to cede. Neither party could so understand the cession. Neither party could consider itself as attempting a wrong to individuals, condemned by the practice of the whole civilized world. The cession of a territory by its name from one sovereign to another, conveying the compound idea of surrendering at the same time the lands and the people who inhabit them, would be necessarily understood to pass the sovereignty only, and not to interfere with private property.

Further on the court say:

This article is apparently introduced on the part of Spain.

Referring to the eighth article of the treaty, which perhaps I may as well read. The eighth article of the treaty says:

All the grants of land made before the 24th of January, 1818, by His Catholic Majesty, or by his lawful authorities in the said territories ceded by His Majesty to the United States, shall be ratified and confirmed to the persons in possession of the lands, to the same extent that the same grants would be valid if the territories had remained under the dominion of His Catholic Majesty. But the owners in possession of such lands, who, by reason of the recent circumstances of the Spanish nation and the revolutions in Europe, have been prevented from fulfilling all the conditions of their grants, shall complete them within the terms limited in the same, respectively, from the date of this treaty; in default of which the said grants shall be null and void. All grants made since the said 24th of January, 1818, when the first proposal on the part of His Catholic Majesty for the cession of the Floridas was made, are hereby declared and agreed to be null and void.

The court say:

This article is apparently introduced on the part of Spain, and must be intended to stipulate expressly for that security to private property which the laws and usages of nations would, without express stipulation, have conferred. No construction which would impair that security further than its positive words require would seem to be admissible. Without it the titles of individuals would remain as valid under the new government as they were under the old; and those titles, so far as at least as they were consummated, might be asserted in the courts of the United States, independently of this article.

The court ask, indignantly, further on:

Is it possible that Congress could design to submit the validity of titles which were "valid under the Spanish Government or by the law of nations" to the determination of these commissioners?

Notwithstanding the previous adverse determination of the commissioners, the Supreme Court held that that grant was valid.

Mr. President, it is with reference to decisions of this class that the committee constructed this bill. There are three classes of cases referred to. Two only have been mentioned in the debate. The third has been treated and considered as though it was a mere repetition or consolidation of the other two. These are the classes found in the sixth section. First, those "which at the date of the passage of this act had not been confirmed by act of Congress;" second, those which have not been "otherwise finally decided upon by lawful authority;" and, third, those "which have not become complete and perfect."

These are the three classes of claims which are provided for in this act. The jurisdiction is given to the proposed court in cases of those three classes and none others. It expressly excludes the perfect grants which have been defined clearly in the decisions which I have read, and in those decisions it is declared that they need no assistance from the legislative or judicial departments of the Government. The bill further says in the first paragraph of section 13:

First. No claim shall be allowed that shall not appear to be upon a title lawfully and regularly derived from the Government of Spain or Mexico, and one that at the date of the acquisition of the territory by the United States the claimant would have had a lawful right to make perfect—had the territory not been acquired by the United States, and that the United States are bound, upon the principles of public law, or by the provisions of the treaty of cession, to respect and permit to become complete and perfect.

Evidently the imperfect title alone is referred to—

It is only these three classes of claims which are required to be presented to this court. It is only these three classes of claims that this court has any jurisdiction to hear and decide by the terms of this bill. It is only these three classes of cases here enumerated which are barred by this statute of limitations of two years. Section 12 of the bill says:

That all claims which are by the provisions of this act authorized to be prosecuted shall, at the end of two years from the taking effect of this act, if no petition in respect to the same shall have then been filed as hereinbefore provided, be deemed and taken, in all courts and elsewhere, to be abandoned and shall be forever barred.

The court has no jurisdiction over any but these three designated classes of claims, and therefore, by the express terms of this twelfth section, they only, and not the perfect claims, are barred by this bill. This bill treats the perfect claims as the Supreme Court regards them, as needing no help from the legislative department of the Government.

Then, Mr. President, the allegation that all claims, without regard to their being perfect or imperfect, are to be barred in two years is not sustained by the record, as will be found by a proper examination of the terms of the bill. The case which has been cited from 130 United States Reports, arising under the California statutes, was in a different position, for there the court did have jurisdiction over the perfect titles as well as the imperfect titles. There the act did require that the imperfect titles and perfect titles alike should be presented for the adjudication of the courts, and after the period fixed in the statute had elapsed the Supreme Court made the decision that the power of Congress was supreme over the matter. But there has been no such arrangement proposed in this bill with reference to perfect grants.

Mr. President, I will read the eighth section of the treaty with Mexico upon which this present matter rests as showing the difference between it and the Florida treaty which I read awhile ago, the treaty of 1819. Article 9 of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, says:

In the said territories property of every kind, now belonging to Mexicans not established there, shall be inviolably respected. The present owners, the heirs of these, and all Mexicans who may hereafter acquire said property by contract, shall enjoy with respect to it guarantees equally ample as if the same belonged to citizens of the United States.

If a person had a perfect title under the Mexican Government or one derived from the Spanish Government, then the title is perfect and valid now; it needs no aid from the United States; it needs no aid from Congress; it needs no more aid than the title to the land which I own derived from the patents of the United States. The titles which were good, perfect, and complete under the Mexican law at the time of the cession are good, complete, and perfect now, and if there is anything in the decision of the Supreme Court in the case which I read, those people require no aid whatever from the Government with reference to their titles.

Mr. President, if there are defects in this bill, the bill can be amended. I do not think that the defect which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WELCOTT] has dwelt so much upon, and which I have referred to now, amounts to anything. I do not think that any change is required with reference to that matter. The bill has been worked upon industriously in the committee-room. It had its origin, as I am told, many years ago, and in its early history it was wrought upon by some of the ablest lawyers who ever came to the Senate. The bill was before the committee during the last Congress, and again during the present Congress. Every section, every sentence was industriously examined and perfected with all the ability and industry that the committee could give to it.

We did not have in the committee-room the counsels of the Senator from Colorado. It is to be regretted that we did not have the benefit of his experience and his knowledge and his acquaintance with the country where the lands included in the grants are situated, and with the inhabitants. It was a surprise to me when I first heard that he had any objections to the bill. It was reported on the 28th of April. He had apparently acquiesced in all that was done in the committee-room. He has filed no adverse report, he has filed no other bill including his views, coming from him as a minority of the committee, and it was with surprise that I first heard that the objections existed which he has brought to the attention of the Senate.

I do not think, as I said before, that the objection just treated of is a valid one. If there are others the bill can be amended. The limitation as to time, as suggested by Senators who occupied the floor yesterday, can be very readily changed. As was said by the Senator from North Carolina, it was tentative, and we can easily extend the duration of the court so as to give all parties who have claims which need the aid and attention of the court all the time that justice and right require.

But, Mr. President, I do not think that the bill is subject to the severe criticisms which have been made with reference to it. I do not think it is unjust, unfair, and indefensible. I claim that it affords relief and assistance that are very much needed, according to the remarks which have been made by Senators living in that section of the country. It gives ample relief to all small holders who own not over 160 acres. In section 16 it is provided:

That in township surveys hereafter to be made in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, Wyoming and Utah, and the States of Colorado and Nevada, if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the deputy surveyor making such survey that any person has, through himself, his ancestors, or grantors, been in the continuous adverse actual bona fide possession, residing thereon as his home, of any tract of land of not exceeding 160 acres in such township, for twenty years next preceding the time of making such survey, the deputy surveyor shall recognize and establish the lines of such possession and make the subdivision of the adjoining lands in accordance therewith.

And in section 17 a similar provision is made in cases where the townships have been surveyed. That section provides—

That in the case of townships heretofore surveyed in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, Wyoming and Utah, and the States of Colorado and Nevada all persons who, or whose ancestors or grantors, became citizens of the United States by reason of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and who have been in the actual continuous adverse possession and residents of tracts of not to exceed 160 acres each for twenty years next preceding such survey, shall be entitled, upon making proof of such facts to the satisfaction of the register and receiver of the proper land district, and of the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon such investigation as is provided for in section 16 of this act, to enter, without payment of purchase money, fees, or commissions, such legal subdivisions, not exceeding 160 acres, as shall include their said possessions.

So, Mr. President, settlers on all these small bodies of land, not exceeding 160 acres in extent, occupying them under arrangements similar to our homestead laws, whether they originally had paper titles or whether they had not, those who have simply been in possession for twenty years or more, are protected without fee or expense or cost. The Government goes there and measures their land and sets it off for them, and where land has already been surveyed a similar provision is made. So, ample provision is made for all these poor people and these owners of small bodies of land who are actually living upon them.

Then, every holder of an imperfect title has his day in court, whether he has a large body of land or a small body; if he has got a concession or grant or survey or writing of any kind, no matter how imperfect, if it is such a title or such a showing as under the laws of Mexico, or under similar laws of this country, would entitle a citizen of this country to relief, he has his day in court and an opportunity for relief.

Then there is the fair and legitimate inference from the language of the bill that the holders of perfect titles, no matter how large, shall be recognized as the actual owners of the land included in their grants. They are not required to come into court. They are not required to present any documents or claims. They receive actual relief without any necessity of coming before the court at all. They are treated just as the United States Supreme Court has treated others in a like situation under the Florida law, as needing no help from the Government, no help from the legislative or the judicial departments of the Government.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PASCO. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator's statement, supported by citations which he deems authority, is to the effect that perfected claims are not to be included in this act at all, whether they have been confirmed or not; that claims which are perfect and not confirmed are not intended to be included in this act. It is to those of us who think we know at least that district entirely immaterial or practically immaterial whether or not the bill excludes claims that are perfect and not patented, or whether it provides that parties having claims which are perfect but not confirmed may come before this tribunal and have them passed upon by a court or otherwise. Would the Senator as a member of the committee object to an amendment—I simply ask this so that I may know the opinion of the Senator—on page 17, where the fourth subdivision says:

Fourth. No claim shall be allowed for any land the right to which has hitherto been lawfully acted upon and decided by Congress, or under its authority.

Would the Senator object to a clause being added as follows?

Not any claims for lands which are complete and perfect, although they may not have been confirmed by Congress.

Would such an amendment not be in entire accord with the Senator's present interpretation of the bill as it stands?

Mr. PASCO. My objection to inserting anything with reference to those who have perfect titles is that it would seem to be casting a cloud upon titles which are already ample and full and which need no assistance from the Government. I would not feel that any benefit would be afforded me if the Legislature of the State of Florida or the United States Congress should pass a law allowing me to go into court to settle a title to land that I own and hold without dispute in my own State; and it seems to me that when a person has a perfect title, one that is so recognized by the Government, one that is so recognized by the Supreme Court, it is an injury rather than an advantage to him to throw open the doors of the courts and require him to come in and prove to be certain and correct and sufficient what has always been regarded as certain and sufficient and correct. The very act of opening the doors of the court in such a case would have a tendency to weaken and impair and cloud the title of the holder. That is the objection which I have to any legislation of that kind.

Mr. MORGAN. If it will not interrupt the Senator from Florida—

Mr. PASCO. Certainly not.

Mr. MORGAN. My difficulty has been, I will say to the Senator, in this case mainly that there is no definition either in the treaty or in this bill of what is a perfect and what is an imperfect title under the Mexican law. Can the Senator describe what is a perfect title under the Mexican law and give an illustration of it, and also what is an imperfect title and give an illustration, so that we may know what the committee means when these phrases are used? I wish to call the attention of the Senator to a fact in regard to it. I think it is not the custom of the Mexican Government to issue patent. I do not mean the general Government. I am speaking now of the state governments.

Mr. SPOONER. In any case?

Mr. MORGAN. The juridical possession under a grant in Mexico is a legal investiture of title and possession by operation of law, whether it is attended with actual occupancy or not. That juridical possession after it is made out by an alcalde is returned for record in the land office of the state at the capital of the state in which the land is situated where the grant comes from the state, and that record constitutes his title, not that a separate patent issued setting forth all of these facts. If I am correctly informed about it, that is the procedure by which a title is derived from the state governments of Mexico.

Now, will the Senator say that the record of the state government, where the title emanated from such a government, must show every fact that is necessary to a complete investiture under the Mexican law? Would that be a perfect title within the meaning of this bill? Then, if that is a perfect title, what is it that is an imperfect title? Is it the one that is merely defective in the fact that all the records have not been completed which would make up a perfect title, or is it one in which a part of the record has been completed and where the party having the grant has made what we would call an equitable compliance, a substantial compliance with the terms of the grant and its future conditions upon which the grant is to become complete as a juridical grant?

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, it would be very presumptuous in me to attempt to give a full answer to such a question as that when asked by the Senator from Alabama, who we all know has so much learning in the law and who has had so much experience in matters of this kind.

The question of perfection is at last a question for the courts. The general idea of a perfect title is a title to land which has been separated by an act of the former government from the public domain and which the party is in possession of under a grant from the former government. That is the general idea of a perfect title. But it is at last a question in each case to be determined by the courts.

But with these perfect titles derived from the former government a party can go into court, he can defend himself, and he can protect himself; and if the title is perfect and the possession has been held under it, he needs no help from the Government in accordance with these decisions.

The imperfect titles, as a general rule, are those grants or concessions which are conditional, whose terms have not been complied with—the Senator enumerated a number of them the other day—where a man receives a body of land from the Government upon the promise that he would put a colony upon it, that he would feed a certain number of sheep or cattle upon it, that he would build a mill or something of that kind. Those are given in the books and in the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States as illustrations of imperfect titles.

Parties who are in possession, such as are provided for in the sections which I just read (16 and 17), who have been allowed to enter upon lands as settlers under a general policy of the Government similar to our homestead laws, are holders of another class of imperfect titles which are referred to in some of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States; those persons are dependent upon the further favor and assistance and help of the Government before they can have their titles perfected.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator understand that under this bill this court is to have any jurisdiction whatever of an imperfect title as he defines it?

Mr. PASCO. That is its very purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. As I recollect the provisions of the bill, this court shall take jurisdiction only of those titles which upon principles of public law or in order to perfect the obligations of a treaty the party is entitled to perfect.

Mr. PASCO. These are the three classes that are enumerated in section 6: those "which at the date of the passage of this act have not been confirmed by act of Congress;" those which have not been "otherwise finally decided upon by lawful authority;" and those "which have not become complete and perfect." They are in a similar situation to those who file declarations of homesteads in our own General Land Office and comply with the terms of the homestead laws. Such titles are incomplete, inchoate, imperfect. Under the provisions of the treaty and under the provisions of this act such holders would be entitled to go and perfect their claims and receive their final patents or proofs of title from the Government.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from Texas allow me?

Mr. REAGAN. I merely wish to make one observation. What, no doubt, raised the question in the mind of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is the fact that the law takes for granted that we understand that the titles to be acted upon are those that had their incipency under the Mexican or Spanish Government, and which had not been perfected. That, I do not think, is specifically described in the bill, but the bill evidently takes it for granted that we do so understand. It is those titles which have had their incipency under the Spanish or Mexican Government and which were not perfected under those Governments.

Mr. PASCO. Does not the Senator think that the third description covers those "which have not become complete and perfect," and then the first paragraph of section 13, which says:

First. No claim shall be allowed that shall not appear to be upon a title lawfully and regularly derived from the Government of Spain or Mexico, and one that at the date of the acquisition of the territory by the United States the claimant would have had a lawful right to make perfect had the territory not been acquired by the United States, and that the United States are bound, upon the principles of public law, or by the provisions of the treaty of cession, to respect and permit to become complete and perfect.

Mr. REAGAN. The bill is more full than I thought it was.

Mr. RANSOM. Will my friend from Florida yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PASCO. With pleasure.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask the attention of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I am listening to the Senator.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Alabama asks the Senator from Florida for his definition of an imperfect and of a perfect title. That is a question which very naturally and properly occurs to every Senator in the discussion of this bill, and if I am not mistaken I can relieve the mind of the Senator from Alabama, lawyer as he is, of all doubt upon that question—I mean of all doubt so far as the practical operation and effect of this bill are concerned.

As I stated yesterday, the jurisdiction clause in the bill before the Senate is substantially and almost literally the jurisdiction clause in the law of Congress creating what is known as the Louisiana Commission.

Mr. MORGAN. The act of March, 1805?

Mr. RANSOM. I am not certain as to the date, but I think it is March 30, 1805. I think it was afterwards amended, perhaps in 1818, but they are substantially the same, and I took the liberty yesterday evening, when the Senator from Alabama was addressing the Senate, of calling his attention to that clause as offered here by the late Senator from Florida, Mr. Jones.

Instead of undertaking myself to give a definition of an imperfect title or a definition of a perfect title, I will say to the Senator from Alabama that since 1805, assuming that to be the date of the act creating the commission in Louisiana, the Supreme Court of the United States and the courts of the different States made up out of the Louisiana purchase have repeatedly, time after time, declared what was a perfect title and what was not a perfect title, and I think it is safer for us now to stand by the adjudications and the definite judgments of the Supreme Court of the United States delivered in numberless cases than it is in this bill or in an act of Congress to undertake to define a perfect or an imperfect title, an incipient title—that seems to be the term that has caught the fancy of the Supreme Court, if I may say so, and Judge Miller, always with great significance, uses that term—I think it is much safer to take their adjudication of this question than to undertake to put it more fully in this bill.

The Senator, no doubt more familiar with many of these cases than I am, will find that sometimes it has been a very nice question for the Supreme Court to decide whether the title from the Spanish or the French Government required further action from this Government, or whether it was perfect in itself. I prefer myself—if my friend from Florida will allow me to hold the floor for one second further—to say that I think it safer for Congress to stand upon those adjudications of the last eighty-odd years than it is to put in new terms in this bill, attempting to give a significance of definition to a legal expression which has had illustration after illustration from the courts of the States and from the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. PASCO. Now, Mr. President, with reference to this—

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. PASCO. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the attention of the Senator from North Carolina. I have listened attentively to his observations, and he will remember that when this bill first came for debate before the Senate I asked the Senator, as chairman of the committee having the matter in charge, to state succinctly the distinction, as he understood it, between a perfect and an imperfect title, stating to him at the time that as to a perfect title, as I understood it, I could not understand why Congress should impose any limitation upon a recovery.

That is to say, if a man had perfected his title by performing the conditions of a grant of 100,000 acres, and the court found it to be a perfect grant, if the concession was found to be made, if the limits of the grant were established and the conditions found to have been definite and to have been performed, upon what principle of justice does the committee ask the Senate to impose a limitation upon the amount of the recovery? The Senator informed me and informed the Senate, in reply to my interrogatory, that under this bill this statutory court, as I choose to term it, was not to have jurisdiction of perfected titles; that it was intended to confer upon this tribunal only jurisdiction of those inchoate, incomplete, or, to use the appropriate phrase used by the Senator from North Carolina, those equitable titles as to which—and if the Senator's statement of the law and the facts be correct, then his answer to me was complete—the condition not having been performed, the grant not being complete, it was at the option of the Government to enter for a condition broken and put an end to the entire grant, or as a matter of grace to allow so much of the grant as it chose.

Now, what I should like to ask the Senator is this: I understand the law to be as to a conditional grant, that the grant proceeding from the sovereign, it is for the legislative department of the Government to determine where the condition had not been performed whether it will enter for condition broken or will waive the condition. Is it intended by this bill to delegate to this tribunal to determine whether the condition not worked out shall be waived or enforced? In the case of a grant upon condition, the condition not having been performed, is it for the court to say or for Congress to say whether the party shall be permitted to perform the condition or not?

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I presume of course I was not very clear, and it is not the fault of the Senator from Wisconsin, but it is my fault that he did not understand me. I may have used during the debate the word "grace," but I was not using it in reference to the court. Under this bill there is no grace to be exercised by this court. This court will have a well defined duty to perform, and that duty will be to determine upon the facts, conditions, and circumstances of the case whether according to the law of Mexico and Spain these claimants are entitled to have their grants completed or consummated. It is not left in the sky. Their duty will be well defined and bounded. They will have to say, as positively as it is possible for the law to speak, whether the circumstances of each particular case invest the claimant with the right to have his title consummated.

Mr. President, all that I meant to say to the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Alabama was that having had since 1805—for I am satisfied the Senator from Alabama has the date accurately—a long line of judicial decisions upon this very question, repeated over and over again under all the different circumstances under which these titles have grown up, I thought it was better for Congress to stand by and abide by well defined terms which have been understood and adjudicated by the courts than to attempt to add to them by new words or new phrases which might embrace something that ought not to be embraced or might exclude something that ought not to be excluded, that it would be safer for us to stand in this bill by the jurisdiction clause of the commission act affecting the Louisiana purchase.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, with reference to this question of perfect and imperfect grants, I call the attention of the Senate to a description of the different classes of grants as given by Mr. Gilpin, who was Attorney-General of the United States at the time, in the case of the United States vs. Wiggins, found on the three hundred and fortieth page of the fourteenth volume of Peters's Reports. It is in his brief as counsel in the case representing the Government. He says:

Grants of land in Florida by the Spanish authorities, so far as they have come before this court, appear to have been of three classes:

First. Absolute grants, in consideration of services already performed, which were made by the governors, in special cases, either by virtue of a special power recognized by the laws of the Indies (2 White's New Recopilacion, 38, 40, 53), or by the authority given in particular decrees, coming directly or indirectly from the sovereign, as in the case of the grants conferred upon Salas, Pausin, and Percheman, in reward for their services (2 White's New Rec., 290). The very nature of these grants forbids a limitation on the quantity, or on the consideration that might move them. They are recognized by this court in the cases of the United States vs. Percheman (7 Peters, 97) and United States vs. Clark (8 Peters, 453).

Second.—

This is an example of the imperfect grants—

Second. Grants in consideration of services to be performed, and deemed especially important for the improvement of the province. These do not seem to have grown out of any law or royal order, but were not infrequent for some years before the cession of Florida. They were established by usage, and recognized as lawful. (2 White's New Recopilacion, 286, 289, 290.) The services appear to have been of three kinds: The erection of saw-mills, factories, or mechanical works; the introduction and rearing of large numbers of cattle; and the establishment in particular places of large bodies of settlers. The titles to these were, in some instances, absolute on their face, and conveyed a present grant from their date, though coupled with conditions for the subsequent performance of the specified services; or they were mere concessions or incipient grants, securing a future absolute title, on the performance of the conditions.

Then he goes on to speak of the cases in which they are recognized, and says further on:

Third. But the great class of cases was that of gratuitous grants, in moderate quantities, for purposes of actual occupation and cultivation. To this class is applicable the general system of Spanish land law which existed in Florida and Louisiana; and the regulations embraced under it are as clear and distinct as those of the land laws of the United States. It is true, the grants were gratuitous, but the performance of the conditions annexed by the law was a consideration as explicit as the payment required by our laws.

Those, Mr. President, are instances of different kinds of grants. The first is the absolute title, the perfect grant. It needs no help from the Legislature. It is a weapon of attack or of defense that can be used in the courts as a means of obtaining possession when the holder is unlawfully ousted or as a means of resistance if his rights are assailed. The holder of such perfect and valid grant and title, as I have said before, needs no help from us, and no help is provided for him by the terms of this bill.

The purpose of the bill is not to try titles, not to decide whether they are valid or not, but it is to complete them, to perfect them. They had their origin in the days of the Spanish or Mexican occupation, and when they are incomplete and insufficient and not capable of being used as weapons of attack and defense in the courts, then the holder can come in under the terms of this statute and complete his title and obtain the patent of the United States if he satisfies the court that he has a just and meritorious claim.

Then, to repeat briefly what I said before, this bill protects small holders to the extent of 160 acres of land. It gives the holders of incomplete titles their day in court. It virtually says to the holder of the complete title that he needs no assistance from a court, and that Congress will not interfere at all with his rights or claims. The only persons who do not obtain complete relief are those who hold grants exceeding 11 leagues in extent, and it is claimed by Senators who have argued against the bill that such holders should also be provided for.

The Senator from Colorado has not made out a very strong case in behalf of claimants of this class who live in the Territory of New Mexico. He says that the land there is so poor that it can hardly support the cattle which graze upon it. He says it is even beyond the reach of the water of irrigation to bring it up to a state of cultivation; but this land is presumably of some value, and by the earnestness with which these claims have been pressed there is no doubt that much of it is very valuable. But whatever rights these parties have should be protected whether the land is valuable or not.

The question is to what extent they should be protected at the present time. They need no protection if their grants are perfect. If they are not perfect they have their day in court in this bill to the extent of 11 leagues. If they establish their claims they will be perfected to that extent and patents will be given to them. It is only to the extent in excess of 11 leagues that they do not get protection under this bill. They are not barred. The bill simply provides no remedy for them beyond the 11 leagues. It does not prevent Congress, after getting at the merits of these cases as they will be disclosed in the records when they are presented to the courts, from giving them relief hereafter to a further extent, which very likely will depend upon the merits of their several claims. But certainly, as has been well said by other Senators who have discussed this bill, these people get a very large benefit and advantage when they have their claims confirmed to the extent of 11 leagues.

It is a dangerous quantity of land to be given to any one person. It is against the policy of the Government that lands in very large bodies should be vested in individuals. Eleven leagues is nearly 50,000 acres of land. Some of these claims run up into the millions of acres. They are large enough for duchies or baronies. They are larger than some of the States of this Union, and it is wise for Congress to pause at the present time before giving the court unlimited authority to confirm all of these grants, no matter how large they may be.

It is wise to wait until these people have presented their cases, until they have made up their records, until their equities are known, and then it will be within the power of Congress at a later day, if it sees fit, to give further relief. As I said before, they are not barred beyond that extent. This bill simply gives them no remedy, but it should not be condemned for that reason. The bill is generous enough towards these holders. We are for the present doing enough for them, and it is not wise that we should at the present time give unlimited authority to the courts in respect to these large and enormous and dangerous claims.

Many of them are no doubt fraudulent. There is a great temptation to commit forgery when there is so much at stake. It is well known that in the history of claims of this class frauds have been committed, and it is no "infant industry," either; for the manufacture of fraudulent grants will be found by any one who studies this class of cases to have originated a great many years ago in the history of this country; the older the grant the more difficult it is to find out whether or not it is good and honest and valid.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PASCO. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Suppose it should turn out in an investigation before the court that the claimant was just as much entitled to 100,000 acres as to 48,000, or 11 leagues, how is the court to determine where his grant is to be located? Is there anything in the bill which authorizes the court to determine where his 48,000 acres or 11 leagues are to be located?

Mr. PASCO. There is nothing further in the bill except the general powers of a court of equity which are given to this court. The bill is silent as to the mode of procedure in such a case.

But, as I said before, if these parties prove to the satisfaction of the court by their records that they are entitled to further relief, there is nothing to prevent Congress at any future day from giving it to them. It is the history of legislation of this class that there have been extensions of the power and authority and time in every case where such additional legislation has appeared to be necessary. But, as I said before, if holders of these large grants exceeding 11 leagues in extent shall prove to the satisfaction of the court by their record that they are entitled to relief, there is nothing to prevent Congress at any future day from extending it to them to the entire amount of their claims.

Mr. President, in view of all the benefits that there are in this bill, although it may not give ample relief to the satisfaction of everybody so far as all classes of claims are concerned, it seems to be eminently proper that it should pass.

It is stated by all those who know the history of the States and Territories in which these lands lie that some legislation is necessary, and here is a bill providing for a court, which gives jurisdiction in every class of claims except those holding these large grants, and there is nothing, as I said before, to prevent these parties from getting further relief hereafter. Having made this provision in harmony with the legislation which has been attempted in previous Congresses in years gone by, having brought the matter so near to a state of completion, I trust that the bill will pass, and that the amendment which has been offered and which is particularly under discussion will be rejected.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 5) for the relief of Bessie S. Gilmore;

A bill (S. 2781) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3257) granting a pension to Mary Crook, widow of George Crook, late a major-general in the United States Army;

A bill (S. 3711) granting a pension to Ellen M. McClellan;

A bill (S. 4233) granting a pension to Jessie Benton Fremont;

A bill (S. 4375) to provide an American register for the steam-ship G. W. Jones of New York;

A bill (H. R. 2174) to remove charge of desertion from Ellery C. Folger;

A bill (H. R. 8247) to authorize entry of the public lands by incorporated cities and towns for cemetery and park purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 8943) to provide for the establishing of a port of delivery at Peoria, Ill.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11928) defining certain duties of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 608) making an appropriation for the construction of new buildings and the enlargement of the military post at Plattsburgh, N. Y., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 11154) to repeal part of section 6 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts," approved July 20, 1882, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 214) extending the "Act fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia, if paid within a time specified," to October 31, 1890, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

OKLAHOMA TOWN SITES.

The bill (H. R. 11627) to authorize the issuance of subpoenas for the attendance of witnesses before town-site trustees in Oklahoma was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT. I wish for the present that that bill may lie on the table. I should like to have printed in the RECORD, so that it may be seen by Senators to-morrow, a short letter from the Department of the Interior to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and a letter from the Assistant Attorney-General and a letter from the Secretary of the Interior to the chairman of the Committee on Territories of the House of Representatives, transmitting a letter from the governor of Oklahoma. They are very short, and I should like to have them printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, July 28, 1890.

SIR: The act to provide for town-site entries of land in what is known as "Oklahoma," and for other purposes, approved May 14, 1890, fails to confer any power upon the boards of trustees to issue subpoenas for the attendance of witnesses before said boards or to provide any penalty for refusal of any witness to obey such subpoena.

Deeming that it is essential to the success of the labors of the respective boards that such power should be conferred, I beg leave to lay before the House of Representatives the opinion of the Assistant Attorney-General assigned to this Department upon the subject, and the form of a bill authorizing the issuance of subpoenas in such cases, and request that early action may be taken thereon.

Most respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, July 25, 1890.

SIR: A letter dated July 18, 1890, from Winfield F. Smith, of Guthrie, Oklahoma, and addressed to you, calls attention to the necessity of conferring authority upon the boards of town-site trustees in said Territory to issue subpoenas for the attendance of witnesses in cases that may come before them. This letter you referred to me with the request that you should be advised as to whether under the Oklahoma town-site laws or other United States statutes the said town-site trustees have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses, and if no such authority now exists to prepare a bill will give such power to said boards.

In response to your reference I have the honor to report that under the law as it now stands the boards of town-site trustees are without authority to compel the attendance of witnesses, and that I have in accordance with your request prepared the draught of a bill, submitted herewith, which is intended to confer upon said boards the requisite authority to secure the presence and testimony of witnesses in proceedings that may be pending before them in their official capacity as trustees.

Respectfully,

GEO. H. SHIELDS,
Assistant Attorney-General.

To the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, August 25, 1890.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to place before you a portion of a letter just received by me from the governor of Oklahoma, as follows:

"While I know you desire to do all you can for the best interests of your Department, I trust you will not think it out of place for me to remind you of the great importance it is to the citizens in this Territory that your recommendation that compulsory process may be issued by the various town-site boards for witnesses becomes a law; otherwise it is going to be impossible, in many cases, to arrive at any equitable conclusion.

"A case in point: I heard a very respectable man say to-day that he could tell exactly when a certain party arrived in Guthrie, but he was not going to appear before the board and make an enemy of him in a matter he had no personal interest in; that there was no compulsion, and he could better be out of the city. There are numerous similar instances to my knowledge."

Yours, truly,

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

HON. ISAAC S. STREUBLE,
Chairman of the Committee on Territories, House of Representatives.

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be printed and lie on the table.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE IN BOONE COUNTY, MISSOURI.

Mr. VEST. I am about leaving the city and I should like to secure the passage of a bridge bill. That is about the only matter that detains me here. I ask unanimous consent to call up Order of Business 2098, Senate bill 4395.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4395) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point in Boone County, Missouri.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, after the word "Springfield," to strike out "Railway" and insert "Railroad;" so as to read:

That the Chicago, Hannibal and Springfield Railroad Company, an incorporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, its assigns or successors, is hereby authorized to construct and maintain a bridge across the Missouri River at such point as may be hereafter selected by said corporation between the towns of Providence and Rocheport, in the county of Boone, in the State of Missouri, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 9, after the word "location," to strike out "the topography of" and insert "the high and low water lines upon;" in line 10, after the word "river," to strike out "the shore lines at high and low water" and insert "the direction and strength of the current at all stages of the water, with the soundings accurately showing the bed of the stream, and;" and in line 14, after the word "bridges," to insert "such map to be sufficiently in detail to enable the Secretary of War to judge of the proper location of said bridge;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be constructed and built without interference with the security and convenience of navigation of said river beyond what is necessary to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted; and in order to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the high and low water lines upon the banks of the river, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages of the water, with the soundings accurately showing the bed of the stream, and the location of any other bridge or bridges, such map to be sufficiently in detail to enable the Secretary of War to judge of the proper location of said bridge, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the proviso to section 2, in line 23, before the word "feet," to strike out "fifty" and insert "fifty-five;" in line 25, after the words "shall the," to strike out "channel span" and insert "spans;" in line 26, after the word "length," to strike out "nor shall the other spans be less than 300 feet in length;" and in line 30, after the word "river," to insert "and said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, and shall have three or more channel-spans, and shall not be of less elevation at any point than 55 feet above high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the lowest part of the superstructure; nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than 400 feet in length, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river, and said company or corporation shall maintain at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 2, after the word "way," to insert "across said bridge and approaches," and in line 3, after the words "telegraph lines," to strike out "across said bridge;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and approaches for such postal and telegraph lines as the Government may construct or control.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 4, before the word "act," to strike out "said" and insert "this;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That this act shall be void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES LAND COURT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1042) to establish a United States land court, and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have been very anxious indeed to support this bill. I have tried every way I could to reconcile myself to it. I am unable to do so after listening to the arguments of gentlemen who have addressed the Senate upon it so frequently and so ably. I think that perhaps there is no more imperative duty resting upon the Senate at this session of Congress than to pass some bill in regard to this very vexed question. It ought to be provided for. We have been nearly fifty years at it, and we have not got a law yet in regard to the particular territory we are speaking of which amounts to anything.

I notice that the general framework of this bill is upon the analogies, to say the least, of the statute of 1805 to carry into effect the land grants in Louisiana made under the French and Spanish occupancy of that country before the year 1800. There was a particular fact of history in that connection which ought to be kept in mind. After the treaty of purchase of Louisiana was made, and also later in the Florida arrangement of 1818, I think, it was ascertained that there were a great many grants that had been antedated and that pending the negotiation the treaty related back to a certain time when the jurisdiction was changed from one Government to the other, and that question was pending. The Spanish Government had issued grants to various people which were considered in fraud of the treaty rights of the United States, and both this act of 1805 and the act referred to by the Senator from Florida had reference to the frauds which might be practiced under that abuse of treaty rights, and were leveled against that.

There were two classes of claimants in Louisiana, those who had an incomplete title, a title that had been by grant made honestly by the French or Spanish Government anterior to the year 1800, but had not been completed as to all its conditions, and then there were titles acquired by occupancy or by possession of American citizens after the year 1800.

A commission was organized consisting of three persons under the fourth section of the act of 1805 to adjudicate these questions of title, and that commission had certain specific powers which are not found in this proposed act in regard to the adjudication of what were termed incomplete titles. The first section of the act of 1805 provides—

That any person or persons, and the legal representatives of any person or persons, who on the 1st day of October, in the year 1800, were resident within the territories ceded by the French Republic to the United States by the treaty of the 30th of April, 1803, and who had prior to the said 1st day of October, 1800—

You see the treaty was in 1803, and this act of Congress goes back to the year 1800, three years anterior, so as to cut off fraudulent transactions pending the negotiation of the treaty—

who had prior to the said 1st day of October, 1800, obtained from the French or Spanish Governments respectively during the time either of the said Governments had the actual possession of said territories any duly registered warrant or order of survey for lands lying within the said territories to which the Indian title had been extinguished, and which were on that day actually inhabited and cultivated by such person or persons, or for his or their use, shall be confirmed in their claims to such lands in the same manner as if their titles had been completed.

There is a statute which draws a plain distinction between a title that is incomplete and one that is complete by statutory enactment and definition. Now, here is the proviso:

Provided, however, That no such incomplete title shall be confirmed unless the person in whose name such warrant or order of survey had been granted was at the time of its date either head of a family or above the age of twenty-one years, nor unless the conditions and terms on which the completion of the grant might depend shall have been fulfilled.

That is a plain statute; you would suppose there would be no trouble about interpreting that law, and the decisions which have been quoted here so frequently are based upon that plain provision of the act of 1805, showing clearly the distinction between titles that are incomplete and titles that are complete, the distinction itself being described and mentioned and stated with exactness in the body of the statute.

The next section relates to grants to actual settlers of land occupied by them with the permission of the proper Spanish officer and in conformity with Spanish usages, etc., and those grants are to be confirmed upon a different basis. They were possessory titles merely, titles by mere occupancy, and not under any special grant.

The fourth section provides for a registration of incomplete grants and also of completed grants, and it provides that if an uncompleted grant is not registered in the office of a certain recorder within a certain time the grant is to be forfeited. There is a proviso to the fourth section which I shall read:

Provided, however, That where lands are claimed by virtue of a complete French or Spanish grant as aforesaid it shall not be necessary for the claimant to have any other evidence of his claim recorded, except the original grant or patent, together with the warrant or order of survey, and the plat—

That is all he had to do to make the record complete—but all the other conveyances or deeds shall be deposited with the register or recorder, to be by them laid before the commissioners hereinafter directed to be appointed, when they shall take the claim into consideration. And if such person shall neglect to deliver such notice in writing of his claim, together with a plat as aforesaid, or cause to be recorded such written evidence of the same, all his right, so far as the same is derived from the two first sections of this act, shall become void and forever thereafter be barred; nor shall any incomplete grant, warrant, order of survey, deed of conveyance, or other written evidence which shall not be recorded as above directed ever after be considered or admitted as evidence in any court of the United States against any grant derived from the United States.

Section 5 provides for the appointment of two commissioners and one of the judges there, who shall constitute a commission for the decision of these land titles.

Now, it is perfectly obvious that decisions predicated upon a statute like that can not be held to determine what is meant by, or the length, depth, height, width, or breadth of, a measure like this. They are entirely different.

Before proceeding to try to illustrate that difference more completely, I wish to call attention to a decision of the Secretary of the Interior made in the Myra Clark Gaines case. I will read an extract from his decision:

The Secretary of the Treasury, 30th March, 1805, referring to the act of 1805, in his instructions to J. W. Gurley, esq., in transmitting him his commission as register of the land office of the eastern district of Orleans, which included all that part of the territory east of the Mississippi, with all the parishes lying on the west bank and bordering on the same, and including the Fourche, remarked as follows:

"For the present I will call your attention only to one part of the law. It is enacted by the fourth section that persons claiming lands by virtue of legal French or Spanish grants made before the 1st of October, 1800, may file a notice of their claim with the register; but that persons claiming either under the first two sections of the act or under incomplete titles shall do it under penalty of their claim being forever barred.

"You will easily perceive that the distinction is drawn from the different nature of the claims; that the first species is considered as already established and not wanting any confirmation from the Government of the United States; but it is necessary that the people should be also made to understand it; that they should know that it is not intended to disturb their rights founded on legal grants, and that the object of that first paragraph is merely to enable them to have their grants recorded in an American office, if they shall think it expedient, and to prevent the possibility of the United States selling through mistake lands which have already been legally granted.

"It is true that persons claiming lands under complete grants dated after the 1st of October, 1800, are included in the same class with persons who claim under incomplete titles, and that there may exist some cases in which such grants are not confirmed by the first two sections of the act of 1805."

Whoever will go to the General Land Office here and search it, as I have had occasion to do—for as a member of a committee of this body it was my duty to do it—will find there a large number of grants claimed under the treaty of 1803 in favor of citizens of Louisiana that are as yet undecided. No provision of law has been made for their decision. The grants stand as claims against the United States Government. That is the way they are treated in the Department upon the record, as claims against the United States Government; and there are hundreds of them that have never yet been adjudicated by the Interior Department, and no court has had jurisdiction to dispose of them.

Many of those are valid grants under the act of 1805, and, notwithstanding the provision that is made for commissioners to decide upon the validity of those grants, they still remain undecided. Why so? It is because they were not of the particular description mentioned in the act of 1803. They did not have all of the incidents and qualities that are defined and specified in that act. Hence those commissioners did not have jurisdiction to decide them.

Mr. President, there has not been a uniformity of rulings that all the grants which were valid under the treaty of 1803 stand upon their own merits and are considered valid and are treated as valid by the courts, for it must be remembered that in that case, as in this case, the grants thus claimed are not urged against private individuals liable to be sued, but they are urged against the United States Government.

Take the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. What was the situation of the territory we acquired under that treaty and under the Gadsden treaty the very moment of the proclamation of the ratification of those treaties? It was that the United States Government owned in its own right under those treaties every foot of land acquired by them that was not covered by a valid Spanish or Mexican grant, either complete or incomplete. The United States Government has always acted upon that idea, and the Secretary of the Interior has not hesitated to send out and have surveyed any portion of that domain which did not have resting upon it a grant that he himself was disposed to recognize as being valid, and he has disposed in this way to that extent of various claims originating under the Mexican law, I say without rhyme or reason, I say without an adjudication, I say by a summary proceeding. It is true he has not injured the title to any extent, because he had no power to do it; but the possessory right and all that relates to surveys and possession and the right of fencing and the like, including the right of pasturage upon those lands, he has decided upon the theory, which is a correct one, that all the lands that were not covered by completed land grants derived under the Mexican Government at the moment of time when those treaties were proclaimed went to the United States and became their property, and whoever claims one of these grants claims it under the laws of Mexico, through the treaty, against the United States. That is his claim, for if the United States Government concedes his right that establishes his title. Then the question between him and somebody else who may be upon that land is a question of local law. But the title, the monument, that which in the judgment of the law upon the face of the papers is a complete and perfect title, is established or not established by the assent of the Government of the United States in the first instance.

Now, here is a man with either a grant from the State of Sonora or a grant from the general federal Government of Mexico made upon conditions subsequent. He takes all the legal steps that are necessary to give him the first possessory right to these lands. First he makes his application under whatever law it is, whether it is an empresario grant, whether it is a grant for herding cattle and sheep, or whether it is a grant for agriculture, for the colonization of people upon the land, or for any other purpose. He makes his application, and he says, "I want whatever land the laws of this State or this Government allow me in a certain territory up here to be granted to me upon condition that I do this particular thing, colonize it with people, herd it with cattle or sheep, or some other thing."

The party to whom he makes the application issues to him upon that application a warrant of survey. He takes that with his surveyor and the witnesses and he goes and marks off the boundaries of the land that he wants to enter, confining himself as near as may be, but in an awkward, rude way usually, to the amount of land that the Government says he may have under such a grant. He sits down, after having made his survey, with his witnesses and he makes up the descripcion, he makes up the survey. He takes that to the proper land officer or to the alcalde, and they make their report. They swear to it. The alcalde or the proper officer thereupon certifies that this man is entitled to juridical possession of that land. The conditions subsequent are to be performed in the future.

Now, I will suppose that all these things had been done a month, six weeks, or two months before the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was signed and proclaimed. We took that Mexican citizen and that territory with his preliminary proceedings all regular and right, and, if the Government had not been compelled to surrender that land to the United States at the end of a war, he was going on in good faith to comply with all the conditions subsequent. If it was an empresario grant he was going to have his people there; if it was a cattle grant he was going to have his cattle and sheep there; he was going to live upon it or have his agent live upon it until such time as he would be entitled upon further proof of a full compliance to a certificate that all these conditions had been complied with.

But the Mexican Government was very loose about requiring the certification of the performance of these subsequent conditions. In nine cases out of ten in regard to all of these grants you may search the records of those States and of the federal Government and you will not find one case in ten, perhaps not one in a hundred, where the final certification of the man's full compliance with all the conditions subsequent has been made; and it really is not an essential of the title.

Here is a man who six weeks before the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo went through all this formula with due and legal regularity and took his land, was admitted to juridical possession. He was there and we found him there, our citizen, when that treaty was made, and it was our land except so far as it was affected by his rights under the Mexican law. The Government of the United States did not have the policy of having herds of cattle upon these great pasture grounds; it did not have the policy of having a colonization of people upon these places; it did not have the policy of giving to these respective colonists a certain amount of land because they went there, and of giving by way of premium to the empresario a certain amount of other land lying outside of the colony or adjacent to it as a fee or reward for having these colonists upon that land. We had no such policy as that. Our policy was quite different.

Now, what is the law in regard to a condition of affairs like that? The Government of the United States finding itself in possession of the jurisdiction and sovereignty over this land, not having a policy in conformity with that of Mexico, it has been said here frequently defeats the condition subsequent and makes the grant perfect. Yet when you go back to the Mexican law and read through it you can not find the evidence upon the record of a perfect grant; you have got to come down through the treaty; you have got to discuss and apply the policy of the United States Government; you have got to determine that that policy has relieved the party from compliance with the condition subsequent, and therefore has made the grant perfect. All these things are to be ascertained; and yet that is not a complete title under the Mexican law. That is described here as being an incomplete title, if anything is described as an incomplete title. It is not a complete title.

Here we come in and try to provide for it. We want to make a law providing for this condition of affairs and relieving these people from these embarrassments, and to relieve hundreds of thousands of others who never had a scrap of paper in the world to show that they were entitled to one foot of land, and yet they and their ancestors have been living on it for one hundred and fifty years. We have got to do something to relieve these people. We can not take them as citizens of the United States and rob them of whatever rights they would be entitled to under the Mexican laws. We have got to find out what those laws are, what the equities are between the Government and the citizen, and we must make some provision to discharge our obligation and protect that ownership and not turn these poor people out.

We have a proposed statute here which says that this statutory court shall have jurisdiction of certain cases. What are they? Incomplete titles, and no other, for if a title is complete, according to the language of this bill, the court has no jurisdiction. It is a question of power on the part of the court. Now, let us see whether that is treating the citizens out there with justice or not. A man has been in possession of a Spanish grant for a number of years. He has looked back upon the records, and he has seen that at the time the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was proclaimed his title was complete in all the legal preliminaries, but incomplete as to the conditions subsequent, and the Government of the United States had discharged the necessity of his making it complete in that particular. He must come into a court and show such a case as that he has not got a complete title; that is, a valid title, valid in law, for if his title is admitted in law it is complete enough, whether the forms have been complied with or not. A complete title means a valid title.

Mr. HOAR. Where does the statute say it must be complete?

Mr. MORGAN. I am talking about this bill.

Mr. HOAR. I do not find that in the bill. I have looked for it. I did not know but that the Senator might know where it was.

Mr. MORGAN. I could show it to the Senator in a minute if I had the bill before me.

Mr. HOAR. Here is the bill. Here is section 6.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In regard to what provision does the Senator inquire?

Mr. HOAR. I ask where there is anything in the bill that speaks of complete or incomplete titles.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Section 6, page 7.

Mr. HOAR. Just look at section 6 and see.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is all that does touch it except at the bottom of page 17, the fourth subdivision. Those are the only two clauses that describe the grants to be passed upon.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator to say there was a good deal of distinction. It is the confirmation of a grant, concession, or warrant. It speaks of nothing else.

Mr. MORGAN. That is all that this bill proposes to do. This bill deals with nothing in the world but naked title between the Government and individuals. It does not settle private rights between individuals. They are not settled. This is a bill to settle the question of title between the United States and claimants, as I have frequently said, and it authorizes a suit by the United States, which means a suit of the United States Government, to determine this question. The jurisdiction of the court is confined in this way:

Sec. 6. That it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons or corporation, or their legal representatives, claiming lands within the limits of the territory derived by the United States from the Republic of Mexico and now embraced within the Territories of New Mexico, Wyoming, Arizona, or Utah, or within the State of Nevada or Colorado, by virtue of any such Spanish or Mexican grant, concession, warrant, or survey—

"Of survey," that ought to be, not "warrant, or survey"—

Any such Spanish or Mexican grant, concession, warrant, or survey as the United States are bound to recognize and confirm by virtue of the treaties of cession of said country by Mexico to the United States which at the date of the passage of this act have not been confirmed by act of Congress, or otherwise finally decided upon by lawful authority, and which have not become complete and perfect.

In every such case a petition in writing will confer jurisdiction upon the court.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? I should like to have his judgment upon one point. If the Senator will take section 6, which he has just been reading, the provision of the section is that it shall be "lawful for any person claiming lands," not claiming a title or anything of that kind, "by virtue of any such Spanish or Mexican grant, concession, or warrant," which has not been confirmed, which Congress is bound to confirm by treaty. There is nothing in the bill which requires in words the court to deal with titles inchoate or complete or otherwise. In substance it is that if the United States is under obligation to pass certain laws making a grant, whatever creates that obligation, then the court is to do so, it is to confirm. Now, the point of this distinction, if there be anything in it, which I wish to call to the attention of the learned and able lawyer who is now addressing the Senate, the Senator from Alabama, is how can we impose on the Supreme Court of the United States as a final arbiter the duty of inquiring whether Congress ought to legislate on the subject? We can impose upon them the duty of rendering judgment on the title.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Massachusetts has not read the section in the light in which I understand it at all.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I want to hear. I want to see whether that is the true light or not.

Mr. MORGAN. The language of the section is—

Concession, warrant, or survey as the United States are bound to recognize and confirm by virtue of the treaties of cession of said country by Mexico to the United States—

That does not say "by Congress"— which at the date of the passage of this act have not been confirmed by act of Congress or otherwise finally decided upon by lawful authority.

Mr. HOAR. In other words, my inquiry is this: The United States have engaged with Mexico to make certain legislative grants in the future.

Mr. MORGAN. No; not that.

Mr. HOAR. That is all this confirmation applies to.

Mr. MORGAN. No; it is to confirm grants that have been heretofore made by Mexico.

Mr. HOAR. That is the same thing. It is an act of legislation.

Mr. MORGAN. No.

Mr. HOAR. If a man has got a complete title, I heard the Senator just say, then the court has nothing to do with it. If a man has not got a complete title what he lacks is a legislative grant, which we agree to make. Now we refer him to the court to establish whether we ought under the circumstances of law and equity to grant this land, the title of which is now otherwise in us. How can that be made a judicial question? Is my inquiry.

Mr. MORGAN. It is made a judicial question by this bill.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that, but by the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator let me answer?

Mr. MORGAN. No, I will answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. STEWART. I was going to refer the Senator to a decision.

Mr. MORGAN. As I understand the drift of the idea and question of the Senator from Massachusetts, it is that our duty in this particular is a legislative duty, and that by this bill probably we are transferring this legislative authority to this commission; but after all that amounts to legislation and no more; that it is the consent of the Government of the United States and the perfectness of the title that has been conferred by that completed or incomplete act originated before the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

Now, I am looking at this as if it were a court, for evidently it is. It is bound to be a court. Otherwise you could not get an appeal from this court to the Supreme Court of the United States. You can not take an appeal from any legislative tribunal. But if this is intended to be a court—and there is where I think the difficulty is—it is intended to be a court of very limited jurisdiction, with another unfortunate circumstance about it, and that is that it shall expire in four years, when everybody who has listened to this debate must understand that it will take ten or fifteen years to finally dispose of all these cases. There is no doubt about that, I think. But, it is intended to be a court.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him a moment? I can not refer to the exact decision, but this very question was brought up in a California case, because all those cases, or a large number of them, went through the courts, and they held that the court constituted a special tribunal in the nature of a committee, and that Congress had power to carry out its treaty obligations in that manner, and refer the cases to the Supreme Court or to any court to carry out the treaty obligations.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I do not dispute that the Congress of the United States has a right to organize a commission to dispose of these matters if it chooses to do so.

It did authorize the surveyors-general to make surveys and really to confirm titles, and we can authorize this court, or so-called court, to do it if we choose. But that does not meet the proposition as to what we ought to do. How far ought we to spread the jurisdiction? That is the question in this case. Ought we to limit it to cases where the title is incomplete or ought we to say to this court, "Take the whole subject, take any man's case who comes, decide it for him or decide it against him, but let your decision be final of his rights," and then compel every man to go there and bar him out by a short statute of limitations if he does not go? This last is my view about what this bill ought to be, and my objection to it is just this:

I go into the court, and being compelled to take the risk myself of deciding without the assistance of the court what my title is, whether it is complete and perfect, being compelled by this bill to take the whole risk of that question, I make up my mind and I go into court, and I say to the court, "Here is a title that upon the advice of counsel I think is incomplete. It is valid, it is honest, and I have been in possession of it for many years with very little intrusion. Sometimes a man would come upon me and worry me, but I want this matter settled. The adverse claimant to me, so far as the question of simple, naked, pure, title is concerned, is the Government of the United States. I do not regard these people around me who may be intruders. Congress has not undertaken to deal with my rights and the rights of some other individual citizens around me. Congress has undertaken to decide between me and the Government of the United States, whether I have got what would be called a good title or an incomplete one. I am advised by counsel that my title is in some respects incomplete in legal formality, in the legal requisites, but I have got this equity, I have got that equity, and that other equity, and any one of them is quite sufficient to give me in equity a title as against the Government of the United States. But still my title is incomplete; my lawyers so advise me." The court looks over my papers and says, "We must first ascertain whether that title is complete or incomplete before we have any jurisdiction. In looking at your papers we find that your lawyer is mistaken and that you have got a complete title; we turn you out of court. You have got no right to a remedy here, because you have a good title. We can not decide anything for you. We have no jurisdiction. Our jurisdiction is made to depend upon the incompleteness of your title, and when we find it is complete we have no power. You must go to some other court or some other tribunal; we turn you out and you must take the chances."

Those judges' opinion may be a very good one or it may be a very bad one, for many a decision has been made on a bad opinion which stands notwithstanding it is a bad opinion and a bad decision; it stands because of the authority and right of the judiciary to settle questions, to make a finality of litigation.

Now, that is an unfortunate situation, and I can not see the justice of requiring that settler first to determine in his own mind that he must admit he has no legal title, that he has no actual title that binds the Government of the United States before he goes in, and when he gets in there the court says, "We reject the jurisdiction because we find that you have a good title."

That will not do. That is not proper legislation. The court that deals with these questions ought to have the right to decide upon every phase of the title, and in deciding to make a final adjudication, and let that be an end of it. That is all I want to see introduced into this bill. I want the terms of these judges to be for a longer period; at least I want the powers of the court to exist for more than four years; I do not think that is enough. However, we might remedy against that some time later on, if it shall be found that the court is not going to complete its business, as everybody must see it can not, within that period of time.

Here is a multitude of questions. A more vexed and entangled situation was never presented to the contemplation of a legislator than the condition growing out of Mexican land grants in these great sweeps of territory. There is not any problem connected with the Government of the United States that is so intricate, that is so filled with misfortune, if we make a blunder here, to people who are not able to help themselves. I believe when we are legislating we ought to have an especial care of those people who can not help themselves. You pass this law here and it will be two years or three years before a great many of those people will ever find out it is on the statute-book. People living in those little Mexican villages about on the Rio Grande and other places far remote will be a long time in finding out what provision has been made for them, and where to go for relief, and what to do. They should have a court there that can give relief to any man who has a good claim based upon prescription, as we recognize the doctrine of prescription, or upon any statutes of the United States of limitation, or based upon any equities growing out of the Mexican land-grant system. If he has got a good claim let us furnish him a court to settle it.

The objection against this, the only one that I can understand, is that perchance some fraud may get the sanction of this tribunal. After all the provision we make for appeal, for a new trial, really in the Supreme Court here, if the judges see proper so to order it upon the facts, after all the laborious provisions we make in this bill for the sake of preserving the just rights of everybody, the Congress of the United States is to be alarmed out of its propriety upon the idea and the only idea that the judges we are to appoint are to become the mere tools of intriguing men to administer fraud and corruption instead of justice. I do not believe that; I do not fear it.

I should be more afraid even of this Senate than I should of those judges, because the Senate has not got the opportunity of understanding the facts, and there is no human being who can draw a line of distinction and discrimination between these different classes of cases out there and fail to inflict some hardship and some injustice. It is a case over which the powers of the courts of equity ought to rest and prevail, and the judges ought to be permitted in every different case to take the recognized powers of courts of equity and apply them to the decision of the rights of the parties.

So I can not vote for the bill in the strict and narrow form in which it is presented. It seems to be a bill merely to prune off and lop off every possible opportunity for the commission of fraud, and yet you measure the fraud by 11 leagues. You can commit just as big a fraud inside of 11 leagues as you can inside of a thousand. The 11-league grants are just as apt to be fraudulent as the 30-league grants or whatever they may be. It is not the size of the grant at all; that has not anything to do with it; and for us to undertake to cut down the power of the court to administer relief to a certain important area of land amounts to nothing so far as meeting fraud is concerned. That is not the way to do it. The way to do it is through the powers of a court of equity. It is to do it through the all-prevailing sense of justice that we recognize as belonging to our judicial system and the great right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. That is enough. When a man gets that, he gets all we can give him, and he ought to be satisfied, even though he is defeated in his claim.

For that reason, Mr. President, I can not support this bill as it is, and I am very sorry I can not do it, for I should like to concur with this committee. It is a great committee, but I think it has gone over this question and has studied it and has trimmed around it and has been confronted with such clamors about frauds in land grants that it has been driven to an expedient that is unwise, an expedient of legislation to destroy fraud when you can not destroy it in that way. The thing you have got to do is to prune it out through the powers of a court of equity, and after you have done that then you will have some idea that you are doing about right.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMAS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This being private-bill day, I wish to know whether a motion can not be made to take up private bills on the Speaker's table and afterward to consider Senate bills on the Calendar which are not objected to.

The SPEAKER. The motion can not be made except by unanimous consent.

WORLD'S FAIR.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a subcommittee, of which the chairman shall be one, be appointed by the chairman of the Select Committee on the World's Fair, to inquire into the progress of the details for the holding of the proposed exhibition, and to examine into the amount of space allotted to the various Government displays and other matters pertaining to the displays of the United States at the said exhibition, and all other matters in connection with said exhibition, which may appear to the said subcommittee advisable to report to the House, and to submit the result of said inquiry and examination to this Congress at the beginning of the second session thereof; and the expense of said inquiry and examination be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and the chairman be authorized to draw for same on the Sergeant-at-Arms in sums not to exceed $500.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not see any necessity for the adoption of any such resolution. We already have a national commission that is looking after this matter.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRANK. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HOPKINS subsequently withdrew his objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his objection. Is there further objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. According to the terms of the resolution, as I understand it, while the amount drawn is not to exceed the sum of $500 at any one time, yet the number of times when such sums may be drawn is unlimited. I think there ought to be some limit to the possible expenditure.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. It is impossible for us to tell what the amount of the expenditures will be. It can not however be a very large sum. If the gentleman desires to put an amendment on we shall not object; but under any circumstances this is merely a business committee and can not incur any expense beyond what is essential for the purpose contemplated. The demand for it comes not only from our committee, but from the chairman of the board having in charge the exhibit of the United States; we think it important that we should inquire into the multiplication of officers and other expenditures progressing at this time. We do not object to any limitation; but the committee claims, as I have said, that this is purely a business committee and that there will be no unnecessary expenditure.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Can the gentleman form an idea how much it will probably require?

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. It is impossible to determine.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let the amendments be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "subcommittee," in line 1, the words "of five," so that it will read "a subcommittee of five," etc.
 Also in the line preceding the last line strike out the words "Sergeant-at-Arms" and insert "Clerk of the House."

The amendments were adopted.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARREARAGE OF SPECIAL AND GENERAL TAXES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ENLOE. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the District Committee I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a joint resolution (H. Res. 214) extending the "Act fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia, if paid within a time specified," to October 31, 1890.

Mr. ENLOE. Is that under consideration?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this is a matter of public importance for the District of Columbia.

Mr. ENLOE. But is it under consideration at the present time?

The SPEAKER. It is not at present, but is necessary legislation for the District.

The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the act approved May 6, 1890, being "An act fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia, if paid within a time specified," be, and they are hereby, re-enacted and extended to the 31st day of October, 1890.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MCOMAS. I would like to have a statement before giving consent.

Mr. GROUT. The act referred to, approved May 6 last, provided that arrearages of taxes paid before July 31 should have 6 per cent. interest only charged upon them and that the penalty and the 2 per cent. provided by another law should be remitted. Before this act, making provision for the settlement of these arrearages by the payment of 6 per cent. per annum penalty got through the two Houses it was so late that only a very small proportion of the amount in arrears was paid, something less than $100,000. There is between $300,000 or $400,000 in arrears, if my memory serves me right. I speak from recollection of a statement and understanding I had at the time.

This joint resolution proposes to extend the time to October 31, and the committee believe that a very large proportion of the balance still in arrears will be paid, with 6 per cent. interest, if the opportunity is given under suitable legislation.

Mr. MCOMAS. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GROUT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, MELBOURNE.

Mr. FLOWER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

Mr. STIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. STIVERS. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back a resolution referred to the committee, and recommend its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to have the reports of the United States commissioners to the Centennial International Exhibition at Melbourne, 1888, or such of them as may be accepted by him for publication, printed and bound at the Congressional Printing Office; and that in addition to the usual number there shall be 600 extra copies for the use of the Senate, 1,200 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,200 for the use of the Department of State.

The resolution was considered, and adopted.

STEAM-BOAT INSPECTION SERVICE.

Mr. FLOWER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk. This, I will state, relates to the steam-boat inspection service.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it be read for information.

The resolution was read at length. (See page 10522.)

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CANNON. I would like to know from what committee this comes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object.

Mr. FLOWER. Then, a parliamentary question: Will the resolution go to the Committee on Commerce?

The SPEAKER. It would go properly to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. FLOWER. I ask its reference there.

The SPEAKER. That can be done under the rule.

Mr. FLOWER. Then I ask the reference under the rule.

CHARGES AGAINST THE POSTMASTER OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee rises to a question of privilege. The House will be in order.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that the Postmaster of the House of Representatives has upon the roll of his employés, at $100 per month, a Mr. Bradley, who works in the Government Printing Office, and that the said Bradley pays $95 of the $100 to the son of Mr. Wheat, who does not work in the House post-office: Therefore, Be it resolved, That the Committee on Accounts be, and they are, directed to investigate the said charge.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I have something to say concerning that resolution.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman wishes to address the House he has a right to.

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, I would like to do so, because yesterday when I had the opportunity, as I thought, by dealing fairly with gentlemen on the other side, to have control of my resolution, I was taken off the floor in a way that I thought was rather unusual in this body.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the course pursued is not unusual in this body, but, on the contrary, the regular course of procedure.

Mr. ENLOE. I will say that while it might have been regular in a parliamentary sense—and I do not mean to reflect on the Chair in that particular—I say that, in order to give gentlemen on the other side an opportunity to be heard in a matter in which I thought they were interested, I attempted to act fairly in the matter of reserving my time, thinking that on this side we would be heard later; but a gentleman on the other side got the floor to offer an amendment to the resolution, and was accorded the privilege of moving the previous question, and cutting off any opportunity to debate the matter on this side by the mover of the resolution or anybody else. Now I only wanted to deal fairly in the matter. This is another matter that needs investigation, as well as the one that was up yesterday.

I want to say, in reference to the desire of the gentleman to go back and investigate preceding administrations of the House Post-Office, that I had no desire to prevent the investigation of any Postmaster, either of the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, or any other Congress, but I wanted that resolution to vest discretion in the committee to extend that investigation as far as might be deemed necessary to ascertain where this practice originated, if it did originate prior to the incumbency of the present Postmaster.

I want to say, furthermore, that, so far as I am informed, the amendment which was adopted yesterday to the resolution restricted the investigation simply to the former Postmaster.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should confine himself to the resolution now under consideration.

Mr. ENLOE. This resolution refers to the present Postmaster. I do not know but what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] may want to go further back in regard to this also. I do not know but what he will want to inquire whether Mr. Dalton had a son also, who was paid in the same way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Tennessee should confine himself to the question of the resolution now presented.

Mr. ENLOE. I have no objection to discussing the present resolution. I want it adopted, and I want the matter investigated, not because I want to delay the investigation, but, on the contrary, I think the committee ought to make an investigation and report to the present session of Congress if it is possible to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], and I will reserve the remainder of my time and reserve the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy the time of the House at any great length. I think this resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee this morning illustrates the impropriety of connecting with the investigation ordered yesterday of the Postmaster of the House the investigation of the Postmaster of two preceding Congresses. The Postmaster of this House, the present incumbent, is charged with the duties pertaining to that office. On yesterday there was an allegation that, by virtue of authority to make a contract for carrying the House mail, he assumed the right to make a contract with a person who would agree to pay him $150 a month for making that contract. With so vital an allegation as that before the House, with this man now in office, the majority side of the House embarrassed the committee with the investigation of the affairs of the Postmaster of two former Congresses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] should confine himself to the present resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. Sometimes it appears that the Chair sees that gentlemen on this side of the House are out of order much more quickly than when the other side are violating the rules of the House for partisan purposes.

The SPEAKER. But in some instances gentlemen are much more clearly out of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. That depends on whose vision is employed, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to the resolution—

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, I understand.

The SPEAKER. And to ask that he will confine the discussion to that. This is a question of privilege, and the Chair will have to leave it to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I will leave it to the Speaker of this House, and end it there, as to whether or not there shall be more restraint of this side in matters of this sort than there has been time and again on the other side of the House. It was only the other day when the matter of a question of privilege was pending, while a vote of censure, a vote to expunge from the RECORD the speech of Mr. KENNEDY was pending, he was permitted to go on for twenty minutes in the presence of the House reaffirming the speech that the House was then condemning.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Georgia object?

Mr. ENLOE. Did the Speaker object?

Mr. BLOUNT. I am coming to the resolution. The Speaker, I understand, has a very plain duty in this matter of objection as well as members.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear anything in the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio which he thought called for his interference. He was allowed by the House to make an explanation.

Mr. BLOUNT. And it was a reiteration of the offense.

Mr. STRUBLE. No one in this House made objection to it, either before or during its delivery.

Mr. BLOUNT. No; nor in the delivery of the first speech; no, no, nor the Speaker either. It was a beautiful type of the dignity of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. "The Speaker" was not here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia does not mean to incorporate in his remarks a statement that the present occupant of the chair was here when that speech was made?

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not say "the present occupant of the chair."

The SPEAKER. You said "the Speaker."

A MEMBER. It was the Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. BLOUNT. The present occupant of the chair was not here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to have that correction made at least.

Mr. BLOUNT. "The gentleman from Georgia" will certainly not do the Chair nor anybody else any injustice in anything; but, Mr. Speaker, I will come back to this resolution. I am willing to acquiesce in the ruling of the Chair; and I do hope that with this man who is now in office, who one day, it appears, is making a contract illegal in the eyes of the commonest, plainest man of this country, criminal, indecent, intolerable, and that on the next day appears in an allegation (and I understand it comes from a source likely to be followed with proof) that he has on the rolls of the House of Representatives a man who is at work at the Government Printing Office, pretending to pay him $100 per month, when in fact $95 of the money is going to his son, the Committee on Accounts will act promptly in this matter in relation to this employé. I do not want anybody else to escape.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I do not see my colleague [Mr. HOUK] in his seat, or he might probably have an opportunity to offer the amendment which he tried to offer yesterday to suspend this Postmaster during the progress of this investigation. He was denied that opportunity yesterday; and I think if he were here this morning I might allow him an opportunity to offer such an amendment.

I want to say, furthermore, Mr. Speaker, on this subject, that there has been a great deal of criticism, in which I have shared, perhaps, more liberally than any member on this side of the House, for conduct here, which was supposed to be in violation of parliamentary rules. I suppose that I have had the credit of being knocked down oftener by the Speaker in matters of this sort than anybody else; and I am glad, indeed, to be able to get up again every morning to receive a fresh knockdown. [Laughter.]

I want to say right now that when I am treated fairly and have justice there is no man in this body who is more disposed to deal fairly with others than I; but when a question was up the other day involving a question of privilege, the resolution in reference to the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] was taken out of my hands by the action of the majority, referred to a committee and brought back in a shape that, so far as I am concerned, looked to me as if we were engaged in the sublimest farce that has been witnessed in this House since its inauguration—and we have had many farces—and the chief actor in that farce was permitted to repeat everything that he had said.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. He repeated nothing at all contained in the speech alluded to.

Mr. ENLOE. That is very true.

The SPEAKER. Then, if that is true, the gentleman ought not to state to the contrary.

Mr. ENLOE. He was permitted to reaffirm everything he had said here in his former speech. That is a matter which does not especially concern me if the House is willing that these things shall be done; but when I undertook to discuss a matter of privilege—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires to complain of infractions of the rules he ought to do it in a manner conforming with the rules of the House; and the Chair would suggest to the gentleman that the resolution under consideration is the matter that should be considered.

Mr. ENLOE. I understand that; but I have seen the Chair allow gentlemen, in debating questions of privilege, to take very wide range in the discussion of those matters—

The SPEAKER. What gentlemen?

Mr. ENLOE. A number of gentlemen, without interrupting the gentlemen, both on that side of the House and on this. On a question of privilege one morning I noticed that the Speaker, if he wants me to specify, allowed the gentleman from Arkansas to speak for one hour on a question of privilege, and during that one hour—

The SPEAKER. What gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman took the whole range of the Speaker's rulings.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Was not his speech in the main an attack on the Speaker?

Mr. ENLOE. And the Chair sat and received it very gracefully till he got tired.

The SPEAKER. It is very true that the gentleman alluded to and other gentlemen have made attacks upon the Chair which ought not to have been permitted.

Mr. ENLOE. That is very true.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. ENLOE. But I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that when we are settling these little affairs—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the question is on the resolution, and the House is not settling these other affairs.

Mr. ENLOE. Very well; I will address myself to the resolution. It comes with no sort of propriety from the occupant of the chair—I will not say the present occupant, for obvious reasons, but for any occupant of the chair—to indulge in wit, sarcasm, and ridicule at the expense of members on the floor when they have no opportunity to reply.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the gentleman to order. The gentleman will address himself to the question under consideration.

Mr. ENLOE. That is the adoption of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, and I think that it is a pertinent resolution and ought to be adopted. I think it is one that the dignity of this House requires should be adopted, and that this committee should be urged in every way possible to go forward and make this investigation; and if it is necessary, in order to have an investigation of the matter, that we shall go back and investigate every preceding Congress, then let us have an investigating committee that will sit perpetually and investigate everything.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. I would like to inquire if the resolution which the gentleman introduced yesterday does not cover this same matter.

Mr. ENLOE. That is a point that might possibly be a subject of controversy in the committee, and we do not want any controversy about it. I thought that possibly the resolution introduced yesterday might cover this, but there are gentlemen who have doubts about it, and, as I have said, we do not want any doubt about the right of the committee to inquire into any matter of this sort.

Mr. HILL. What is your own opinion upon that point?

Mr. ENLOE. My opinion, so far as I am individually concerned, is that the resolution of yesterday would cover the matter, but the members of the committee must be satisfied about that, and there must be no room left for doubt. For that reason I have offered this resolution, and I call now for the previous question upon it.

Mr. CASWELL. I desire to say just one word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] has moved the previous question.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, can I be allowed a word?

The SPEAKER. Only by the House voting down the previous question.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. ENLOE, and the previous question was ordered.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ENLOE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to recognize first certain gentlemen who wish to present public business. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] is recognized.

TOWN SITES IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I have been directed by the Committee on Territories to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk. I wish to say to the House that I have letters from the Secretary of the Interior, one addressed to the Speaker and one to myself, setting forth the importance of the passage of this bill.

The bill (H. R. 11627) to authorize the issuance of subpoenas for the attendance of witnesses before town-site trustees in Oklahoma was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in proceedings before town-site trustees appointed under the act entitled "An act to provide for town-site entries of lands in what is known as Oklahoma, and for other purposes," approved May 14, 1890, any board of such trustees shall have authority to issue subpoenas for the attendance of witnesses before said board at such time and place as may be designated therein: Provided, That such witnesses shall be entitled to the same fees as witnesses before the district courts of the Territory of Oklahoma, and that the party applying for the issuance of a subpoena shall be required to deposit a sum sufficient to pay said fees.

SEC. 2. That in any case where a witness fails or refuses to obey a subpoena issued as herein provided, or where a witness in a proceeding before any such board refuses to answer legal and proper questions, the said board is authorized to certify the facts with respect to the failure or refusal of the witness to appear or refusal to testify to the nearest district court of the Territory of Oklahoma, and such certification shall confer upon said court the jurisdiction to hear and determine said matter, with the power to punish as in cases of contempt in said court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRUBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members on both sides of the House addressed the Chair.

Mr. COGSWELL was recognized.

Mr. TRACEY. It seems to me that this side of the House ought to get some recognition now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say a word upon that subject and asks the attention of the House. There are a great many matters of public business which naturally come from the majority side of the House, so that it sometimes seems as if more members were being recognized on one side than upon the other, but the Chair does not consider that recognitions of gentlemen for the presentation of public matters are in the nature of individual recognitions or should be so counted. The Chair has tried his best to equalize recognitions between the two sides, and the fact that there is a larger number of members on the majority side seeking recognition seems to show that he has to a great extent succeeded. The Chair is glad to say this, because there may have been some misunderstanding on the subject.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I make application now for the first vacancy on this side. [Laughter.]

THOMAS NILES.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, being a bill (S. 181) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Niles, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the personal representatives of Thomas Niles, deceased, late of Gloucester, Mass., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,050, in full compensation for damages to the land of the said Thomas Niles, deceased, near Gloucester, Mass., by the erection of a permanent fort thereon by the United States in 1863, for the defense of the harbor of Gloucester.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire what committee this comes from.

Mr. COGSWELL. It comes from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. ENLOE. Let us have the report read.

Mr. COGSWELL. The report is somewhat lengthy, and I think I can make a statement of the case which will take less time than the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the report is demanded. The Clerk will read.

The report (by Mr. SIMONDS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 181) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Niles, deceased, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

That this claim was presented to the Fifty-first Congress, and a report was made in regard to it by the Committee on Claims on the 30th of January, 1890. As the examination by your committee has led them substantially to the same results with those arrived at by the Committee on Claims of the Senate, they do not think it necessary to recapitulate the facts, but refer to that report, and herewith annex a copy for information.

Your committee recommend that the bill referred to them do pass.

[Senate Report No. 203, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 181) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Niles, deceased, have considered the same, and respectfully report.

We adopt the favorable report of the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, made in the Forty-third Congress, and adopted by the Committee on Claims of the Senate in the Fiftyeth Congress.

We annex the report, which we adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 425, Forty-third Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Thomas Niles, deceased, late of Gloucester, Mass., having considered the same, report:

That when apprehensions were entertained in 1863 that our eastern coast might be visited and injured by rebel privateers an examination was made (at request of governors and other citizens of coast States) of the shores, localities selected, and projects made for temporary field-works for the protection of a number of the exposed towns and harbors. Gloucester was one of the towns embraced in this scheme of protection, and a position for a battery was selected at Eastern Point, which proved to be Mr. Niles's land.

The property was entered upon by authority of the Secretary of War, as was done in a number of other instances, and a work was constructed upon it to defend the town from injury.

After the close of the war negotiations were entered into with a number of the proprietors of these sites for the purchase of their land for defensive purposes. Generally the prices asked by the owners were so large that no agreement to buy was concluded, and the undertakings failed. This was the case with Mr. Niles. April 18, 1868, the Chief of Engineers reported upon a reference of a letter of Mr. Niles to the Secretary of War asking "immediate removal of the fortifications erected on his land and payment for the damage;" that all that was perishable of the work (fort) was going to decay; the guns, ammunition, and other property were in the care of an ordnance sergeant and a soldier or two, and recommended that all the armament and public property be withdrawn and the position abandoned; that no rent or damages had been paid in such cases from the appropriations under control of the Chief of Engineers; and also, as claims of this kind were proper subjects for the examination and determination of the Claims Commission or a like tribunal, that Mr. Niles be left to pursue his remedy in that way.

July 6, 1868, the Secretary of War directed that a board of officers be appointed to examine into the justice of the claim of Mr. Niles for the occupation of his land and the construction of works thereon.

General Foster, of the Corps of Engineers, General Pelouze, assistant adjutant-general, and General De Russy, of the Third Artillery, were appointed a board to ascertain and report particularly the cost of putting the grounds as near as possible in the same condition as when the Government took possession; the damage still occasioned to the land and the injury and loss of personal property so far as the Government was responsible therefor; and a reasonable rent during the period of occupation.

The board reported the use and occupation of said land as constituting a valid claim against the United States, and the cost of putting the grounds as nearly as possible in the same condition as when the Government took possession at $6,050. For the damage done to the land and personal property, so far as the Government was responsible therefor (as corn crops destroyed, vegetables, glass land, stone, etc.), the board proposed that the United States give to Mr. Niles the temporary buildings erected for the use of the garrison near the fort, estimated worth $6,300, as ample compensation for that class of personal claims. The board also believed $8,237.50 a reasonable rent for the property during the period of occupation.

The report of the board was approved by the Secretary of War, accepted by Mr. Niles, and the Chief of Engineers directed to make payment; but the Chief of Engineers, in view of a decision of the Second Comptroller that claims for damages should be referred to Congress, asked specific instructions September 4, 1868. In reply, the Secretary of War, upon the recommendation of the Claims Commission, approved the payment of but $4,337.50, for rent, and, for other items (restoration and damages to personal property, etc.), that the claimant be referred to Congress. Payment for rent was accordingly made by General J. G. Foster, Corps of Engineers, in the second quarter of 1868, and the Chief of Engineers, by direction of the Secretary of War, instructed General Benham, February 6, 1869, to notify Mr. Niles that possession by the United States would terminate on sale of buildings, etc.; and April 15, 1869, General Benham notified Mr. Niles accordingly, the sale of the buildings having been effected.

It appears from the evidence in this case that the land of Mr. Niles was highly valued for the purpose of erecting seaside cottages and residences, and that had he been allowed the use of the land during the period it was occupied by the Government he would have received at least four times the amount awarded by the board.

Your committee are of the opinion the amount so awarded ($6,050) is no more than a fair compensation, if it is even that, and consider the action of a board composed of able army officers of long military experience, specially appointed for the purpose, as conclusive upon this point; and, regarding the claimant as not only legally but also equitably entitled to relief in consequence of the damage he has sustained by the action of the Government, report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I can not understand from the reading of the report the exact status of this case, but if I caught it aright the owner of this property has already received nearly $10,000 in rent, and this is a proposition to pay him an extra amount by way of damages growing out of the construction of this fort. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill whom this property belongs to now.

Mr. COGSWELL. It belongs to the same family that owned it when the Government took possession of it, and this appropriation is to enable them to put the land in the same condition in which it was found by the Government. Here was a valuable property for building, the most valuable seaside property in this country, held at even a higher figure than property at Newport. The Government came along, took the property, erected its fort, and then abandoned it; and this bill is to appropriate money enough to put that property back in as good condition as it was when the Government took it.

Mr. KILGORE. Did the Government pay this man rent?

Mr. COGSWELL. The Government paid rent, but it paid nothing for the damages to which the military board found he was entitled. They paid nothing for that because they said their appropriation would not enable them to do so, and that he would have to go to Congress, and they farther said that the amount paid for rent was not one-quarter of what the property would have brought for other purposes.

Mr. KILGORE. How long did the Government occupy the property?

Mr. COGSWELL. About five years, I think.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to inquire how long the Government occupied this property and how much was occupied.

Mr. COGSWELL. The occupation extended over about five years.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How many acres were there?

Mr. COGSWELL. I can not give the exact acreage; it was not more than 3 or 4 acres; but on that shore, where there is probably the most valuable property of that character in the country, lots sell for a higher figure, I presume, than on Massachusetts or Connecticut avenues in this city. This man lost his rent and the use of his property, or three-fourths of it. This bill proposes, in accordance with the recommendation of the military board, to give him enough to put that land in the condition in which it was when the Government took it, dug it up, built its fort there, and then after five years abandoned it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not intend to object to the consideration of this measure; but, as I understand, the amount carried by the bill is intended as compensation to the owner of this property for the damages done to his real estate by the building of this fort. Now, I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks this is a departure from the precedents which have been set by the Government in hundreds of cases growing out of like occupation of property (some of it within sight of this Capitol) during the war?

Mr. COGSWELL. So far as I understand, the precedent set by this Government is that it does not pay its debts when it can avoid doing so, and if this is a departure from that policy I thank God. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman this further question: If a like measure should be presented for the payment of damages done to real estate on my side of the line—I mean south of the line—will the gentleman stand by me and help to make compensation to loyal men for similar damages suffered during the war?

Mr. COGSWELL. Every time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. All right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none. The question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I am not willing that this bill should pass without stating my objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to address the House?

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to say just a word or two.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ENLOE. I did not want to object to the consideration of this bill; but it looks to me, Mr. Speaker, as if this were, as suggested by my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON], a departure from the general policy of the Government. In addition to that I can not understand how it is that when this man has received $10,000 for the occupation of his land—

Mr. COGSWELL. Eight thousand dollars.

Mr. ENLOE. Well, $3,000, $2,000 an acre, assuming that there were 4 acres, the utmost amount which the gentleman claims to have been occupied. Two thousand dollars an acre is a pretty good price for land—

A MEMBER. In Tennessee.

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, it is a pretty good price for land in my country and possibly anywhere around Washington. Two thousand dollars per acre ought to have bought that land. And now after this amount has been paid as rent, to come back here and propose to pay this man $1,000 or $1,500 per acre additional, besides giving him back his land, does not look to me like a fair proposition.

Mr. COGSWELL. I suppose this land is worth anywhere from $30,000 to $50,000 an acre, if a man is fortunate enough to own such land.

Mr. ENLOE. The misfortune is that there are some of us in this country who have not many acres—

Mr. COGSWELL. I am one of those.

Mr. ENLOE. And I want to protect those who have no acres; I do not want the Government with my consent to give a man as damages more than his land is worth.

Mr. COGSWELL. Oh, this is not a case of that kind.

Mr. ENLOE. I am not in favor of this bill and do not want it to pass, and I protest against it.

The question being taken, the bill was passed; there being—ayes 110, noes 17.

Mr. COGSWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFUND OF DUTIES ON IMPORTED ARMS.

Mr. TRACEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk and that it be now put on its passage.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 597) to refund duties paid by the State of New York on arms imported in 1863.

Whereas an act entitled "An act to remit duties on arms imported by States," approved July 10, 1861, and the act supplementary thereto, approved July 25, 1861, have expired by limitation: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to refund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the duties paid by the State of New York on arms imported in 1863, amounting to the sum of $42,796.87, which sum includes the premium paid in the purchase of gold for the payment of said duties: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that the said arms were purchased in good faith for the use of the troops of the State of New York organized to aid in suppressing the then existing insurrection against the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report should be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky), which is as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 597) to refund duties paid by the State of New York on arms imported in 1863, report as follows:

That this claim was presented to the Forty-ninth Congress, and a report was made in regard to it by the Committee on War Claims, on the 23d of March, 1896. As the examination by your committee has led them to the same results with those arrived at by the committee of 1896, they do not think it necessary to recapitulate the facts, but refer to that report, and herewith annex a copy for information.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill referred to them do pass.

[House Report No. 1297, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5011) to refund duties paid by the State of New York on arms imported in 1863, having examined the same and accompanying papers, submit the following report:

This claim is for duties paid by the State of New York on arms imported in 1863 and used in arming troops that were mustered into the service of the United States.

The foreign cost of the arms has been repaid by the United States, but the cost of importation has never been refunded. The application made by the State that it might be released from paying the duties was denied, for the reason that the act to remit duties on arms imported by States, approved July 10, 1861, and the act supplementary thereto, approved July 25, 1861, had expired by limitation.

It is evident that, the foreign cost of the arms having been repaid by the United States, that part of their cost that the State was compelled to pay to the United States should also be refunded.

It seems to your committee that the duties paid were quite as much a part of the cost, charges, and expenses to the State in arming the troops as the original cost of the arms.

The duties were paid in gold, and at a time when the premium on gold was very high, which, of course, increased largely the expense of the State.

Your committee therefore recommend that said State of New York be reimbursed the amount of said duties paid on arms purchased by said State in 1863, and thus used in arming troops which were mustered into the service of the Federal Government, and that said bill do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN (interrupting the reading). I do not ask for the further reading of the report, but I suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] that we are trenching upon very dangerous ground in providing for the payment of premium in a case like this. If the amount in the bill be reduced so as to correspond with the sum actually paid, I have no objection.

Mr. TRACEY. If the gentleman insists on that point, I have prepared an amendment—

Mr. HOLMAN. The Government has never been in the habit of paying premiums in cases of this kind.

Mr. TRACEY. I will offer, then, an amendment reducing the amount by $10,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after "of," in line 7, down to and including the word "provided," in line 10, and insert "$30,940.86."

Mr. HOLMAN. That would be the amount without the premium?

Mr. TRACEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. This amendment strikes out the premium?

Mr. TRACEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I wish to inquire what committee has reported this bill?

Mr. TRACEY. The Committee on War Claims.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Did the committee investigate this matter themselves or simply adopt the former report?

Mr. TRACEY. They had all the facts before them. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] has made a report of this character in several Congresses.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The Committee on War Claims has investigated this matter in three different Congresses and found the amount stated in the bill to be correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object.

Mr. TRACEY. If the gentleman from Kansas will give me his attention a moment, I think he will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEPHENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill I send to the desk.

Mr. ENLOE. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. BINGHAM. In view of the demand for the regular order, I move to dispense with private business for the purpose of getting to business on the Speaker's table, which is loaded down with bills.

Mr. THOMAS. This, Mr. Speaker, is private-bill day, and we have not had very many such days. I will ask, if the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania shall prevail, would it prevent a motion afterwards to go to the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania, he desires to reach certain bills on the Speaker's table, after which the Private Calendar could be taken up.

Mr. THOMAS. So that after the business on the Speaker's table is disposed of it will be in order to move to proceed with the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. BINGHAM. My desire is to dispense with private business for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has some public bills, and the Chair thinks after they are read the House will agree to consider them.

Mr. BREWER. Before that, Mr. Speaker, I hope the bill called up by my colleague will be considered.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order is demanded.

Mr. ENLOE. I think we had better have the regular order. There are a number of bills that will not be considered in any other way; and perhaps there will be a little more justice done than in the recognitions that are going on at present.

Mr. BREWER. I ask the gentleman to withhold his demand for the present.

Mr. ENLOE. I am willing to have business on the Speaker's table disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls for the regular order. The Chair understands that the gentleman does not object to the consideration of the bills on the Speaker's table to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers? The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that private business be dispensed with for the present, and he states that it is his purpose to bring up two public bills.

Mr. ENLOE. What two bills?

The SPEAKER. Two bills on the Speaker's table relating to the postal service.

Mr. ENLOE. I am willing that private business shall be dispensed with for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the Private Calendar will be dispensed with for the consideration of the two bills—

Mr. ENLOE. No; not specially for the two bills, but only for the bills on the Speaker's table, without limit. I make the request in that shape. Otherwise I shall not agree to it.

Mr. PETERS. I understand the gentleman desires to include all the business on the Speaker's table. I also wish to have that done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection that bills on the Speaker's table be taken up as on public-bill day?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

STATUE OF LAFAYETTE.

The SPEAKER. Before proceeding with business on the Speaker's table the Chair desires to lay before the House the joint resolution of the Senate to enable the commission having charge of the location and erection of the statue to the memory of General Lafayette to execute the purpose expressed in the concurrent resolution of August 28. The Clerk will read the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to enable the commission created by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1895, to execute the purpose expressed in the concurrent resolution adopted by the two Houses of Congress on the 24th day of August, 1890, and to complete a new site for the said statue, the sum of $5,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the aforesaid commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered and ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-STATION AND FOG-SIGNAL, BRADDOCK'S POINT, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 573) for the establishment of a light-station and fog-signal in the vicinity of Braddock's Point, Lake Ontario, New York.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

In line 3, after the words "light-station," insert "at Braddock's Point;" and insert section 2 as follows:

"Sec. 2. That there be placed and provided at the Charlotte light station, Lake Ontario, New York, a fog-whistle, at a cost not exceeding $4,300."

Also amend the title to conform.

Mr. BAKER. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES T. HUGHES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1268) to perfect the military record of James T. Hughes.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments were concurred in.

JOHN MILROY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1358) to remove the charge of desertion against John Milroy, and authorizing his honorable discharge.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments to this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

D. H. MITCHELL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4367) for the relief of D. H. Mitchell.

The amendments of the Senate were read at length.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I would like to know the effect of concurrence.

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment of the Senate simply corrects a mistake in the figures made by the House. It adds $9.98 to the amount of the claim. There was an error in the computation and the Senate corrected that error.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.

ARCHIBALD HUNLEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5067) for the relief of Archibald Hunley.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. OSBORNE, Mr. LANSING, and Mr. LANHAM as conferees on the part of the House.

MARIA L. CARAHER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8210) granting an increase of pension to Maria L. Caraher.

The Senate amendment was read at length.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATES AND NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS, UNITED STATES ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8394) to amend chapter 67, volume 23, of the Statutes at Large of the United States.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

In line 13 of the printed bill, before the words "Marine Corps," insert "Navy or."

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am directed by the Military Committee to move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that motion is submitted I wish the bill to be read so that we can see the relation of the amendment to the bill.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The only change in the House bill is to insert the words "or Navy," so as to provide that if a man served in the Navy he gets the same benefit as if his service had been in the Army or Marine Corps.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

GEORGE MURRAY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10083) for the relief of George Murray, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read at length and concurred in.

ROAD TO NATIONAL MILITARY CEMETERY NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7666) making an appropriation to construct a road and approaches from the city of Alexandria, Va., to the national military cemetery near that city, with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, September 19, 1890.

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives (H. R. 7666) entitled "An act making an appropriation to construct a road and approaches from the city of Alexandria, Va., to the national military cemetery near that city" pass with the following amendments:

Line 4, strike out all after "gravel," down to and including "appropriation," line 10, and insert:

"For macadam road and approaches from the national military cemetery near the city of Alexandria, Va., via Wilkes street to the intersection of said street with Alfred street, in said city: Provided, That a right of way be granted to the United States by the city of Alexandria of at least 50 feet in width, or the full legal width of Wilkes street, to Payne street, and thence 30 feet in width from that point to the national cemetery, passing between the two private cemeteries."

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know how much money this bill appropriates.

The SPEAKER. The House bill appropriates $7,000.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. How much is added to it, if anything, by the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. Nothing is added to the amount of the appropriation in the House bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think we had better non-concur and ask for a conference.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. It seems to me, after giving as good attention as I could to the reading of the amendment, that the Senate bill provides for the macadamizing of a portion of the streets of Alexandria.

The SPEAKER. Upon that point the Chair has no information. The question is on concurring with the Senate amendment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is a conference asked in this case?

The CLERK. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask a question. If the Senate changes the purpose of an appropriation so as to make it an appropriation for the purpose of macadamizing the streets of a city, under the guise of constructing a road to a military cemetery, is not that such a change and such an appropriation as would require first consideration in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair at present can see no reason why it should be. The amount appropriated is not in any way changed.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let us have non-concurrence and ask for a conference.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me if you appropriate the money of the United States to the construction of a macadamized road in an incorporated city of 10,000 inhabitants it is such an appropriation as makes a charge upon the Treasury, and if it was presented in the House for the first time it would require its consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I move non-concurrence with the Senate amendments.

Mr. CANNON. Let us see about that. Should not this go to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can see no reason why it should. The Chair is unable to see how it would be possible for the Senate to amend a House bill that made an appropriation without making it obnoxious to the reasoning presented by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. The Chair holds that it would have to be first considered in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. That it would not.

Mr. CANNON. I want to make myself understood. If the House makes an appropriation for one object and the Senate amends the bill in such a way as to divert the money to another object, and if by that it escapes the point of order, it seems to me the rule means nothing, if that can be done.

Mr. TRACEY. The rule is for the House, not for the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The presumption is that the appropriation is for the same purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Ah, but here is the presumption combated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think so.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Put it in conference.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move to non-concur in the Senate amendments, and that a conference be asked with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. WILLIAMS of Ohio, Mr. KINSEY, and Mr. LANHAM.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10639) to amend section 2, act of May 30, 1862.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, September 19, 1890.

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives (H. R. 10639) to amend section 2, act of May 30, 1862, pass with the following amendment:

Line 2, after the words "Congress assembled," insert the words "That section 2399 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read,"

Line 3, strike out "That the" and insert "Section 2399. The."

Amend the title so as to read:

"An act to amend section 2399 of the Revised Statutes of the United States on the subject of contracts for land surveys."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think there ought to be some explanation of that. The reading of the amendments throws no light upon it. Let us have the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires the text of the House bill read. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the printed manual of surveying instructions for the survey of the public lands of the United States, and private land claims, prepared at the General Land Office, and bearing date December 2, 1889, the instructions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the special instructions of the surveyor-general, when not in conflict with said printed manual, or the instructions of said Commissioner, shall be taken and deemed to be a part of every contract for surveying the public lands of the United States, and private land claims.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, after the words "Congress assembled," insert the words "That section 2397 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read." In line 6 strike out the word "that" and insert the words "Section 2397," and amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend section 2397 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. It seems to me that unless the Committee on Public Lands know the effect of the amendment there ought to be at least a conference, so that we might know something about the effect.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa move to non-concur and appoint a committee of conference?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I do.

The motion was agreed to.

So the House non-concurred in the Senate amendment, and the committee of conference was ordered.

DANIEL W. SELLECK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2106) to remove the charge of desertion against Daniel W. Selleck with a Senate amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Daniel W. Selleck, as a private of Company B, of the Ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, and substitute therefor, 'discharged from the military service on the 26th day of February, 1864, by reason of being under the age of eighteen years, and of having enlisted and re-enlisted without the knowledge or consent of his parents,' and further, to issue to said Selleck a discharge as of date February 26, 1864, by reason of being under the age of eighteen years and having enlisted without the knowledge or consent of his parents."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE HON. JAMES LAIRD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (H. Res. 152) providing for the printing of eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late James Laird, with Senate amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line 3 strike out the word "six" and insert the word "ten." In line 3, after the words "two thousand," insert the words "five hundred;" and in line 4 strike out the words "four thousand" and insert the words "seven thousand five hundred."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Printing in his seat. Therefore, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the original text will be read, so as to show the effect of the amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can state for the information of the gentleman that the joint resolution as it passed the House provided for the printing of 6,000 copies. It is increased to 10,000, and I will state that that is 2,000 less than the usual number printed. The resolution for the printing of 6,000 was passed at the request of the gentleman who succeeded Mr. Laird; and it is right and proper to concur in the Senate amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

J. L. CAIN AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2990) for the relief of J. L. Cain and others, with a Senate amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the respective sums of money as hereinafter provided to the respective persons named herein, or to their heirs or legal representatives, to wit, for cotton taken by order of General A. E. Burnside to strengthen the fortifications at Knoxville, Tenn., November 17 and 18, 1863, to wit, J. L. Cain, 6 bales, less his proportion of the loss of the 95 bales, 24 bales, equals 57 bales, at 75 cents per pound, $1,461.25; Hugh G. Kyle, administrator of A. A. Kyle, deceased, 7 bales, less his proportion of the 95 bales lost, 23 bales, equals 4 bales, at 75 cents per pound, $1,711.25; Alexander Kennedy, 10 bales, less his proportion of the loss of the 95 bales, 83 bales, equals 64 bales, at 75 cents per pound, $2,463.25; W. C. Hazen, surviving partner of G. M. Hazen, deceased, 34 bales, less his proportion of the loss of the 95 bales, 111 bales, equals 224 bales, at 75 cents per pound, $8,308.25."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the original text, so as to learn what the effect of the amendment will be.

Mr. HOPKINS. I make the point of order on that bill that it should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The effect of the Senate amendment is to reduce the amount provided by the House bill making the appropriation to pay these gentlemen.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there any new item of appropriation in the Senate amendment?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. There is no new item. This simply reduces the amount, and I move to non-concur in the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would ask the Chair if the rule does not require that this bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It does not. The Chair understands there was an appropriation made by the House bill. That appropriation has been amended by the Senate bill; but it is not a new item of appropriation.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. There is no new item in the bill.

The SPEAKER. If there were a new item in the bill it would have to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I move to non-concur in the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARY B. CUSHING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 11773) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary H. Cushing, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

In line 2 strike out the letter "H" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "B."

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

JUNCTION CITY AND FORT RILEY STREET RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2648) granting right of way to the Junction City and Fort Riley Street Railway Company into and upon the Fort Riley military reservation in the State of Kansas, and for other purposes, with House amendment disagreed to by the Senate, on which a conference was asked.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move that the House insist upon its amendment, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced as conferees Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio, Mr. KINSEY, and Mr. LANHAM.

EXAMINATION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3716) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army and to regulate promotions therein, with amendments of the House disagreed to by the Senate, on which a conference was asked.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to ask the House to insist upon its amendments and to agree to the conference asked, and therefore make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CUTCHEON, Mr. OSBORNE, and Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama.

TO REPEAL CERTAIN SECTIONS OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3996) to repeal sections 3952 and 3953 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3952 and 3953 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill just read is identical with House bill 9794. If the House desires the reading of a brief report, without reading the long letter of the Postmaster-General, I think gentlemen will be thoroughly informed. If, however, a brief statement is required, I will make it.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. What are the sections repealed?

Mr. CASWELL. Let us have a brief statement.

Mr. BINGHAM. Sections 3952 and 3953 are the sections to be repealed.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Will the gentleman state the substance of the sections?

Mr. BINGHAM. Section 3952 of the Revised Statutes requires in the bidding for star routes, which occurs once in every four years, the country being divided into four sections, that the bidders shall be held responsible for their bids until the route is occupied by either the successful bidder or those who are indicated by the Department, and until it is being successfully operated. That has been found to be provocative of failure and largely against the interests of the local bidders. As an illustration, the bids are opened in February or March and the lowest bidder is duly notified that his bid is accepted. The other bidders, ten, twelve, or twenty in number, knowing that the lowest bid has been accepted, sell out their stock, abandon all intention of doing mail work, and go into other occupation. The lowest bidder fails to do the work. Then, under the present statute, the next lowest bidder takes it up, and the original bidder is held responsible only for the difference between his bid and the next bid. If this is repealed, the general statute will require the successful bidder and his security, when the route is relet, to pay the difference between the reletting and his rate. The Department is of opinion that this will be productive of a better service, and the experience has been an experience of failure instead of success.

The next section refers to the deposit of a 5 per cent. check or drafts against bids on routes over $5,000. If the bidder fails he pays the difference between his bid and the bid next to his, in addition to the forfeiture of the check. That has not worked successfully, for the reason that in the country sections, local bidders, while they can get satisfactory sureties for the faithful performance of the service, are sometimes unable to get friends to put up the 5 per cent. on bids over $5,000. There are sometimes ten or fifteen bidders on a route. This law holds up in the Post-Office Department for four, five, or six months, this body of checks to the great inconvenience of every unsuccessful bidder. The officers of the Department assert unqualifiedly that the repeal of these two sections will be in the interest of a better service and in the interest of competition among local bidders at the termini of the routes.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, just a word by way of supplement to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, and in illustration of how the present law works. A constituent of mine was one of the bidders for a star-route service. He was notified that the lowest bidder was the successful one and that his own bid was not accepted. After receiving that notification he disposed of his stock, his horses and wagons, and all the stock that he had prepared for the carrying of the mail, and engaged in other business; and now he is notified that the lowest bidder has failed to carry out his contract and that he is required to take up the work. If this requirement is enforced it will involve a sacrifice on his part of several thousand dollars.

Mr. SAYERS. Is not that a general rule of the Department?

Mr. PERKINS. It is the law, and this bill proposes to change the law in that particular, which certainly ought to be done.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the House bill (H. R. 9794) of like purport was laid on the table.

SNOWDON & MASON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 1195) for the relief of Snowdon & Mason.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the claims of Snowdon & Mason for further compensation for the construction of the iron-clad monitors Manayunk and Umpqua may be submitted by said claimants, within six months after the passage of this act, to the Court of Claims, under and in compliance with the rules and regulations of said court; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the same: Provided, however, That the investigation of said claim shall be made upon the following basis: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by the contractors for building the iron-clad monitors Manayunk and Umpqua, in completion of the same, by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required, and delays in the prosecution of the work: Provided, That such additional cost in completing the same, and such changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required, and delays in the prosecution of the work, were occasioned by the Government of the United States; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged term for completing the work rendered necessary by delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractors: And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contractors and the Government for specific alterations in advance of such alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: Provided, That such alterations, when made, complied with the specifications of the same as furnished by the Government aforesaid: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractors by the Government over and above the original contract price for building said vessels shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated: And provided further, That if any such changes caused less work and expenses to the contractors than the original plan and specifications a corresponding deduction shall be made from the contract price, and the amount thereof be deducted from any allowance which may be made by said court to said claimants.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, is not that bill subject to consideration in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HOLMAN. It provides for an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. HOLMAN. It contemplates an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HOLMAN. The last clause of the bill certainly contemplates that something shall be paid, because it provides that the sum heretofore paid shall be deducted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands this to be the same as the bill heretofore passed upon by the Chair and by the House.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, this is the same kind of a bill that the Committee on War Claims have reported and that is now on the Calendar. It is exactly similar to the McKay bill. It involves no appropriation whatever. It submits the case to the court under all the safeguards that it is possible to provide. The fact is, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will probably recollect, that in the building of these monitors the Government stopped the work repeatedly, thereby causing great delay and great expense to the contractors. They tore down and retore down and rebuilt those vessels. It was pretty much like making a contract for the building of an ordinary house, and then compelling the contractor to tear it down and build this Capitol. Apart from the delay, the expense was greatly increased. There was a great rise in material. Iron rose from $65 to $200 a ton, and wages from $2.50 to $5 or $6 per day. All these elements enter into the question of damages. These parties have been seriously damaged by the action of the United States. The Selfridge board had this case submitted to them, and they allowed this claim.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then this is a claim that has been already acted upon by the proper board?

Mr. THOMAS. This is one of the claims that a proper board has acted upon, and that board found that the Government was indebted to these parties.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that amount was paid?

Mr. THOMAS. No, it never was paid. That is the trouble. It never has been paid or allowed. The Selfridge board was a board organized by the Senate, and it inquired into these claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. That Selfridge board was never recognized.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, there was no other board that was authorized to pay anything.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, as to the matters to which my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. THOMAS] refers, the extension of the time, and so on, all that was provided for in the contracts in these cases.

Mr. THOMAS. The gentleman from Indiana will find that this bill submits the question fairly and squarely to the court whether the Government ought to pay these parties the damage actually suffered by reason of its own changes of plan, damages which the Selfridge board, a tribunal organized by the Secretary of War under a resolution of the Senate, decided ought to be paid. That board was organized by the Secretary of War and was composed of some of the very best officers of the United States. They, after careful examination, allowed this claim; but the Senate and the Committee on War Claims of the House believed it due to the Government of the United States that instead of appropriating the amount allowed by the Selfridge board this case should go into court and the parties be required to prove their claim by competent evidence under the safeguards provided in this bill, which are the same as those that have been provided in the McKay bill and similar bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. How did it happen that this case did not go before the Marchand board?

Mr. THOMAS. Well, it was not presented to that board, I believe, because it was recognized that the board would not take cognizance of any of these cases. The Marchand board construed the law under which they were organized so as not to admit any of these claims. But the Selfridge board examined the facts in the case, and, as I can show to the gentleman by their report, allowed all that is claimed in this case.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will readily be seen that the Government is at a great disadvantage in going before the Court of Claims after twenty-five or thirty years.

Mr. THOMAS. The Government ought never to be afraid to go into the Court of Claims to adjudicate a claim which has been recognized and sanctioned by regular naval boards after careful investigation. The advantage on the side of the Government is this: that it is proposed, instead of appropriating the amount allowed by the board, that these parties be compelled to prove their damages before the court.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly the Government is placed at great disadvantage in meeting such a claim after twenty-five or twenty-eight years, when the witnesses may be dead.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I wish to ask whether this bill is identical with a House bill that has been favorably reported?

Mr. THOMAS. It is, in every particular.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Then I suppose no point of order can be made against it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The question being taken, it was determined in the affirmative; there being on a division (called for by Mr. HOLMAN)—ayes 59, noes 22.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, House bill No. 7245, identical in its provisions with the Senate bill just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its disagreement to the House amendments to the bill (H. R. 789) opening to settlement a portion of the Fort Randall military reservation in South Dakota, agreed to the request for a conference on the disagreeing votes thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. PARSONS conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 8715) granting a pension to Rhoda Buck.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 10265) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Altamaha River, asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. VEST, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. DOLPH conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendment, in which concurrence was requested, the bill (H. R. 10086) granting leaves of absence to clerks and employes in first and second class post-offices.

The message further announced that the Senate agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 1840) granting a pension to Sallie Douglass Hartranft; and

A bill (S. 4) authorizing the establishment of a public park in the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 573) granting an increase of pension to Mark F. Carter;

A bill (S. 712) for the relief of Stockbridge tribe of Indians in the State of Wisconsin;

A bill (S. 3270) for the relief of the administratrix of the estate of George W. Lawrence; and

A bill (S. 3397) for the purchase of George B. Matthews's portrait of John Paul Jones.

MOBILE, JACKSON AND KANSAS CITY RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER, as the next business on the Speaker's table, laid before the House the bill (S. 3798) to authorize the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company to cross certain rivers in the State of Missouri.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CLARKE, of Alabama (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, this is a bridge bill in the ordinary form, and I ask that the further reading be dispensed with.

There being no objection, the reading was dispensed with.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, House bill No. 11062, identical in its provisions with the Senate bill just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL BASIN.

The SPEAKER, as the next business on the Speaker's table, laid before the House the bill (S. 3801) authorizing the use of the Louisville and Portland Canal basin on certain conditions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the written contract by and between the city of Louisville, the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, and John P. Byrne, made in the year 1870, under which the firm of Byrne & Speed, of Louisville, Ky., constructed a basin on the south side of the Louisville and Portland Canal, above Fifteenth street, and also erected buildings, with elevator machinery therein, on land then the property of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, now the property of the United States, is ratified and confirmed, subject, however, to the following modifications and provisions, to wit: Byrne & Speed, their assigns and grantees, are hereafter to pay to the United States of America, for the use of the land, an annual rental of $250, to be paid semi-annually, through the officer in charge of the canal.

They shall not erect any additional buildings of any kind, but may keep in repair those now standing, or may reconstruct them or any part thereof, in case of destruction by fire or from other cause.

Sec. 2. That when, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, the use of said basin or buildings shall become prejudicial to the canal or its use, he shall detail a commission of not less than three nor more than five officers of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, with orders to assemble in Louisville, and to decide whether the use of the said basin or buildings is prejudicial to the canal or its use.

Said commission shall cause notice to be given to Byrne & Speed, or their assigns, of the time and place of their sitting, and shall, after hearing any evidence offered by Byrne & Speed, or by the officer representing the Government, proceed to hear and determine the matter submitted to them, and if they find that the use of the said basin or buildings is prejudicial to the canal or its use, they will also assess and find the value of the excavation and masonry of the basin made and erected by Byrne & Speed in the construction of said basin, and upon the payment or tender by the Secretary of War of the sum so fixed Byrne & Speed shall remove within six months their buildings from the canal property, discontinue the use of said basin, and relinquish all claims under the above-mentioned contract.

A copy of the finding of the commission shall be furnished to Byrne & Speed, or their assigns.

Sec. 3. That the ratification provided in this act shall not take effect unless within ninety days from its passage Byrne & Speed shall file with the Secretary of War their written acceptance of its provisions, and in the event Byrne & Speed, or their assigns, shall at any time fail for the space of six months to pay any installment of rent due under this act their right to occupy the property herein mentioned shall at once cease.

The bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I would like to hear some explanation of the bill. It seems to make a contract between the Government and some private parties.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. From what committee does it come?

Mr. CARUTH. This bill has passed the Senate. A similar House bill has been considered by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House and favorably reported. The passage of this measure is recommended by the Chief Engineer of the United States Army and by the engineer in charge of the work at Louisville. There has been a dispute as to the title of this property, and this bill is designed to settle that dispute. The measure has the approval of all the Government officers having cognizance of the matter.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Let me call the gentleman's attention to that part of the bill which provides that the measure shall not take effect until its provisions are accepted by certain parties.

Mr. CARUTH. By Byrne & Speed.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Will not that acceptance operate to create a contract between them and the United States which Congress can not repeal?

Mr. CARUTH. It will not, except so far as the provisions of this bill are concerned. The bill which I originally introduced in this House was sent to the War Department. That Department prepared the present bill, and has submitted it for the approval of Congress. It has also been favorably considered by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Was the bill drawn by a warrior or a lawyer? [Laughter.]

Mr. CARUTH. I do not know.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, House bill No. 8549, identical in its provisions with the Senate bill just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who was appointed as one of the conferees on the deficiency appropriation bill, will be absent; and, without objection, the Chair will appoint in his place the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS].

BOOK-MAKING AND POOL-SELLING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER, as the next business on the Speaker's table, laid before the House the bill (S. 3830) to prohibit book-making of any kind and pool-selling in the District of Columbia for the purpose of gaming.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, or association of persons, in the District of Columbia, to bet, gamble, or make books and pool on the result of any trotting race of running race of horses, or boat race, or race of any kind, or on any election, or contest of any kind.

Sec. 2. That any person or persons, or association of persons, violating the provisions of this act shall be fined not exceeding $500 nor less than $25, or be imprisoned not more than ninety nor less than thirty days, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That this act shall not interfere with the right of the Washington Jockey Club, duly organized under the laws of the District of Columbia, or any other regular organizations owning race tracks not less than 1 mile in length, and grounds of not less than 75 acres in extent, located within the District of Columbia, to make books and sell pools at their semi-annual or special meetings. The right to make books and sell pools by such organizations shall be on their grounds, and only on the days of their spring and fall meeting.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, House bill No. 10388, identical in its provisions with the Senate bill just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

EAGLE PASS WATER-SUPPLY COMPANY, ETC.

The SPEAKER, as the next business on the Speaker's table, laid before the House the bill (S. 3852) to authorize the Eagle Pass Water-Supply Company and the Compañía Proveedora de Aguas de Ciudad Porfirio Diaz to connect their water-works communications across the Rio Grande River at Eagle Pass, Tex.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Eagle Pass Water-Supply Company, a corporation organized and created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, and the Compañía Proveedora de Aguas de Ciudad Porfirio Diaz, created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Coahuila, one of the states of the Republic of Mexico, be, and are hereby, authorized and empowered to construct, own, maintain, and operate their water connection by tubes, or otherwise, across the Rio Grande River, between the city of Eagle Pass, in the State of Texas, and the city of Porfirio Diaz, formerly known as Piedras Negras, in the state of Coahuila, in the Republic of Mexico, as may be most convenient to said corporations: Provided, That said connection shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river, and in case of any litigation arising from an obstruction, or alleged obstruction, to the free navigation thereof, caused, or alleged to be caused, by said connection of their water pipes or hydraulic connections, the case may be tried before the district court of the United States for the western district of Texas: And provided also, That Congress reserves the right to withdraw the power and authority conferred by this act in case the free navigation of the river shall at any time be substantially or materially obstructed by said connections or pipes, or for any other reasons, and to direct the removal of said pipes or connections, or necessary modifications thereof, at the cost and expense of the owners of said pipes or connections, and Congress may at any time alter, repeal, or amend this act: And provided further, That the consent of the Mexican state of Coahuila and of the proper authorities of the Republic of Mexico shall have been obtained before the establishment of said pipes and connections.

Mr. CRAIN. I ask the present consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary. The bill is before the House.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Is this bill identical with a House bill which has been favorably reported?

The SPEAKER. It is.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, House bill No. 6966, identical in its provisions with the Senate bill just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ILLINOIS RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3895) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within 5 miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within 5 miles of Farrowtown, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois," approved March 3, 1883.

Mr. WIKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of this bill be dispensed with. It is in the ordinary form of a bridge bill.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I make the point of order that no motion has been made or authorized in regard to the bill by any committee of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this bill was retained on the table at the request of the committee.

Mr. WIKE. And is identical with the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state further, that in no instance have bills been put on the table except where it was understood that such was the case.

In the absence of objection, the reading of the bill will be dispensed with, and the question is on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

The bill H. R. 10270, of the same title, was ordered to be laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ALABAMA RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3952) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Alabama River, at or near Selma, Ala., by the Selma and Cahawba Valley Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inquire if this is also in the ordinary form of bridge bills.

Mr. HERBERT. It is.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House bill of the same title will be laid upon the table.

CANAVERAL AND SOUTH FLORIDA RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 4011) to authorize the Canaveral and South Florida Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Indian River and one across the Banana River, both in the State of Florida, and to establish the same, in each case, as a post-road.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, this is the ordinary form of bridge bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the reading will be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

The SPEAKER. The House bill of the corresponding title will be laid upon the table.

SENECA NATION OF NEW YORK INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 4297) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the leases of land situate within the limits of the villages mentioned in the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases," approved February 19, 1875, except leases to railroads, shall by the terms of said act be renewable, the same shall be renewable for a term not exceeding ninety-nine years, instead of the term of twelve years, as therein provided, subject to all other terms and conditions of said act.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to know something about that bill before it is put on its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill ought to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I make that motion.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the House committee considered a like bill and reported it favorably. The circumstances are better known and understood by the gentleman who represents the district [Mr. LAIDLAW]; but he does not seem to be in his seat at present. The committee, however, gave this matter careful consideration.

Under the existing law these Indians are authorized to make leases of their lands for a shorter period of time than that provided for in the bill. There is a large growing town situated on the reservation, and they occupy grounds under leases that are authorized by existing law. But the limited period for which leases can be made restricts in a great measure, as they claim, the growth and development of the city. They say that parties are not willing to invest the necessary money to establish manufacturing activities and enterprises of like character on the ground with the limit that the leases are confined to under existing law.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What is the limit?

Mr. PERKINS. My recollection is twelve years.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What is the increase proposed?

Mr. PERKINS. This increases it to ninety-nine years.

The committee thought it to be in the interest of the Indians themselves, as well as in the interest of the people who are living in the town, now growing rapidly, as well as for the interest of all parties concerned, to authorize these leases.

I will say that this is a terminus or end of a division of the New York Central, or a branch of the New York Central road, and is a very important railroad center.

Mr. CHEADLE. Let me ask the gentleman a question. How are these leases to be readjusted, or is any provision made for that?

Mr. PERKINS. My recollection is that there is no provision in the bill for the readjustment of the leases.

Mr. CHEADLE. There ought to be a readjustment periodically after a certain number of years, I think.

Mr. PERKINS. No such provision was in the House bill, and my recollection is that there is none in the Senate bill.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. That can be provided by contract.

Mr. PERKINS. That can be provided by contract, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, and the committee did not deem it necessary to insert such a provision.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the gentleman any information as to the views of the Indians in regard to the leases for ninety-nine years, and also on the readjustment question?

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman from Indiana made the same inquiry. The bill does not provide for it, but, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, it can be provided for in the leases or contracts. The committee thought it unnecessary to insert such a provision in the House bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my inquiry was as to the views of the Indians themselves.

Mr. PERKINS. They are a bright people, and had intelligent representatives before the committee. They seem to be living almost entirely, perhaps to their own misfortune, on the rents or annuities they receive from the lands.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What is the size of the town?

Mr. PERKINS. It has now some fifteen or eighteen thousand inhabitants.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I make the point of order that there has been no motion made by the Committee on Indian Affairs to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. I think that is necessary as a guaranty of safe legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman should make the point prior to the discussion, and not afterwards.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I think there has never been any consent asked by the Chair up to this time.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary that the Chair should submit the request.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. But if the gentleman from Kansas will say that this is identical with the House bill I will make no further objection.

Mr. PERKINS. It is the same; but the House committee has taken no action since the bill passed the Senate, and so I have not been authorized to ask this action on the part of the House. The House committee, however, considered the bill carefully before reporting it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa insist?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is withdrawn and the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The House bill of similar import was ordered to lie on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ARKANSAS RIVER AT DARDANELLE, ARK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 4334) to authorize the building of a bridge at Dardanelle, Ark., across the Arkansas River.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the House committee have reported a bill precisely similar to that; therefore I ask that the reading be dispensed with.

Mr. BAKER. The committee have reported a similar bill, and have instructed me to ask that this bill be substituted for it and passed, as it is the same as the House bill.

There being no objection, the first formal reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The House bill of similar import was ordered to lie on the table.

THE PORTLAND COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 473) for the relief of the Portland Company, of Portland, Me.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to inquire into and determine how much the steam-machinery built for the United States vessels Agawam and Pontoonuc by the Portland Company, of Portland, Me., under its contracts with the Navy Department in August, 1862, cost the said contractor over and above the contract price and allowances for extra work, for which payment has been made, and to enter judgment in favor of said Portland Company for the same: Provided, That the judgment shall not exceed the sum allowed by the board convened in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate of the United States, dated March 9, 1855, of which Thomas O. Selfridge was the president, the said allowance being set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 18, Thirty-ninth Congress, first session, and stated at $30,857.46.

Sec. 2. That at the hearing or on the trial of any suit or suits so commenced either party, plaintiff or defendant, shall have the right to use before the court any testimony or documents which may be relative to or competent upon the issues joined between the parties, and that the proceedings, trial, decision, and judgment of the said court shall be had in the same manner as in all other cases before the said Court of Claims, and have the same effect; and that either party, plaintiff or defendant, may appeal from the decision or judgment of the said Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner as is now provided for in other cases.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The House bill of similar import was ordered to lie on the table.

NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 497) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That those persons, being heads of families or single persons over twenty-one years of age, who have made settlement and improvement upon, and are bona fide claimants and occupants of, either in person or by tenant, the lands in Kansas which were allotted to certain New York Indians, and for which certificates of allotment, dated the 14th day of September, 1860, for 320 acres of land each, were issued to thirty-two of said Indians, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and permitted to enter and purchase at the proper land office, at any time within one year from the passage of this act, said lands so occupied by them, in tracts not exceeding 160 acres, according to the Government surveys, at $2.50 per acre, payment to be made in cash at time of purchase; and the moneys arising from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, in trust for and to be paid to said Indians, respectively, to whom said certificates were issued, or to their heirs, upon satisfactory proof of their identity to the Secretary of the Interior, at any time within five years from the passage of this act; and in case such proof is not made within the time specified, then the proceeds of such sale, or so much thereof as shall not have been paid under the provisions of this act, shall become a part of the public moneys of the United States.

Sec. 2. That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of twelve months from the passage of this act shall be offered at public sale, in the usual manner, at not less than $3 per acre, notice of said sale to be given by public advertisement of not less than thirty days; and any tract or tracts not then sold shall be thereafter subject to private entry at $3 per acre.

Sec. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the reference of this bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I do not think a bill like that ought to pass, fixing so low a price upon land as $2.50 an acre. I do not think so small a price as that is just to the Indians. The land is undoubtedly worth a great deal more.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that these settlers have been in possession of these lands for a quarter of a century, and have been trying from year to year to get this matter adjusted. There is not a particle of objection on the part of the Indians or their friends to the provisions of this bill. The matter has been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House at least six times, and all who are familiar with the circumstances recognize not only the propriety but the necessity of this legislation.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill has always been objected to upon the ground that it manifestly did the Indians an injustice. These lands, I suppose, are worth from $10 to $20 an acre, and the proposition is to sell them for $2.50 an acre.

Mr. PERKINS. But the adjoining land was sold to settlers, at the time the settlers occupied this land, for $1.25 an acre.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; but that was Government land, and this land is the property of the Indians.

Mr. PERKINS. There is a very grave question whether this is not Government land, and whether these certificates have any validity whatever, but the Committee on Indian Affairs, recognizing that these Indians had an equity, have at all times reported in favor of paying them what seems fair and right for the land. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] will verify the statement that I have made. When he was chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs a similar bill was reported favorably by the committee, and it has been reported repeatedly.

Mr. PEEL. I desire to say to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that after a careful investigation of this case I came to the conclusion that the Indians really had no title that they could enforce.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Government has been recognizing their title for these thirty years.

Mr. PEEL. They only have the right of occupancy. Under the certificates they could only occupy the land. The present surroundings are of such a character that it is impossible for them to do that. Therefore it is proper that whatever can be got for the lands should be paid over for the benefit of the Indians and their descendants.

Mr. HOLMAN. At the same time the Indians ought to have the benefit of the full value of the lands.

Mr. PEEL. I do not remember the exact price fixed in the former bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that no one will pretend to say that lands in that part of Kansas, situated as they are situated, are only worth $2.50 an acre.

Mr. PEEL. We thought the price fixed then was very fair, considering the poor title the Indians have.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Government is recognizing the title of the Indians now, and has always recognized it.

Mr. PERKINS. The amount fixed in the bill gives these Indians the value of these lands when the settlers located upon them, and almost 5 per cent. interest per annum from that time until the present time.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is to say, Government lands were then held at $1.25 an acre for the purpose of encouraging settlement, but these Indians stand on a different footing. This is their property, and they have a right to have a fair price for it.

Mr. LANSING. How came the settlers to occupy these lands in the first place?

Mr. PERKINS. At one time the Secretary of the Interior issued his proclamation declaring them to be public lands, and it was at that time that the settlers located there.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to refer this bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The House bill of similar import was ordered to lie on the table.

WASHINGTON IRON-WORKS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1187) for the relief of the Washington Iron-Works.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to inquire into and determine how much the steam machinery built for the United States vessel Leuspee by the Washington Iron-Works, under its contract with the Navy Department, cost the said contractor over and above the contract price and allowances for extra work, and to enter judgment in favor of George M. Clapp, of the Washington Iron-Works, for the same: Provided, That the judgment shall not exceed the sum allowed by the board convened in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate of the United States, dated March 9, 1855, of which Thomas O. Selfridge was the president, the said allowance being set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 18, Thirty-ninth Congress, first session.

Sec. 2. That at the hearing or on the trial of any suit so commenced either party, plaintiff or defendant, shall have the right to use before the court any testimony or documents which may be relevant to and competent upon the issues joined between the parties, and that the proceedings, trial, decision, and judgment of the said court shall be had in the same manner as in all other cases before the said Court of Claims, and have the same effect; and that either party, plaintiff or defendant, may appeal from the decision or judgment of the said Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner as now provided for in other cases.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I think the House ought to have some explanation of this bill. There seems to be a crop of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this bill should receive its consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is identical with the House bill reported by the Committee on War Claims. There is no appropriation in it. It is simply a bill to permit them to go to the Court of Claims, and provides that the claim shall be presented to the Court of Claims.

The facts out of which this bill arises, Mr. Speaker, are the same as those of the Portland Company, or almost identical with them, that passed the House a few minutes ago. These parties entered into a contract—I say entered—they were compelled to enter into a contract. The Government said: "If you do not take the contract we will take possession of your works and construct this engine ourselves." They were assured by the Chief Engineer, whose testimony I have here, that the weight of the engine should not exceed by 15 per cent. that of the Paul Jones. When the drawings and specifications were completed the engine was figured out as exceeding by 66 per cent. the weight of the engines of the Paul Jones. There was the usual delay in this as in all of those cases, the party being compelled to hold their machinery in their yards, and all their men during this time, when there was a great increase of wages.

This case was submitted to the Selfridge board, a board which was organized by the Secretary of War, and they found that this was in every way fair, straight, and honest, and made the allowance of what these parties claim; and this bill provides that the court shall not allow an amount to exceed the amount then found to be due them.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. How much was that?

Mr. THOMAS. That allowance was $29,164.24. This submits the facts in the case to the Court of Claims, the same as in the other cases that have been passed here. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 5888) for the same purpose was ordered to be laid on the table.

POSTMASTERS' BONDS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 4039) to amend sections 3834, 3836, and 3837 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes.

The bill was read at length, for information.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be some explanation of this bill. It is a fairly good bill, but I hope there will be some explanation of it. I did not hear the first part of the bill read.

The SPEAKER. It is a bill within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOLMAN. But that committee is not authorized to report at any time.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is that a House bill?

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill, similar to a House bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope it will be passed over for the present.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads is temporarily absent.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. BLOUNT. I was not present when the bill was reported, and do not want to give it my indorsement or opposition.

WILLIAM J. MARTIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 4064) for the relief of William J. Martin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of William J. Martin, of Oregon, heretofore presented to the War Department, being a balance of $7,520 alleged to be due and owing to him under his contract for beef-cattle, made with Lieut. G. W. Hawkins in June, 1849, and for the delivery of beef-cattle under such contract for the use of the Army, together with interest on said balance since January 1, 1850, be, and the same is hereby referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication; and said court is directed to ascertain what amount, if any, is due said William J. Martin by reason of and under said alleged contract, and to render judgment therefor, any statute of limitation or prior disallowance by the War Department to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. CANNON. Is that a House bill?

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. HERMANN. A like bill in substance was reported by the House committee.

Mr. CANNON. Has it ever been considered in the House?

Mr. HERMANN. A similar bill has been reported from the Committee on Claims on identically the same matters pending in the Senate bill, with a unanimous report. It has passed several times in the Senate, and has twice been reported to the House, but was never considered for want of time. It simply submits the matter to the Court of Claims to be adjudicated.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman know that a House bill substantially the same has been reported? Has he examined it?

Mr. HERMANN. I hold the House bill in my hand. I know the party, and know the witnesses to the contract, and I believe that this is a just and honest claim, and ought at least to be adjudicated by the Court of Claims, if not by this House.

Mr. CANNON. That tells how it should be adjudicated. It is one of that class of cases where there ought to be consideration. It annuls the statutes of limitations, goes back a generation, and directs the Court of Claims to pass upon this case, the findings of the War Department to the contrary notwithstanding, on a claim that originated in 1864, and that has been fully heard and rejected by the War Department. Now, I do not think that it ought to pass in this body, and I think it should go to the committee.

Mr. HERMANN. I will state in answer to the gentleman that the report of the committee which I hold in my hand is in some respects similar to the Senate report. It sets forth in detail all the facts, showing why it was not earlier considered; showing the difficulties that they have been put to and the peculiar hardships which attached to this particular case. For years and years the party has been endeavoring to get testimony which is essential, and he has now succeeded in obtaining it. The officer who made the contract went insane, and it was thus impossible to supply the vouchers; therefore the War Department declined to consider the case. They have now obtained numerous affidavits and corroborative testimony, and that is set forth in the report.

The bill has been three times passed by the Senate and sent to this House at different sessions of Congress. It has been twice considered by the Committee on Claims of this House, and considered there and reported at two different sessions of this House—at the last session of the Fiftieth Congress and again in this session. There was no difference of opinion whatever, so far as the Committee on Claims of this House was concerned, and there is no difficulty with the position of the Senate. I know the old man; know he has been made poor for many years owing to the loss that he had sustained by the amount invested in this claim. I know that an appropriation should be made now, but inasmuch as other claims similar to this have been referred to the Court of Claims I think this should take the same course.

Mr. CANNON. What is the amount of the claim?

Mr. HERMANN. Seven thousand five hundred dollars.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The House bill of a similar title was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair observes that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] is now present, and the Chair calls his attention to Senate bill No. 4039, in relation to postmasters' bonds, which was laid aside awhile ago.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will explain the effect of this bill, especially as to the assistant postmasters provided for.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to state that this Senate bill has never been acted upon by the House Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and therefore, the proper disposition of it would be to refer it to the committee. I am not authorized to speak for the committee in regard to the provisions of the bill, because they have not yet been acted upon by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the point of order is of course good.

The SPEAKER. Of course. The Chair was misinformed. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

THE BARK CAMPANERO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 4074) to provide an American register for the bark Campanero, of Baltimore, Md. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the bark Campanero, owned and rebuilt at the port of Baltimore, Md., by John M. Bandel & Sons, citizens of the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill just read is identical with the House bill on the same subject, and I am authorized by the committee to ask for its immediate consideration.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House bill of like purport was laid on the table.

TRUST, LOAN, AND OTHER CORPORATIONS IN THE DISTRICT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 4081) to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the Senate bill is identical with the House bill on the same subject.

Mr. GROUT. Not exactly identical. The House committee propose an amendment.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that this Senate bill is not identical with the bill reported from the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The words of the rule are "substantially identical."

Mr. PAYSON. Well, substantially identical.

Mr. GROUT. This is substantially the same as the House bill.

Mr. PAYSON. Unless the gentleman from Vermont can give assurance in advance that it is and that it complies with the rule there may be objection to the consideration of this bill, and as it is very long, we may save time by settling the question now.

Mr. GROUT. I think it is substantially identical with the House bill. I want to say for the information of gentlemen that the Senate bill has been examined by the subcommittee of the House District Committee having charge of this matter, and who have spent a large amount of time in reporting the original bill, and they think that certain provisions in the Senate bill are an improvement upon the House bill, and they propose to adopt the Senate bill with two amendments to one section.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, if this bill is liable to a point of order, I want to raise that point now.

The SPEAKER. Upon the information so far received, the Chair thinks it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It certainly is not subject to the point of order. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That corporations may be formed within the District of Columbia for the purposes hereinafter mentioned in the following manner:

Any time hereafter any number of natural persons, not less than twenty-five, may associate themselves together to form a company for the purpose of carrying on any one of the three classes of business herein specified, to wit:

First. A safe deposit, trust, loan, and mortgage business.

Second. A title insurance, loan, and mortgage business.

Third. A security, guaranty, indemnity, loan, and mortgage business: Provided, That the capital stock of any of said companies shall not be less than $1,000,000: Provided further, That any of said companies may also do a storage business when their capital stock amounts to the sum of not less than $1,200,000.

Sec. 2. That such persons shall, under their hands and seals, execute, before some officer in said District competent to take the acknowledgment of deeds, an organization certificate, which shall specifically state—

First. The name of the corporation.

Second. The purposes for which it is formed.

Third. The term for which it is to exist (which may be perpetual).

Fourth. The number of its directors, and the names and residences of the officers who for the first year are to manage the affairs of the company.

Fifth. The amount of the capital stock and its subdivision into shares.

Sec. 3. That this certificate shall be presented to the commissioners of the District, who shall have power and discretion to grant or to refuse to said persons a charter of incorporation upon the terms set forth in the said certificate and the provisions of this act.

Sec. 4. That previous to the presentation of the said certificate to the said commissioners notice of the intention to apply for such charter shall be inserted in two newspapers of general circulation printed in the District of Columbia at least four times a week for three weeks, setting forth briefly the name of the proposed company, its character and object, the names of the proposed incorporators, and the intention to make application for a charter on a specified day, and the proof of such publication shall be presented with said certificate when presentation thereof is made to said commissioners.

SEC. 5. That if the charter be granted as aforesaid it, together with the certificate of the commissioners granting the same indorsed thereon, shall be filed for record in the office of the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia, and shall be recorded by him. On the filing of the said certificate with the said recorder of deeds as herein provided, approved as aforesaid by the said commissioners, the persons named therein and their successors shall thereupon and thereby be and become a body corporate and politic, and as such shall be vested with all the powers and charged with all the liabilities conferred upon and imposed by this act upon companies organized under the provisions hereof: Provided, however, That no corporation created and organized under the provisions hereof, or availing itself of the provisions hereof as provided in section 11, shall be authorized to transact the business of a trust company, or any business of a fiduciary character, until it shall have filed with the Comptroller of the Currency a copy of its certificate of organization and charter, and shall have obtained from him and filed the same for record with the said recorder of deeds a certificate that the capital stock of said company has been paid in, and the deposit of securities made with said Comptroller in the manner and to the extent required by this act.

SEC. 6. That all companies organized hereunder, or which shall under the provisions hereof become entitled to transact the business of a trust company, shall report to the Comptroller of the Currency in the manner prescribed by sections 5211, 5212, and 5413, Revised Statutes of the United States, in the case of national banks, and all acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, and with similar provisions for compensating examiners, and shall be subject to like penalties for failure to do so. The Comptroller shall have and exercise the same visitatorial powers over the affairs of the said corporation as is conferred upon him by section 5240 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in the case of national banks. He shall also have power, when in his opinion it is necessary, to take possession of any such company for the reasons and in the manner and to the same extent as are provided in the laws of the United States with respect to national banks.

SEC. 7. That all companies organized under this act are hereby declared to be corporations possessed of the powers and functions of corporations generally, and shall have power, among other things—

First. To make contracts.

Second. To sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, in any court as fully as natural persons.

Third. To make and use a common seal and alter the same at pleasure.

Fourth. To loan money on first mortgages of real estate.

Fifth. When organized under subdivision 1 of the first section of this act to accept and execute trusts of any and every description which may be committed or transferred to them, and to accept the office and perform the duties of receiver, assignee, executor, administrator, guardian of the estates of minors, with the consent of the guardian of the person of such minor, and committee of the estates of lunatics and idiots whenever any trusteeship or any such office or appointment is committed or transferred to them, with their consent, by any person, body politic or corporate, or by any court in the District of Columbia, or in any of the States or Territories of the United States, and all such companies organized under the first subdivision of section 1 of this act are further authorized to accept deposits of money for the purposes designated herein upon such terms as may be agreed upon from time to time with depositors, and to act as agent for the purpose of issuing or countersigning the bonds or obligations of any corporation, association, municipality, or State, or other public authority, and to receive and manage any sinking fund on any such terms as may be agreed upon, and shall have power to issue its debenture bonds upon deeds of trust or mortgages of real estate to a sum not exceeding the face value of said deeds of trust or mortgages, and which shall not exceed 50 per cent. of the fair cash value of the real estate covered by said deeds or mortgages, to be ascertained by the Comptroller of the Currency. But no debenture bonds shall be issued until the securities on which the same are based have been placed in the actual possession of the trustee named in the debenture bonds, who shall hold said securities until all of said bonds are paid; and when organized under the second subdivision of the first section of this act said company is authorized to insure titles to real estate and to transact generally the business mentioned in said subdivision; and when organized under the third subdivision of section 1 of this act said company is hereby authorized, in addition to the loan and mortgage business therein mentioned, to secure, guaranty, and insure individuals, bodies politic, associations, and corporations against loss by or through trustees, agents, servants, or employees, and to guaranty the faithful performance of contracts and of obligations of whatever kind entered into by or on the part of any person or persons, association, corporation or corporations, and against loss of every kind.

SEC. 8. That in all cases in which application shall be made to any court in the District of Columbia, or wherever it becomes necessary or proper for said court to appoint a trustee, receiver, administrator, guardian of the estate of a minor, or committee of the estate of a lunatic, it shall and may be lawful for said court (but without prejudice to any preference in the order of any such appointments required by existing law) to appoint any such company organized under the first subdivision of section 1 of this act, with its assent, such trustee, receiver, administrator, committee, or guardian, with the consent of the guardian of the person of such minor: Provided, however, That no court or judge shall commit by order or decree to any such corporation any trust or fiduciary duty who is an owner of or in any manner financially interested in the stock or business of such corporation.

SEC. 9. That whenever any corporation operating under this act shall be appointed such trustee, executor, administrator, receiver, assignee, guardian, or committee as aforesaid, the president, vice-president, secretary, or treasurer of said company shall take the oath or affirmation now required by law to be made by any trustee, executor, receiver, assignee, guardian, or committee.

SEC. 10. That when any court shall appoint the said company a trustee, receiver, administrator, or such guardian, or committee, or shall order the deposit of money or other valuables with said company, or where any individual or corporation shall appoint any of said companies a trustee, executor, assignee, or such guardian the capital stock of said company subscribed for or taken, and all property owned by said company, together with the liability of the stockholders and officers as herein provided, shall be taken and considered as the security required by law for the faithful performance of its duties, and shall be absolutely liable in case of any default whatever.

SEC. 11. That any safe deposit company, trust company, or title insurance company, now incorporated and operating under the laws of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or any of the States, and now doing business in said District, may avail itself of the provisions of this act on filing in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, or with the Comptroller of the Currency, a certificate of its intention to do so, which certificate shall specify which one of the three classes of business set out in section 1 it will carry on, and shall be verified by the oath of its president to the effect that it has in every respect complied with the requirements of existing law, especially with the provisions of this act: that its capital stock is paid in as provided in section 21 of this act and is not impaired, and thereafter such company may exercise all powers and perform all duties authorized by any one of the subdivisions of section 1 of this act in addition to the powers now lawfully exercised by such company.

SEC. 12. That any company operating under this act may lease, purchase, hold, and convey real estate, not exceeding in value $500,000, and such in addition as it may acquire in satisfaction of debts due the corporation, under sales, decrees, judgments, and mortgages.

SEC. 13. That the charters for incorporations named in this act may be made perpetual, or may be limited in time by their provisions, subject to the approval of Congress.

SEC. 14. That the capital stock of every such company shall be at least $1,000,000, and at least 50 per cent. thereof must have been paid in, in cash or by the transfer of assets as hereinafter provided in section 21 of this act, before any such company shall be entitled to transact business as a corporation, except with its own members; and before any company organized hereunder shall be entitled to transact the business of a trust company, or to become and act as an administrator, executor, guardian of the estate of a minor, or undertake any other kindred fiduciary duty, it shall deposit, either in money or in bonds, mortgages, deed of trust, or other securities equal in actual value to one-fourth of the capital stock paid in, with the Comptroller of the Currency, to be kept by him upon the trust and for the purposes hereinafter provided; and the said Comptroller may from time to time require an additional deposit from any such company, to be held upon and for the same trust and purposes, not exceeding, however, in value one-half the paid-in capital stock; and the said Comptroller shall not issue to any corporation the certificate heretofore provided for until said deposit with him of securities required by this section. Within one year after the organization of any corporation under the provisions of this act, or after any corporation heretofore existing shall have availed itself of the powers and rights given by this act in the manner herein provided for, its entire capital stock shall have been paid in.

SEC. 15. That the capital stock of every such company shall be divided into shares of $100 each. It shall be lawful for such company to call for and demand from the stockholders, respectively, all sums of money by them subscribed, at such time and in such proportions as its board of directors shall deem proper, within the time specified in section 14, and it may enforce payment by all remedies provided by law; and if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any installment as required by a resolution of the board of directors, after thirty days' notice of the same, the said board of directors may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, so many shares of said stock as shall pay said installment, under such general regulations as may be adopted in the by-laws of said company, and the highest bidder shall be taken to be the person who offers to purchase the least number of shares for the assessment due.

SEC. 16. That every such company shall annually, within twenty days after the last of January of each year, make a report to the Comptroller of the Currency, which shall be published in a newspaper in the District, which shall state the amount of capital and of the proportion actually paid, the amount of debt, and the gross earnings for the year ending December 31 then next previous, together with their expenses, which report shall be signed by the president and a majority of the directors or trustees, and shall be verified by the oath of the president, secretary, and at least three of the directors or trustees; and said company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in lieu of personal taxes for each next ensuing year, 1 per cent. of its gross earnings for the preceding year, shown by said verified statement, which amount shall be payable to the collector of taxes at the times and in the manner that other taxes are payable.

SEC. 17. That if any company fails to comply with the provisions of the preceding section, all the directors or trustees of such company shall be jointly and severally liable for the debts of the company then existing, and for all that shall be contracted before such report shall be made: Provided, That in case of failure of the company in any year to comply with the provisions of section 16 of this act, and any of the directors shall on or before January 15 of such year file his written request for such compliance with the secretary of the company, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, such director shall be exempt from the liability prescribed in this section.

SEC. 18. That any willful false swearing in regard to any certificate or report or public notice required by the provisions of this act shall be perjury and shall be punished as such according to the laws of the District of Columbia. And any misappropriation of any of the money of any corporation or company formed under this act, or any money, funds, or property intrusted to it, shall be held to be larceny, and shall be punished as such under the laws of said District.

SEC. 19. That the stock of such company shall be deemed personal estate, and shall be transferable only on the books of such company in such manner as shall be prescribed by the by-laws of the company; but no shares shall be transferable until all previous calls thereon shall have been fully paid, and the said stock shall not be taxable, in the hands of individual owners, the tax on the capital stock, gross earnings of the company heretofore provided being in lieu of other personal tax. All certificates of the stock of any company organized under this act shall show upon their face the par value of each share and the amount paid thereon.

SEC. 20. That all stockholders of every company incorporated under this act or availing itself of its provisions under section 11 shall be severally and individually liable to the creditors of such company to an amount equal to and in addition to the amount of stock held by them, respectively, for all debts and contracts made by such company.

SEC. 21. That nothing but money shall be considered as payment of any part of the capital stock, except that in the case of any company now doing business in the District of Columbia in any of the classes herein provided for, or under any act of Congress or by virtue of the laws of any of the States, and which company has actually received full payment in money of at least 50 per cent. of the capital stock required by this act, and which company desires to obtain a charter under this act, all the assets or property may be received and considered as money, at a value to be appraised and fixed by the Comptroller of the Currency: Provided, That all such assets and property are also transferred to and are thereafter owned by the company organized under this act.

SEC. 22. That the stock, property, and concerns of such company shall be managed by not less than nine nor more than thirty directors or trustees, who shall, respectively, be stockholders and at least one-half residents and citizens of the District of Columbia, and shall, except the first year, be annually elected by the stockholders at such time and place and after such published notice as shall be determined by the by-laws of the company, and said directors or trustees shall hold until their successors are elected and qualified.

SEC. 23. That there shall be a president of the company, who shall be a director, also a secretary and a treasurer, all of whom shall be chosen by the directors or trustees: Provided, That only one of the above-named offices shall be held by the same person at the same time. Subordinate officers may be appointed by the directors or trustees, and all such officers may be required to give such security for the faithful performance of the duties of their office as the directors or trustees may require.

SEC. 24. That the directors or trustees shall have power to make such by-laws as they deem proper for the management or disposal of the stock and business affairs of such company, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and prescribing the duties of officers and servants that may be employed, for the appointment of all officers, and for carrying on all kinds of business within the objects and purposes of such company.

SEC. 25. That if the directors or trustees of any company shall declare or pay any dividend, the payment of which would render it insolvent, or which would create a debt against such company, they shall be jointly and severally liable as guarantors for all of the debts of the company then existing, and for all that shall be thereafter contracted, while they shall, respectively, remain in office.

SEC. 26. That if any of the directors or trustees shall object to declaring such dividend or the payment of the same, and shall at any time before the time fixed for the payment thereof file a certificate of their objection in writing with the secretary of the company with the recorder of deeds of the District they shall be exempt from liability prescribed in the preceding section.

SEC. 27. That if the liabilities of any company shall at any time exceed the amount of the fair cash value of the assets, the directors or trustees of such company assenting thereto shall be personally and individually liable for such excess to the creditors of the company after the additional liability of the stockholders has been enforced.

SEC. 28. That no person holding stock in such company as executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee shall be personally subject to any liability as stockholder of such company, but the estate and funds in the hands of such executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee shall be liable in like manner and to the same extent as the testator or intestate or the ward or the person interested in such trust fund would have been if he had been living and competent to act and hold the stock in his own name.

SEC. 29. That any corporation which may be formed under this chapter may increase its capital stock by complying with the provisions of this chapter to any amount which may be deemed sufficient and proper for the purposes of the corporation.

SEC. 30. That a copy of any certificate of incorporation filed in pursuance of this chapter, certified by the recorder of deeds to be a true copy and the whole of such certificate, shall be received in all courts and places as presumptive legal evidence of the facts therein stated.

SEC. 31. That no bond or other collateral security, except as hereinafter stated, shall be required from any trust company incorporated under this act for or in respect to any trust, nor when appointed trustee, guardian, receiver, executor, or administrator, with or without the will annexed, committee of the estate of a lunatic or idiot, or other fiduciary appointment; but the capital stock subscribed for or taken, and all property owned by said company and the amount which said stockholders shall be liable in excess of their stock, shall be taken and considered as the security required by law for the faithful performance of its duties and shall be absolutely liable in case of any default whatever; and in case of the insolvency or dissolution of said company the debts due from the said company as trustee, guardian, receiver, executor, or administrator, committee of the estate of lunatics, idiots, or any other fiduciary appointment, shall have a preference.

SEC. 32. That the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or any justice thereof, shall have power to make orders respecting such company whenever it shall have been appointed trustee, guardian, receiver, executor, or administrator with or without the will annexed, committee of the estate of a lunatic, idiot, or any other fiduciary, and require the said company to render all accounts which might lawfully be made or required by any court or any justice thereof if such trustee, guardian, receiver, executor, administrator with or without the will annexed, committee of the estate of a lunatic or idiot, or fiduciary were a natural person. And said court, or any justice thereof, at any time, on application of any person interested, may appoint some suitable person to examine into the affairs and standing of such companies, who shall make a full report thereof to the court, and said court, or any justice thereof, may at any time, in its discretion, require of said company a bond with sureties or other securities for the faithful performance of its obligations, and such sureties or other securities shall be liable to the same extent and in the same manner as if given or pledged by a natural person.

SEC. 33. That no corporation or company organized by virtue of the laws of any of the States of this Union shall carry on, in the District of Columbia, any of the kinds of business named in this act without strict compliance in all particulars with the provisions of this act for the government of such corporations formed under it, and each one of the officers of the corporation or company so offending shall be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment in some State's prison not exceeding one year, or by both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 34. That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act (saving and preserving all rights which may become vested), but any such amendment or repeal shall not, nor shall the dissolution of any company formed under this act, take away or impair any remedy given against such corporation, its stockholders or officers, for any liability or penalty which shall have been previously incurred.

Mr. PAYSON (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask whether the question of order upon this bill will be waived by permitting its reading.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the motion is to concur, with an amendment?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. This is a Senate bill which has passed the Senate. It is substantially the same as the House bill which has been passed upon by the House. The point of order, of course, will remain until the bill is read.

Mr. MCCOMAS. But the gentleman [Mr. GROUT] now says that he proposes to move to concur, with one or two amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, if he used that language, doubtless used it inadvertently, meaning only that the House bill which has been reported is substantially the same as this Senate bill; that the Committee on the District of Columbia are satisfied in the main with the Senate bill, but that they propose to offer one or two amendments.

Mr. PAYSON. When the bill shall be considered.

The SPEAKER. Of course when the bill shall be considered.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration against this measure.

Mr. PAYSON. Before that question shall be put, as I made a suggestion awhile ago with reference to this bill as to whether or not it came within the rule, I desire to say now that I have followed the reading carefully as it has progressed, and I am satisfied that the Senate bill is substantially the same as the House bill. In justice to the committee I feel bound to say that I think the bill comes within the rule.

The question was taken on the question of consideration raised by Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas; and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask for a division.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 112, nays 5.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, in looking over the House I doubt whether there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman raise the point that there is no quorum present?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes; I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER (after counting). There are 170 members present.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that while this Senate bill is substantially the same as the House bill, nevertheless the rule requires that before a bill can be called up in this way it must have been considered in a committee—in this case the Committee on the District of Columbia—and that that must be done on a motion in the committee directing that the bill be called up.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to raise that point. The question of consideration has been raised by the gentleman himself, which waives all points of order.

Mr. GROUT. The consideration of this bill has been ordered by the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I understand that it has been ordered by the consent of individual members of the committee, but not by the committee, as I am informed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair might be inclined to sustain that point, but it is raised too late. The House has voted to consider the bill. The question is now on ordering the bill to a third reading. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT], as the Chair understands, desires to submit certain amendments which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 33 by inserting, after the word "Union," in line 2, the words "and having its principal place of business within the District of Columbia." Add to this section the following proviso: "This section shall not take effect till six months after the approval of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. On that question I want to be heard.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] yield the floor?

Mr. GROUT. No, Mr. Speaker. If the gentleman will say how much time he wants we will grant him reasonable time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like thirty minutes.

Mr. GROUT. I cannot yield the gentleman that length of time. This amendment simply provides that the organizations of this character formed under laws of the several States—there are two or three such organizations now doing business within the District—shall bring themselves within the provisions of this bill in all respects, by depositing with the Comptroller of the Currency the necessary bonds and doing everything for the security of those doing business with the companies. We do not want any "wild-cat" organizations; they should in some way be controlled. That is the object of section 33; but the way it is drawn—

Mr. BLOUNT. May I interrupt the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to suggest to the gentleman that it often happens that the District wants matters considered here; and if the gentleman from Kansas desires thirty minutes for discussion, I hope that time will be allowed him. I do not think it is going to hurt the District at all.

Mr. GROUT. I should not object if that time would satisfy the gentleman with reference to the whole bill; but I am not willing that so much time be occupied on this amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not ask that.

Mr. GROUT. I was explaining this matter so that the gentleman from Kansas might not perhaps ask to occupy time on the amendment, but take it on the general provisions of the bill. I hoped my explanation would be satisfactory to him; I think it will.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why not agree (I understand the gentleman from Kansas would be willing to accept this arrangement) that he have thirty minutes in the beginning on the bill?

Mr. GROUT. If that will satisfy the gentleman I am content.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that debate be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object.

Mr. GROUT. Then, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kansas is not disposed to be reasonable I withdraw my concession and retain the floor for the purpose of making an explanation.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am disposed to be reasonable, but I would like to have a little fair debate upon such an outrageous, infernal bill as this.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It has been impossible to hear what has been going on. Now, I wish to be heard at the proper time in opposition to the passage of this bill. I desire to ask where we are in reference to this matter. Have we passed the stage of debate on the bill?

The SPEAKER. We have not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I want to be recognized to oppose the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well. Does the gentleman propose that there shall be no debate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what are the wishes of the gentleman.

Mr. BREWER. I suggest that the gentleman from Vermont have his amendments voted on, and then have the discussion on the bill.

Mr. GROUT. That is what I propose.

Mr. BREWER. I understand there is no objection to the amendments.

Mr. GROUT. If the amendments are agreed to, I am willing (and so is the committee) that the bill shall then be discussed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair then will put the question on the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill as amended to a third reading.

Mr. GROUT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am ready to yield to the gentleman from Kansas. I presume no one else desires to occupy any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has given notice that he also wishes to oppose the passage of the bill.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to forty minutes—thirty minutes against the bill and ten in its favor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that debate be limited to forty minutes—thirty minutes in opposition to the bill and ten minutes in favor of it. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Kansas will control the thirty minutes, and the gentleman from Vermont the ten minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, this is a proposition which has grown up out of the legislation of certain States of the Union, and it is designed to supplant private individuals by corporations in respect to guardianship and administration of estates and other fiduciary matters. I am not affected by the measure so far as any local interest I may have is concerned; but this is a subject which has been under consideration in the District of Columbia for a long period, and I can not better occupy my time than by having the Clerk read letters of the judges of the courts of this District, who have protested against the passage of this bill. If after hearing these letters the House of Representatives desires to force this sort of legislation upon the District over the heads of the entire local judiciary, I shall be content. I desire first to have read a letter of Judge D. K. Cartter.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Before that letter is read I wish to ask whether it relates to the bill now pending.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It relates to the whole subject-matter.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. What subject?

Mr. GROSVENOR. This same bill.

Mr. GROUT. I can answer the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. STEWART] by stating that the letter deals with a feature that this bill does not contain.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have several of these letters.

The Clerk read as follows:

Supreme Court of the District of Columbia,
February 13, 1883.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, in which you inform me that your committee directs you to ask my opinion and that of my associates "as to the advisability of conferring upon the National Safe Deposit Company of Washington the additional powers asked for by Senate bill No. 152 as modified in the copy inclosed."

The amendments proposed authorize the corporation, under a changed name—
First. To accept and execute trusts of every description which may be committed or transferred to it by any person, body corporate or politic, or by any court in the District of Columbia, or in any of the United States.

Second. To accept the office and appointment of executor or administrator, whenever conferred or made by any person or by any orphan's court of the District or of any State.

Third. To authorize any court of the District of Columbia to confer upon the corporation the appointment of receiver, assignee, guardian of minors, or committee of lunatics, and to require the corporation to account concerning such trusts before the proper courts, and to authorize the corporation to receive the usual compensation and fees for such services.

The other provisions are matters of detail not requiring notice here. In compliance with the request of the committee to express an opinion as to the advisability of granting the powers thus asked, we have no hesitation in expressing our decided opinion that the bill ought not to pass.

We do not conceive it to be important to give at length our reasons for this opinion, but we may suggest a few of the more obvious objections to the measure.

First. The proposed action is wholly unnecessary. We know of no defects in the present mode of appointing the fiduciaries referred to, or in the manner of their discharging their important duties, requiring any change in the law in these particulars, or justifying the bestowal of such anomalous powers upon a private corporation for the benefit of its stockholders.

No excuse is to be found in any supposed notion of economy to the public, since the bill exacts for the corporation the same rate of compensation now received by individuals; nor is such support to be found in the idea of greater security, since the present method, which divides these trusts among a number of responsible persons, is reasonably safer than a system which proposes to accumulate a multitude of such trusts in the hands of the trust company, a form of organization which experience informs us is not exempt from risk of disastrous failures.

Second. The several classes of trusts referred to in the law, whether conferred by individuals or by appointment from the courts, are now confided to persons selected after examination of their personal and private character, and because of their worth and reliability. But the bestowal of such trusts upon a corporation would be accompanied by no such guaranty of personal fitness upon the part of the individual who, after all, would execute the duty. The selected agent of the corporation might be one wholly unknown to those interested in the trust or to the courts making the appointment, and such a person as the court would have rejected as entirely unworthy the office. One of the most efficient means of enforcing the performance by these fiduciaries of their duties and of punishing their neglect or violation is by attachment or other like process directed against the individual, who would be personally affected by the orders of the court.

But no such address would be available against an impersonal body, a corporation, in no degree amenable to personal subjection or discipline, however recalcitrant in the discharge of its duty.

Third. The proposed change would involve a repeal pro tanto of almost every feature of the testamentary system in force in this District, introducing confusion and uncertainty in the workings of a wise and compendious scheme of jurisprudence, familiar to the people and satisfactory as it now exists, and this in the entire absence of any necessity for a change and without the slightest reason that is apparent to us beyond the prospect of personal gain to the corporation in question.

We may add that the extraordinary proposal to authorize the corporation to act as executor, administrator, receiver, guardian of minors, or committee of a lunatic, does not constitute a feature in the "American Loan and Trust Company of Boston," a copy of which was inclosed in your letter. We can conceive of no reason for extending such delicate and varied powers, most of which imply personal qualities as involved in their exercise, to an agent so entirely unfitted for their performance as an incorporation.

The opinion I have thus had the honor to communicate to the honorable Committee on the District of Columbia is concurred in by my colleagues, who have been consulted by me, as desired in your letter.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. K. CARTTER,
Chief-Justice Supreme Court.

Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS,

Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, United States Senate.

ROOMS OF THE BAR ASSOCIATION,

Washington, February 9, 1883.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this association the bills now pending in the Senate and House of Representatives authorizing the Title Insurance Company of the District of Columbia to act as trustees, guardian, executor, administrator, etc., and to incorporate the National Title Company for like purposes, are obnoxious to the best interests of the community, and that a committee be appointed by the chair to wait upon the committee having the same in charge and oppose their passage.

Teste:

HENRY WISE GARNETT, Secretary.

Mr. GROSVENOR. As the time allotted to me is so brief, I will append the other letters from the judges of the courts here, and from the Bar Association, showing their views of this subject.

They are as follows:

ROOMS OF THE BAR ASSOCIATION,

Washington, D. C., December 31, 1884.

Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS,

Chairman Senate Committee on District of Columbia:

Sir: In January, 1884, we had the honor to address you a communication in reference to certain bills then pending before your honorable committee to confer upon certain private corporations the power to act as trustee, guardian, etc. Since then our attention has been called to a communication from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, dated December 13, 1884, and addressed to the Hon. Isham G. Harris, chairman of the subcommittee having charge of bill S. 151, which is identical with H. R. 1437. The provisions of these two bills are the same as those contained in the bills referred to in our said communication to you.

The commissioners of the District of Columbia, contrary to their custom, did not refer Judge Harris's letter, asking their advisability as to this bill becoming a law, to the law officer of the District of Columbia, but ignored him entirely, and undertook to give their own opinion and attempt to support it by saying: "Learning that the subject had been discussed by the judges of the supreme court of the District, and that the chief-justice had some time since given their views in a letter addressed to the honorable chairman of the Senate Committee for the District of Columbia adversely to such legislation, the commissioners consulted the chief-justice [Hon. D. K. Cartter], and now learn from him that such letter was written, but that since then he, and as he believes, his associates have re-examined the question and reached a conclusion that such trust company, with proper regulations, is desirable, especially when accompanied by the proviso found in section 3, authorizing the court to investigate the affairs of the company, and to give further security if found to be necessary."

Evidently there is a mistake somewhere in reference to the alleged change of opinion of the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, as will appear from the following letters addressed to us by four of the associated justices of that court, they being the only members of the court consulted on the subject by us:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 30, 1884.

Messrs. FENDALL, NEWMAN, and others,

Committee Bar Association:

GENTLEMEN: In reply to your letter asking my opinion as to the propriety of granting to the Safe Deposit Company additional powers and privileges contemplated by the proposed act (H. R. 1437) I say that I think the contemplated change in the law is both unnecessary and dangerous.

The existing provisions of law which regulate the choice, appointment, and bonding of administrators, executors, guardians, and trustees in this jurisdiction have proved entirely satisfactory for more than a century. I know of no case since I have been on the bench of the appointment of any such officer where the appointee has been unfaithful to his trust. If such a state of things should be made to appear, the bonds which have been given by those fiduciaries may be resorted to, to make good the loss. No difficulty has hitherto appeared in obtaining adequate security, and I see no reason to suppose it will appear in the future under the present system. A practice which has thus proved itself by long experience adequate and convenient, and which is familiar to our people, should not be invaded, I submit, without some grave reason for the change. Unnecessary as the change would be, even under the management of the gentlemen now in charge of the corporation (who, I am sure, are all their friends represent in point of intelligence and integrity), the proposed change would prove most pernicious should the control of the company fall into improper hands. That such change in the management may reasonably be apprehended is plain enough, and our experience recalls disastrous failures of trust companies previously standing as high in public esteem as this one can hope to do.

One of the most objectionable features in the bill, in my opinion, is the granting of the power to this company to act as guardian to minors. I can not well conceive of a more dreary situation than that of a young girl or boy intrusted to the custody of a corporation in this way. Who is to regulate the education, morals, dress, abode, and association of such young person placed under such guardianship? Some particular agent must be selected to see after the minor as to such matters; and can it be advisable that a girl just growing into womanhood should be compelled to rely upon the counsel of men, strangers to her and her family, to guide her in those delicate and dangerous matters? For there can not be two guardians, and the child can not be reasonably expected to reverence and obey the voluntary admonitions of a person who has no means whatever of enforcing his or her counsels, not even the restraint of drawing the purse-strings. It seems a cheerless enough thing to raise children by machinery, but the guardianship by the proverbial soulless corporation seems to me to be a gross and most pernicious exaggeration of the patent incubating process. I adhere to the opinion the judges of the supreme court of the District gave to a committee of Congress a year or two ago as to this subject.

Respectfully,

A. B. HAGNER.

Messrs. FENDALL AND NEWMAN.

GENTLEMEN: After reading Judge Hagner's letter I think it is unnecessary that I should state my own views separately, inasmuch as I should only repeat what he has said. I am clearly of opinion that the proposed innovation is unnecessary, and that it is not advisable that an innovation should be adopted without necessity. Besides, I have more faith in individual than in corporate agencies, and should regret to see them pushed aside by the latter.

Respectfully,

CHARLES P. JAMES.

I am of opinion that the interests contemplated by the proposed legislation should not be intrusted to a corporation under any circumstances.

ARTHUR MACARTHUR.

DECEMBER 30, 1884.

As trust companies seem to have worked successfully elsewhere, I am not prepared, in ignorance of their actual operation, to say that they can not be successfully managed here in the direction contemplated by the bill under consideration. But I agree with the others who have expressed an opinion that such a measure is entirely unnecessary, and that there might be great awkwardness in such corporations acting as guardians, at least if not in other respects. I think the court would seldom, if ever, be inclined to prefer them to responsible individuals.

W. S. COX.

DECEMBER 31, 1884.

In conclusion, we would respectfully reinvite your attention to our communication above referred to and request that the same may be read in connection herewith.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

REGINALD FENDALL,
ANDREW C. BRADLEY,
HENRY WISE GARNETT,
HENRY E. DAVIS,
EDWARD A. NEWMAN.

Committee of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia.

ROOMS OF THE BAR ASSOCIATION, January 21, 1886.

At a special meeting of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia held January 20, 1886, the following resolution, introduced by Mr. J. J. Darlington, was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the special committee composed of Messrs. Reginald Fendall, H. E. Davis, E. A. Newman, A. C. Bradley, and Henry W. Garnett, heretofore appointed on behalf of the association to oppose before the committees of Congress any and all legislation conferring upon corporations within the District of Columbia the power of acting as trustees, guardians, executors, administrators, or in other fiduciary capacity, be reappointed for that purpose, it being the unchanged sense of this association that such legislation would be prejudicial to the interests thereby affected.

A true extract from the minutes.

CHAS. A. ELLIOT,

Secretary Bar Association, District of Columbia.

SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

Washington, D. C. January 23, 1889.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of this instant asking my views of the advisability of the passage by Congress of the "trust bill," so called, enabling certain corporations to act as executors, administrators, guardians, and trustees of estates, received. Also, a pamphlet containing the argument of a committee of the Bar Association of this District addressed to the Committee of the House of Representatives for the District of Columbia of a former Congress, and letters of the late Chief-Justice Carter and Justice Hagner, Merrick, James, Cox, and MacArthur, which I have read with much interest. The proposition to clothe corporations with such powers and duties is one upon which I have not heretofore bestowed much thought, but I am strongly inclined to regard it unfavorably.

I can not perceive that in any respect such a law would be beneficial, while the reasons by the committee and gentlemen before named against such an enactment are, in my judgment, cogent and conclusive. I think such legislation is not only unnecessary, it is wrong in principle and should be defeated.

Very respectfully,

E. F. BINGHAM.

CHAPIN BROWN, Esq.,

For the Committee of the Bar Association, District of Columbia.

In view of this positive expression of opinion on the part of both the bench and bar, and for other cogent reasons which can be presented orally to the committees of Congress if an opportunity be afforded, the undersigned respectfully submit that said bills should not become law.

REGINALD FENDALL,
HENRY WISE GARNETT,
ANDREW C. BRADLEY,
HENRY E. DAVIS,
EDWARD A. NEWMAN.

Committee of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GROSVENOR. As will be seen, Mr. Speaker, the other judges of the courts here, which include such eminent jurists as A. B. Hagner, Charles P. James, W. S. Cox, and the present Chief-Justice Bingham, writing under a much later date, nearly a year ago, when this identical bill was pending in the House, utter even stronger language in protest against the conferring of this immense corporate power upon a monopoly such as is proposed here.

On the 15th day of January of the present year, 1890, a committee of the Bar Association of this city, numbering some fifteen men, held a meeting and protested against the passage of this bill. So we have all of the judges of the courts of the District, the Bar Association of the District, and I have also a letter from Hon. W. W. Merrick, who was himself a very distinguished lawyer, protesting against the passage of it. The gentleman must not say that it is not this bill against which they protest, because Chief-Justice Carter described all of the salient features of the bill, and in the case of the Bar Association their action was taken while the very bill was pending before the committee of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. What is the date of Mr. Merrick's protest to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. GROSVENOR. In 1886, just before his death.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman is entirely in error in saying that this bill has been protested against, because the bill was not reported to the House until April 28 of this year.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I said while it was pending in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GROUT. But it was not this bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The principle is just the same. It may not be in identical terms the same bill, but the purpose is the same.

Now gentlemen inveigh against the growth of "corporate power" and the conferring of powers upon corporations as a rule; and we talk sometimes upon the stump about "monopoly." But here is a bill which says the companies which shall be permitted to do business under its provisions shall have a capital stock of $1,000,000; and its terms are such that nobody and no combination of men with less capital shall touch one of the classes of business that the bill seeks to cover. There is a monopoly created by the American Congress, conferring on a corporation by name almost unlimited powers, and excluding everybody else from the management of the business thus created and controlled by it, and absolutely fixing the sum necessary to enable them to enter into the business at $1,000,000.

This is the bill which we are asked to accept; and yet we sometimes talk of not being in favor of corporate monopolies. Corporations as a rule are not monopolies; but here is one which is a distinct and exclusive monopoly, and is so intended, for it names the parties or the character of business, and the amount of money which shall be necessary to enter into it, and provides that nobody else can transact any of these forms of business who have not the amount of capital provided by the bill. It is a decided innovation in legislation of this character.

I am told that in some of the States of the Union this provision works well. Doubtless in organized States, where the people are permanent and are not migratory, and is largely the case, and necessarily so, in this city, it may be well enough; but I protest against the principle which confers by legislative enactment upon a corporation power to become a private corporation for all of the agencies herein specified and excludes everybody else.

I say to you gentlemen who record your votes in favor of this proposition that you never have marched up to such an extent to monopoly as is involved in this proposition. If you vote for it—and I care not whether it passes or not; I simply lift my voice against it—but when it is passed; when you have done the work; when you have voted for it, do not go home and tell your people that you are opposed to monopolies such as this, for here is one that is more exclusive than any other corporation on the whole face of the continent. The Standard Oil Company is often referred to as such an organization; but in the same State of its creation any other persons can become a corporation for the same purposes. But this is not only a corporation for any one of the purposes named, but it excludes everybody else from the benefits which the bill seeks to confer, and monopolizes that business here in the hands of the few who can raise the amount of money necessary.

That is all, Mr. Speaker, I have to say. It is not easy for gentlemen to try to explain away the objections to this measure by showing how it may operate elsewhere. I am not advised that in any State organizations the minimum sum of $1,000,000 has been placed in the acts of incorporation. But every one of them is simply the outgrowth of a tendency to corporate monopoly, and here is one of the most aggressive and most exclusive that could possibly be framed by any legislation.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me ask the gentleman this question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BINGHAM. I wish to ask if there is anything in the bill that excludes the individual from any of the ordinary acts in reference to estates, guardians, administratorship, or anything else. Does it not only enlarge the field, so to speak, so they can have their choice in selecting managers for estates, or to wind up estates, and in its large capital make safe and secure the management of the large estates now common in this District?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not time to answer the gentleman's question at length, but the answer is very simple. It is, that when you have once created in a District like this a power like that, the courts will be controlled instantly by such an aggregation of capital.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is a very poor compliment to the courts.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be informed when I have occupied three minutes. The gentleman from Ohio speaks of a corporation. This bill does not incorporate any body of men. The title of the bill explains its purpose. It is an act to provide further and additional purposes for which corporations may be formed in the District of Columbia. That is all this bill does. The bill does not confine it to one act of voluntary incorporation. As many different organizations may be formed as there are people with money to invest to organize them, and there probably will be half a dozen organizations as soon as they can be effected under this law, when it is once passed. The difficulty with the general incorporation law is that it does not extend to corporations of this kind. It relates to institutions of learning, to benevolent and educational societies, to manufacturing, agricultural, mining, mechanical, insurance, mercantile, transportation, and market purposes, and railroad purposes.

It does not include this particular feature. This is simply an extension of the general law. There is no monopoly, as I have said, because when twenty-five persons see fit to put their capital together and embark in this business they have a right under the bill to do it, provided they comply with these stringent provisions for the protection of the people and the rights of those who trust their estates with them. Under those provisions they have a perfect right, I say, to organize.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I understand this bill confers upon this corporation the right to act as trustee or as guardian.

Mr. GROUT. Not of the person, but of the estate.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. And also as the depository of the guardian's money.

Mr. GROUT. Yes.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Now, is there any provision fixing the rate of interest this corporation will be compelled to pay the guardian or the heirs for the use of the money?

Mr. GROUT. That is a matter of arrangement between the corporation and the guardian, just as it would be if he loaned the money to a bank or to an individual. That is not controlled by this bill. I do not see how it could be well or wisely controlled. It would have to be left to negotiation.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I want to ask another question. As I heard the provisions of this bill read, I desire to know from the gentleman if it is not on all fours with the similar incorporation law of the State of New York.

Mr. GROUT. It is, and also with the law of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. Especially the Pennsylvania law.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And those institutions in New York are about the most secure that I know of.

Mr. GROUT. This is on all fours with that law, and on account of this being in the District of Columbia we put it under the control of the Comptroller of the Currency, whose inspection and supervision is just the same as that over national banks. He may seize an institution that is going wrong and wind it up at any time. The courts may also appoint additional persons to visit and examine the accounts of these concerns whenever application is made by any person having any interest. The law is not that spoken of by Judge Cartter. That was a loosely drawn bill that was introduced two or three years since. Nor is the action of the Bar Association of January 15 applicable to this bill, for it was not reported until the 28th of April. It was the result of much work by the subcommittee who had it in charge, and who labored to make it perfect and complete so that it should protect everybody's rights and at the same time should grant, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] intimated in his inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], the privilege of persons to choose whether they will have a private administrator appointed or whether they will authorize this corporation to act as trustee.

Mr. BERGEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROUT. I can not yield, for I must save the time for the other side. Ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] when he has the floor.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has six minutes yet.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I should prefer to follow the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, while I accept the technical statement of the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. GROUT] that this bill is somewhat different from the one to which so strong objection has been made by the court and by the bar of this city, yet the salient points in this bill are the salient points in that bill. Technically he is right; practically he is wrong. Now, my objection, in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Ohio, is that the bill is sought for simply by a few rich men in this city who wish to monopolize all the business they can get under the guise of a trust company. Why, there is a larger and a brainier and a more persistent lobby, and always has been, in favor of this bill than any bill that I know of coming from the District of Columbia. Here you have the bar and the courts on the one side, as shown by the gentleman from Ohio, and these few men who simply want to make dollars on the other side. Now what do they ask? They ask you to give to them absolutely unlimited powers. The bill says that they may incorporate and do—

First. A safe deposit, trust, loan, and mortgage business.

Second. A title insurance, loan, and mortgage business.

Third. A security, guaranty, indemnity, loan, and mortgage business.

There is no limitation there. They may conduct any business that they choose. You will find in section 5 also that—

Fifth. When organized under subdivision 1 of the first section of this act to accept and execute trusts of any and every description which may be committed or transferred to them.

There is absolutely, so far as I have been able to read the bill, no limitation as to the scope, degree, and character of the business, the amount of capital, or the perpetuity of the corporation.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to another defect in the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Please excuse me just now. So that we are to-day asked, with only thirty minutes for debate, to pass a bill that the House has never considered; a bill creating corporations of the most dangerous and the most powerful character that can be imagined, and these corporations situated, too, at the Capital of the Union. You are to have these trust companies with one million, five or ten millions, or whatever sum they please, in capital, and when one has thoroughly organized itself it can take in trust properties of all characters from anywhere.

It may take the interest in legislation of a railway company, and appear on the floor of this House as the attorney for any villainy in legislation that any railway company may wish, the Union Pacific robbery bill, for instance; and that is exactly what will come. It may take all the claim business of all the States in the Union. There is nothing in legislation that any man in the world may want done that he may not call upon one of these companies to do. In the mean time they will have grown in their social influence, their political influence in Congress, their relations to and corrupting and unbridled influence in the Departments, and then we all know how dangerous they will become. Why, there is one law firm in this town that to-day wields more power in legislation in the Departments and Congress than any five thousand other people in the town.

Suppose you have one of these great corporations standing here with all its power, with all varieties of trusts and claims, strong, rich, brainy, and, as a matter of course, audacious and unscrupulous, for who ever knew of a corporation having scruples where it was carrying on some interest or claim of its own? Gentlemen, my opposition to this bill is because I believe it to be the beginning of a class of national legislation the most dangerous of any concerning corporations that has ever been proposed. I sincerely believe, if this bill becomes a law, that thirty years from this time there will be more corruption in American legislation, there will be more danger to American institutions in Washington, than ever; and it will become a stench in the nostrils of the community. That is why I oppose the bill.

I have always on this floor sought to resist the aggressions of corporations, and the claim has always been made that you need a corporation for the purpose of doing something which individuals can not do. We need this in order to build a railroad which a few individuals can not do; but in this case an individual can do all the business. Individuals have always done it in this country. You have partnerships and firms which handle claims and deposits; but you propose now to inaugurate a new line, a new era, a new consolidation of business, and to throw a great aggregation of power and capital and political and lobby influence into the hands of the few men in these trust corporations when there is no necessity for it; when the courts of the District beg you not to do it; when the bar begs you not to do it, and when nobody asks for it but a few men who want to make more money than they are now making.

Now, that is the exact status of this case. If we had time to go into the details of this bill I am satisfied there are many gentlemen upon this floor who would propose amendments. The bill never would go out of the House as it comes into it; but it is to be put through in a short time under the spur simply because the lobby wants it, and for the plausible reasons that have been suggested and will be, when there is no public necessity for it, and when none of the great people in America, no voters in America, are asking for it with all its dangerous consequences.

I reserve the balance of my time. How much have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eight minutes yet remaining.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes if he desires it.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I simply want to ask you a question, and that is whether this bill does not propose to incorporate companies under perpetual charters without any limitation on the area in which they can carry on their business?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It is absolutely unlimited.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. And gives them a perpetual charter to carry on business?

Mr. GROSVENOR. And not only that, but by the decision of the court of the District of Columbia it can be made the receiver of a railroad in Florida or in Maine, and can bring such a road's business from Maine or from Ohio into the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas is still entitled to the floor.

Mr. GROUT. I would like to answer the question of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the statement of the gentleman from Ohio is true we ought to defeat this bill.

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the question that was asked by the gentleman from New Jersey with reference to the time that the charter was to run?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this is not to come out of our time. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROUT. The Senate provides that it shall be limited to fifty years.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Then the provision of the House bill is changed.

Mr. GROUT. It is changed in that respect, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOPKINS. What has the gentleman to say as to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. This is not to come out of our time.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. There is no limitation contained in this bill here.

Mr. GROUT. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, and we thought there should not be any put in.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. You would let them go all over the United States?

Mr. GROUT. I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey—

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to six minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But there has been a colloquy going on on the question, and it has not been my fault if gentlemen have occupied the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has been participating in it.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman can charge it to me.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I would have liked the gentleman from South Carolina to have discussed the operation of this bill before I had the concluding speech, but I will not make any complaint about that. I understand, and I have to take the statement from the gentleman for it, that this Pennsylvania law, which it is cited as working well, and I do not presume to say it does not, has no limit as to the amount of capital stock, and that the requirement and the nature of the security has to be fixed by the court. That is a different provision from this one.

Now I want members of this House to understand that they are voting—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio will suspend until order is secured.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not want to lose any of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will please take their seats and cease conversation.

I want gentlemen to understand that they are about to vote for a bill that may put their own estates, although they may live out on the Pacific Slope, into the hands of some favored corporation here in the District of Columbia, to be administered; and the insolvent railroads and other like corporation of the sovereign Gulf States may be brought into the District of Columbia and put into the grasp of a monopoly. I use the word knowingly and intelligently. What is a monopoly? A monopoly is an organization created by law, whether by naming the incorporators or by fixing the terms of the incorporation, which excludes the average majority of persons from participating in it. Now, I say that a bill which excludes everybody that can not raise a million of dollars is a monopoly of the worst character. What is this bill? It is a bill to bring within the jurisdiction of the courts of the District of Columbia every insolvent estate, every dead man's estate, every guardian's trust on the continent of America, and to build up here in the city of Washington a great legalized monopoly of the law business of the United States. It is a bill to impoverish the estates that are compelled to come here for adjudication and settlement.

If the gentlemen favoring this bill would put the capital stock at a quarter million dollars that would still be five times greater than any guardianship bond ordinarily given in the District of Columbia, but it would permit other people to come into this line of business and would thereby lessen the tendency to monopoly. But while they stand upon the capital of a million, or half a million, or three hundred thousand dollars, I protest against the bill upon that ground if upon no other.

The bill is an innovation upon the settled principles of legal procedure in this country, dangerous in its nature, and certain to be deleterious to the best interests of the people in its administration. It is putting the grasp of a great central corporation upon certain classes of the business of the country and excluding everybody else from participation in that business.

I protest, Mr. Speaker, that this bill ought to be brought down to the terms of the Pennsylvania statute in any event, or to the terms of the New York statute. It is a great mistake to say that the New York statute is not limited territorially in its operation. But here is a measure which, like the high-priesthood of Melchizedek, is without "beginning of days or end of life." It has no limitation in geographical operation, and it has no limitation to its life. It is a perpetual succession, with perpetual power to draw into its maw all the estates of the surrounding country.

Mr. Speaker, at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to this bill.

EXTENSION OF THE DAY'S SESSION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask unanimous consent that the session of to-day be extended from 5 o'clock until 6 o'clock p. m., as there is a possibility of the presentation of an important conference report.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

TRUST, LOAN, AND OTHER CORPORATIONS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I have been very much astonished at the criticism that has been passed upon this bill, and I am satisfied that the gentlemen who have criticised it have done so because of a misapprehension of its provisions. I am convinced that there has never been presented to any legislative assembly a bill more properly and securely guarded than this measure is, and instead of its being an innovation such as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has described in eloquent terms, it is simply following out the law that is in operation in more than one-half the States of this Union. We all know that the time has gone by when large estates can be handled by an executor or administrator in his own person.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can not yield now because I have so little time. Otherwise I should be glad to hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. HOOKER. Why can not an individual administer an estate as well now as heretofore?

Mr. HEMPHILL. For the reason that he can not give the security that is required to administer upon a large estate amounting to a million or two million dollars. There have been instances in this District and in several of the States of this Union where gentlemen of large possessions have had to go into other States and there appoint some of these corporations their executor or trustees to administer upon their estates.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this matter of administering upon estates is not put by this bill into the hands of this corporation. The bill expressly provides that the corporation is not to be appointed as administrator unless the other persons who, under the existing law, now have the right to administer are unable to do so.

The matter is absolutely under the control of this statute as it stands to-day, and this bill simply provides that if the widow, or the children, or the creditors do not come in and administer, then the court may appoint one of these corporations to act as administrator. But it will be observed that the court can not appoint the corporation administrator of any estate unless the other parties who have now under the law the right to administer refuse to do so or are unable to do so. Therefore it is simply making an addition of another person who will have the right to administer when the necessity arises.

Now, something has been said about this being a great monopoly. The bill, which was read in the presence of the House, provides that any twenty-five persons anywhere in this District shall have the right to form a corporation of this character; and there can not be a monopoly when the privilege of organizing companies of this character is thus extended impartially to all persons. It is provided that any corporation, when organized, shall deposit one-fourth of the amount of its capital with the Comptroller of the Currency as security for the faithful execution of the trusts committed to it. In addition to that, the capital stock of the company is absolutely liable for any default whatever. If the assets of an estate are stolen the company must make up the loss, no matter under what circumstances the robbery may have occurred. If the company has in its charge property which is burned up it must refund the value, no matter whether the fire occurs by the negligence of the company or not. In addition to this, the stockholders are liable in an amount equal to the capital which they pay into the company, so that each stockholder is responsible not only for the money he puts into the corporation, but for 100 per cent. besides. It is also provided that there shall be constant supervision of these corporations; the court at any time it sees fit may call upon them for additional security.

Unless we are going to deny to the people of this District that which is granted by legislation in more than half of the States of this Union to their citizens, there can be no objection to this bill. In Ohio they have now such a law, as they have in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Georgia, Louisiana, Illinois, etc.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no such law as this in Ohio.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no such law, because they do not have so good a one. I have examined the statutes of the different States; the gentleman from Ohio has not done so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In Ohio the operation of our corporations is limited to the State.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir. If I choose to appoint a corporation of the State of Ohio as executor of my estate, I have a right to do so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But a court can not do it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And a court can not do it under this bill. No court under the sun can appoint a man an executor outside of the State. If that is the thing which is troubling the gentleman I wish to say that so far as I am concerned I have no objection to an amendment providing that a court in Maryland, or South Carolina, or Virginia or any other State shall not appoint one of these corporations in this District an executor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is not my point. I want you to agree that a court of the District of Columbia shall not appoint a receiver or guardian upon an estate in Florida or Ohio.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Why, of course, Mr. Speaker, everybody ought to know that a court in the District of Columbia can have no charge of property in Florida or South Carolina; and it can not appoint anybody to administer such property.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is what this bill undertakes to do.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We can not do it by any act under the sun.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 of section 1, after the word "on," insert "in the District of Columbia;" so as to read "any number of natural persons, not less than twenty-five, may associate themselves together to form a corporation for the purpose of carrying on in the District of Columbia any one of the three classes of business," etc.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We do not object to that.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as adopted.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCORMICK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 7 add the following:

"That any corporation formed under the provisions of this act, when acting as trustee, shall be liable to account for the amounts actually earned by the moneys held by it in trust, in addition to the principal so held; but such corporation may be allowed a reasonable compensation for services performed in the care of the trust estate."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection to that. That is the law already.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to offer an amendment. I have framed it with reference to the text of the House bill, for I can not get a copy of the Senate bill; but I think it will be intelligible.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 16, page 2, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$350,000."

Mr. GROSVENOR. This merely changes the amount of capital from one million to a quarter of a million dollars; that is to say, a quarter of a million dollars is the minimum; the stockholders may increase it as they see fit.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The difficulty about that is that it may lead to the formation of a number of very small companies. This bill, as the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Ohio have stated, confers very large powers upon these corporations; and it is a dangerous thing to give to a corporation with only $250,000 capital the powers here granted. I wish to say that there are already three companies of this character in operation in this District, and I know of one more ready to go into operation, so that there will be at least four, and probably five or six, of these companies. There is no danger of there being a monopoly.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether in any of the States of this Union there is a law providing that there must be a capital of $1,000,000 before the company shall be authorized to transact business.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I can not say about that.

Mr. BAKER. I can answer the gentleman—

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. There is no such law.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then, if you knew, you need not have asked me.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate has expired, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I now offer the amendment I send to the desk, to be added to section 34.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the courts of the District of Columbia shall not have power to appoint any trustee, trustees, guardians, receivers, or other trustees of a fund or property located outside of the District of Columbia, or belonging to a corporation or person having a legal residence or location outside of said District.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That will come in at the end of the thirty-fourth section and will make the law just what the gentleman from South Carolina says it is now.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BAKER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 11, line 1, after the word "company," insert the words "surety or guaranty company."

Mr. GROUT. That is already provided for in section 2.

Mr. BAKER. I think not. It is certainly not provided for in this section.

Mr. GROUT. But if the gentleman wants it in again I have no objection.

Mr. BAKER. It is not in the bill now.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. MOREY. I offer an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the first section, after the words "natural persons," insert the words "citizens of the United States."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. MOREY. I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1 strike out "one million" and insert "five hundred thousand."

The amendment was rejected.

The question being taken upon ordering the bill as amended to be read a third time, on a division there were—ayes 84, noes 66.

The bill was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us first take the vote by a division.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Very well; I withdraw the demand. The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 86, noes 66.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 91, nays 84, not voting 150; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following pairs were announced:

Until farther notice:

Mr. DE HAVEN with Mr. BIGGS.

Mr. BELDEN with Mr. FLOWER.

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana, with Mr. JASON B. BROWN.

Mr. CONNELL with Mr. ALDERSON.

Mr. PETERS with Mr. MANSUR.

Mr. YARDLEY with Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. GEISENHAINER.

Mr. THOMAS M. BROWNE with Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. WILSON, of Kentucky, with Mr. PAYNTER.

Mr. EWART with Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY with Mr. CANDLER, of Georgia.

Mr. BOWDEN with Mr. MCRAE.

Mr. BLISS with Mr. CHIPMAN.

Mr. MCCORD with Mr. FITHIAN.

Mr. COOPER, of Ohio, with Mr. WILSON, of Missouri.

Mr. MCKENNA with Mr. CLUNIE.

Mr. FRANK with Mr. BLAND.

Mr. BROWER with Mr. MCCLAMMY, for this day.

Mr. MUDD with Mr. ABBOTT, for the rest of the day.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado, with Mr. TARSNEY, for the rest of the day.

Mr. FUNSTON with Mr. COBB, for the rest of the day.

Mr. HERMANN with Mr. LANHAM, for the rest of the day.

Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia, with Mr. WHITING, on this vote.

Mr. MCCOMAS with Mr. O'FERRALL, on this vote.

Mr. ENLOE. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HOUK.

Mr. MCCORD. I also withdraw my vote, being paired.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent that a conference be ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas objects.

The bill (H. R. 9795) on the same subject was laid on the table.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Regular order.

SHERMAN AND NORTHWEST RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 4309) granting right of way to the Sherman and Northwest Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the House that that bill contains all the provisions that have been incorporated by the House in bills of like character, and I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, whether this bill does not confer in terms the ownership of the road upon this corporation.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not remember as to that particular, but if it does I am willing that the words should be stricken out and that the bill should be amended in that respect.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let the bill be amended in that regard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move to amend by striking out the word "own" or "owning" wherever it occurs. I object to the idea of giving ownership of this road to this corporation by act of Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "own" or "owning" wherever they occur in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The House bill of similar import was ordered to lie on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 5) for the relief of Bessie S. Gilmore;

A bill (S. 2781) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3257) granting a pension to Mary Crook, widow of George Crook, late a major-general in the United States Army;

A bill (S. 3711) granting a pension to Ellen M. McClellan;

A bill (S. 4233) granting a pension to Jessie Benton Frémont;

A bill (S. 4375) to provide an American register for the steamship G. W. Jones, of New York;

A bill (H. R. 2174) to remove charges of desertion from Ellery C. Folger;

A bill (H. R. 8247) to authorize entry of the public lands by incorporated cities and towns for cemetery and park purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 8943) to provide for the establishing of a port of delivery at Peoria, Ill.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report. I present the report of the committee of conference of the House and Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon House bill 9416, and I ask that the report and statement accompanying the report, made by the House conferees, may be printed in the RECORD. I also ask unanimous consent that 500 copies of the bill, showing the changes recommended by the conferees, may be printed for the use of the House, to be delivered to-morrow morning.

A MEMBER. Make it 1,000.

Several MEMBERS. Make it 5,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. We do not want as many copies as that printed until the bill is passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] asks unanimous consent that the report and the statement of the conferees be printed in the RECORD—without reading?

Mr. MCKINLEY. Without reading, unless the reading is demanded.

The SPEAKER (continuing). And that 500 copies, showing the changes suggested by the conferees, be printed for the use of the House, for delivery in the morning.

Mr. MCADOO. I hope there will be 5,000 copies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, before this is agreed to—

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be 5,000 copies printed.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio is, that 500 copies be printed for delivery to-morrow morning. If the House desires more copies, that can be arranged.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is not to that branch of it that I propose to address myself. I wish to reserve the privilege of objecting. I do not wish to be forced to insist upon my right to object, but I wish to know, before the reading is dispensed with and the other steps are taken, what course the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] desires to take as to commencing the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I wish to give notice that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I shall call up this report for consideration and final disposition.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the gentleman from Ohio will not insist on that. The conferees did not agree on most of the controverted matters until late yesterday afternoon, and upon some of them not until to-day. The members of the House have never read the conference report. When this bill that it is asked to have printed is reported its intricacies can be observed. I state now, and an inspection of the bill will verify the statement, that it can not be properly studied within the time which is indicated by the gentleman from Ohio.

It is utterly impossible to make a calm or thorough investigation within the time he has indicated, and I hope he will consent that it may be taken up Monday morning. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Republican side.] There is no disposition on this side of the House to improperly delay it, but it is an exceedingly important measure and I trust that that course will be taken. The petition I make is in behalf of those of us who have found it impossible, in the limited time since the conferees have agreed, to prepare the kind of a statement which ought to be made concerning the effects of the bill.

Mr. McKINLEY. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman that the bill, which I have asked unanimous consent to have printed, will show in the most striking way all the changes that are recommended by the conference committee. Wherever a paragraph has been amended, the changes will appear in the bill in small caps, showing the exact phraseology that is reported and recommended by the committee of conference. I want to say further that as to the main features of this bill the points of disagreement between the House and the Senate have been perfectly well understood for weeks and are perfectly well known, and the subjects of all our differences are well known. Gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber are impatient to get home; and I must insist, Mr. Speaker, that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, we commence the consideration of this report.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then, Mr. Speaker, if it is decreed that we must proceed to the consideration of it to-morrow afternoon, in order that those of us who have not seen the statement and have not had access to it can know what it is, I shall insist upon the reading, but not with a view to punishing the House. To printing the conference report in the RECORD I have no objection. I think that the report and statement should be printed in the RECORD. I believe they ought to be so printed because that is one means the House has of becoming familiar with the proposed changes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Ohio give his attention? The Chair would like to know what the House has agreed to.

Mr. McKINLEY. I move to dispense with the reading of the report, and have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe, under the rules, that can not be done except by unanimous consent; and if this is to be proceeded with without consideration, I shall object. I demand the reading of the report.

Mr. McKINLEY. I suggest, then, that we proceed with the reading of the report, and if it is not finished at 6 o'clock, when I am told a recess has been ordered, we then take the recess and conclude the reading to-morrow morning.

Mr. McMILLIN. I object to anything except the regular order, as the gentleman insists upon proceeding to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the conference report is to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McMILLIN. That, Mr. Speaker, is agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio, with the exception of that portion relating to dispensing with the reading of the conference report, and the Clerk will proceed to read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report of the committee of conference, which is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9416) to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 57, 58, 63, 85, 93, 93, 101, 104, 106, 108, 109, 132, 161, 164, 170, 191, 192, 193, 217, 218, 251, 293, 294, 295, 306, 322, 324, 335, 338, 348, 350, 351, 355, 357, 360, 381, 382, 385, 393, 397, 418, 421, 443, 444, 449, 481, 482, 493, 494, 497, 497.

"SEC. 28. That section 3381 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all after the said number and substituting therefor the following:

"Every peddler of tobacco, before commencing, or, if he has already commenced, before continuing to peddle tobacco, shall furnish to the collector of his district a statement accurately setting forth the place of his residence, and, if in a city, the street and number of the street where he resides, the State or States through which he proposes to travel; also whether he proposes to sell his own manufactures or the manufactures of others, and, if he sells for other parties, the person for whom he sells. He shall also give a bond in the sum of $500, to be approved by the collector of the district, conditioned that he shall not engage in any attempt, by himself or by collusion with others, to defraud the Government of any tax on tobacco, snuff, or cigars; that he shall neither sell nor offer for sale any tobacco, snuff, or cigars, except in original and full packages, as the law requires the same to be put up and prepared by the manufacturer for sale, or for removal for sale or consumption, and except such packages of tobacco, snuff, and cigars as bear the manufacturer's label or caution notice, and his legal marks and brands, and genuine internal-revenue stamps which have never before been used."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 447: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 447, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 29. That section 3383, Revised Statutes, as amended by section 15 of the act of March 1, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all of said section and by substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"Every peddler of tobacco shall obtain a certificate from the collector of his collection district, who is hereby authorized and directed to issue the same, giving the name of the peddler, his residence, and the fact of his having filed the required bond; and shall on demand of any officer of internal revenue produce and exhibit his certificate. And whenever any peddler refuses to exhibit his certificate, as aforesaid, on demand of any officer of internal revenue, said officer may seize the horse or mule, wagon and contents, or pack, bundle, or basket, of any person so refusing; and the collector of the district in which the seizure occurs may, on ten days' notice, published in any newspaper in the district, or served personally on the peddler, or at his dwelling house, require such peddler to show cause, if any he has, why the horse or mules, wagons and contents, pack, bundle, or basket so seized shall not be forfeited. In case no sufficient cause is shown, proceedings for the forfeiture of the property seized shall be taken under the general provisions of the internal-revenue laws relating to forfeitures. Any internal-revenue agent may demand production of and inspect the collector's certificate for peddlers, and refusal or failure to produce the same, when so demanded, shall subject the party guilty thereof to a fine of not more than $500 and to imprisonment for not more than twelve months."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 448: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 448, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 30. That on and after the 1st day of January, 1891, the internal taxes on smoking and manufactured tobacco shall be 6 cents per pound, and on snuff 6 cents per pound."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 450: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 450, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 31. That section 3363, Revised Statutes, be, and hereby is, amended by striking out all after said number and substituting the following:

"No manufactured tobacco shall be sold or offered for sale unless put up in packages and stamped as prescribed in this chapter, except at retail by retail dealers from packages authorized by section 3362 of the Revised Statutes; and every person who sells or offers for sale any snuff or any kind of manufactured tobacco not so put up in packages and stamped shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 451: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 451, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 32. That section 3392 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by section 16 of the act of March 1, 1879, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"All cigars shall be packed in boxes not before used for that purpose, containing respectively 25, 50, 100, 200, 250, or 500 cigars each: Provided, however, That manufacturers of cigars shall be permitted to pack in boxes not before used for that purpose cigars not to exceed 13 nor less than 12 in number, to be used as sample boxes; and every person who sells, or offers for sale, or delivers, or offers to deliver, any cigars in any other form than in new boxes as above described, or who packs in any box any cigars in excess of or less than the number provided by law to be put in each box respectively, or who falsely brands any box, or affixes a stamp on any box denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for each offense not more than $1,000 and be imprisoned not more than two years: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as preventing the sale of cigars at retail by retail dealers, who have paid the special tax as such, from boxes packed, stamped, and branded in the manner prescribed by law: And provided further, That every manufacturer of cigarettes shall put up all the cigarettes that he manufactures or has manufactured for him, and sells or removes for consumption or use, in packages or parcels containing 10, 20, 50, or 100 cigarettes each, and shall securely affix to each of said packages or parcels a suitable stamp denoting the tax thereon, and shall properly cancel the same prior to such sale or removal for consumption or use, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe; and all cigarettes imported from a foreign country shall be packed, stamped, and the stamps canceled in like manner, in addition to the import stamp indicating inspection of the custom-house before they are withdrawn therefrom."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 452: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 452, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 33. That section 3357 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by section 2 of the act of June 9, 1890, be, and the same is, amended by striking out all after the number and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Every collector shall keep a record, in a book or books provided for that purpose, to be open to the inspection of only the proper officers of internal revenue, including deputy collectors and internal-revenue agents, of the name and residence of every person engaged in the manufacture of tobacco or snuff in his district, the place where such manufacture is carried on, and the number of the manufactory; and he shall enter in said record, under the name of each manufacturer, a copy of every inventory required by law to be made by such manufacturer, and an abstract of his monthly returns; and he shall cause the several manufactories of tobacco or snuff in his district to be numbered consecutively, which numbers shall not be thereafter changed, except for reasons satisfactory to himself and approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 453: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 453, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 34. That section 3399 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by section 16 of the act of March 1, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Every collector shall keep a record, in a book provided for that purpose, to be open to the inspection of only the proper officers of internal revenue, including deputy collectors and internal-revenue agents, of the name and residence of every person engaged in the manufacture of cigars in his district, the place where such manufacture is carried on, and the number of the manufactory; and he shall enter in said record, under the name of each manufacturer, an abstract of his inventory and monthly returns; and he shall cause the several manufactories of cigars in the district to be numbered consecutively, which number shall not thereafter be changed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 455: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 455, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 35. That section 3387 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by section 16 of the act of March 1, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking from the said section the following words, namely, '$500, with an additional $100 for each person proposed to be employed by him in making cigars,' and inserting in lieu of the words so stricken out the words 'one hundred dollars.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 480: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 480, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 42. That any producer of pure sweet wines, who is also a distiller, authorized to separate from fermented grape-juice, under internal-revenue laws, wine spirits, may use, free of tax, in the preparation of such sweet wines, under such regulations and after the filing of such notices and bonds, together with the keeping of such records and the rendition of such reports as to materials and products, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, so much of such wine spirits so separated by him as may be necessary to fortify the wine for the preservation of the saccharine matter contained therein: Provided, That the wine spirits so used free of tax shall not be in excess of the amount required to introduce into such sweet wines an alcoholic strength equal to 14 per cent. of the volume of such wines after such use: Provided further, That such wine containing, after such fortification, more than 24 per cent. of alcohol, as defined by section 3249 of the Revised Statutes, shall be forfeited to the United States: Provided further, That such use of wine spirits free from tax shall be confined to the months of August, September, October, November, December, January, February, March, and April of each year. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in determining the liability of any distiller of fermented grape-juice to assessment under section 3309 of the Revised Statutes, is authorized to allow such distiller credit in his computation for the wine spirits used by him in preparing sweet wine under the provisions of this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.
Amendment numbered 435: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 483, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof as follows:

"Sec. 47. That all provisions of law relating to the reimportation of any goods of domestic growth or manufacture which were originally liable to an internal-revenue tax shall be, as far as applicable, enforced against any domestic wines sought to be reimported; and duty shall be levied and collected upon the same when reimported as an original importation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 436: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 486, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof as follows:

"Sec. 48. That any person using wine spirits or other spirits which have not been tax-paid in fortifying wine, otherwise than as provided for in this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished for each offense by a fine of not more than $2,000, and for every offense other than the first also by imprisonment for not more than one year."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 491: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 491, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof as follows:

"Provided, That any imported merchandise deposited in bond in any public or private bonded warehouse, having been so deposited prior to the 1st day of October, 1890, may be withdrawn for consumption at any time prior to February 1, 1891, upon the payment of duties at the rates in force prior to the passage of this act: Provided further, That when duties are based upon the weight of merchandise deposited in any public or private bonded warehouse said duties shall be levied and collected upon the weight of such merchandise at the time of its withdrawal."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 494: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 494, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof as follows:

"Sec. 52. That the value of foreign coin as expressed in the money of account of the United States shall be that of the pure metal of such coin of standard value; and the values of the standard coins in circulation of the various nations of the world shall be estimated quarterly by the Director of the Mint, and be proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury immediately after the passage of this act, and thereafter quarterly on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 495: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 495, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add to section 33, at the end, the following:

"And it shall be the duty of special-tax payers to render their returns to the deputy collector at such times within the calendar month in which the special-tax liability commenced as shall enable him to receive such returns, duly signed and verified, not later than the last day of the month, except in cases of sickness or absence, as provided for in section 3176 of the Revised Statutes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The statement of the conferees is as follows:

In presenting their report on House bill 9416, the conferees on the part of the House submit the following statement intended to explain their action in the conference committee:

When passed by the House the bill provided for an estimated reduction of $71,000,000 in round numbers, of which about $10,500,000 was from internal-revenue taxes. As passed by the Senate the estimated reduction was $60,000,000 exclusive of the internal-revenue provisions of the House bill. There was no material difference in the estimated reduction between the House and Senate when the bill was referred to the conference committee so far as the tariff schedules are concerned, and your committee believe that this difference has not been materially affected by the action of the conferees.

In the chemical schedules the differences were numerous, most of them, however, being verbal, and where substantial were not important.

In the earthenware schedule the House rates on china and earthen ware were retained. In the glassware paragraphs the House classifications have been retained in the main. A few changes were made by the conference in the paragraphs on bottles, intended to give greater clearness to the phraseology and to guard the interests of the Government. On window-glass the Senate reduced the House rates, and a compromise was effected by adjusting rates between those of the two Houses, which are an advance on those of the Senate and a slight deduction on those of the House. In the higher grades of glassware the rates of the House were compound. These were changed by the conference and ad valorem rates substituted, and a uniform rate of 60 per cent. adopted.

In the metal schedule a number of changes were made by the Senate, some of which were believed to be too low to afford proper protection to the great industries to be affected. The amendments made by the Senate and the adjustment by the conference committee are fully set forth in the print of the bill which accompanies the conference report, and which shows the action of the two Houses and the action of the conferees, respectively. Several additional classifications have been made in the paragraphs relating to steel plates, sheets, and billets, these changes being confined to the lowest grades of steel, the rates of the House on the higher grades being retained. The House rate on railway bars of six-tenths of 1 cent per pound, or $13.44 per ton, has been retained. The Senate rate of one-half of 1 cent per pound on copper has been accepted by the conferees.

The changes in the wood schedule are not material.

In the agricultural schedule the House rates are mainly retained. Garden seeds have been reduced from 40 per cent., as proposed by the House, to 20 per cent., the rate substituted by the Senate, and turnip seed, which the Senate placed on the free-list, transferred to the dutiable-list. The paragraph on fish was reconstructed and the rate reduced from 1 cent per pound, as fixed by the House, to three-fourths of 1 cent per pound. Oranges, lemons, and limes, which the House made dutiable at double the present rates in order to afford protection and encouragement to the planters of California and Florida, the Senate reduced to rates somewhat above the present law. The House conferees yielded reluctantly to this reduction. An amendment was added to that of the Senate imposing an additional duty of 30 per cent. on the packages in which oranges, lemons, and limes are imported. The paragraphs inserted by the Senate imposing a discriminating duty of 10 per cent. on tea, the produce of countries east of the Cape of Good Hope, when imported from countries east of the Cape of Good Hope, were struck out.

In the liquor schedule the Senate made increases on the various forms of wines and liquors. The House rates were restored except on champagne and spirits, leaving still-wines and malt liquors at the existing rates of duty. A few verbal changes were made in this schedule for the purpose of insuring additional security to the revenue.

In the cotton schedule but few changes were made in the amendments of the Senate, all of which will appear in the bill herewith presented.

The Senate made several reductions in the flax schedule which the House conferees believed to be dangerous to the success of that industry. The House conferees were not able to maintain the House rates in all cases, but those agreed to are increases on those of the Senate. The Senate placed binding-twine on the free-list. After a long conference the rates agreed to were seven-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

The wool schedule was not materially amended by the Senate. Two of the three substantial amendments related to worsted yarns and cloths and were more in the nature of corrections of errors than a change in rates.

The Senate struck out the bounty provisions proposed in the silk schedule of the bill as passed by the House. Other amendments which restore the language and rates of the present law were made. In these your committee concurred.

In the paper schedule the changes made are not material, and relate to classification rather than to rates.

A number of changes have been made in the sundries schedule, but with one exception these are of such character as not to require special mention. The one exception is that relating to paintings and statuary, which the House placed on the free-list and which the Senate restored to the dutiable-list at 30 per cent. ad valorem. The conferees, after an earnest contention, decided to retain paintings and statuary on the dutiable-list at 15 per cent. ad valorem, which is one-half the present duty.

In the sugar schedule the Senate struck out the House provision making sugar up to and including No. 16 Dutch standard free of duty, and substituted No. 13 as the line of free sugar. The Senate made sugar above 13 to 16 dutiable at three-tenths of a cent a pound, and above 16 Dutch standard dutiable at six-tenths of a cent a pound. The House bill made sugar dutiable at four-tenths of a cent a pound. The House conferees maintained No. 16 as the line for free sugar above No. 16, and the Senate conferees receded.

The conferees agreed and recommend to their respective Houses that sugar above No. 16 Dutch standard shall be dutiable at five-tenths of a cent a pound, and an additional one-tenth of a cent a pound upon all sugars imported from countries which pay an export bounty on sugar above No. 16 Dutch standard.

The House conferees agreed to the following amendment of the Senate:

"(401) Sec. 3. That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the 1st day of July, 1891, whenever and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the Government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw and unrefined, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which, in view of the free introduction of such sugar, he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the production of such country, for such time as he shall deem just, and in such case and during such suspension duties shall be levied, collected, and paid upon sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the product of or exported from such designated country, as follows, namely:

"All sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color shall pay duty on their polariscopic tests as follows, namely:

"All sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color, all tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscopic not above 75 degrees, seven-tenths of 1 cent per pound; and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree shown by the polariscopic test, two-hundredths of 1 cent per pound additional.

"All sugars above No. 13 Dutch standard in color shall be classified by the Dutch standard of color, and pay duty as follows, namely: All sugar above No. 13 and not above No. 16 Dutch standard of color, 1 cent per pound.

"All sugar above No. 16 and not above No. 20 Dutch standard of color, 1 cent per pound.

"All sugars above No. 20 Dutch standard of color, 2 cents per pound.

"Molasses testing above 56 degrees, 4 cents per gallon.

"Sugar drainings and sugar sweepings shall be subject to duty either as molasses or sugar, as the case may be, according to polariscopic test.

"On coffee, 3 cents per pound.

"On tea, 10 cents per pound.

"Hides, raw or unrefined, whether dry, salted, or pickled, Angora-goat skins, raw, without the wool, unmanufactured, asses' skins, raw or unmanufactured, and skins, except sheep-skins with the wool on, 1 cent per pound."

The Senate struck out all the provisions of the bill as passed by the House providing for the reduction of internal-revenue taxes and the abolition of the special taxes or annual license on dealers in tobacco, cigars, and peddlers of tobacco and cigars. The conference committee restored these provisions, and those reducing the tax on manufactured tobacco and snuff to 6 cents per pound instead of 4 cents as provided by the House bill. The paragraphs relating to the sale of tobacco grown by small farmers without being required to pay a special tax have been restored. By the restoration of these paragraphs nearly seven hundred thousand persons are relieved from the payment of the annoying special taxes which are now imposed by law. The reduction which will be made to the revenue by these changes in the internal-revenue laws will be over $6,000,000 on the basis of the receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and nearly $6,000,000 on the basis of the receipts for the preceding fiscal year.

For the year ending June 30, 1890, the receipts from special taxes on the class of persons to be relieved by the bill were $1,515,481; from taxes on tobacco, $15,325,482, and from snuff, $757,731. By the passage of the bill the reduction in revenue from tobacco would be $4,581,570, and from snuff $184,453, making from these two sources an aggregate of $4,766,023. Adding these figures to the reduction which would follow in the abolition of special taxes would make the total reduction in the internal-revenue receipts $5,281,254. The reduction by the customs schedules will probably be about $50,000,000, which would give an aggregate reduction by the bill of about $55,000,000.

During the reading of the report of the committee of conference, Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, said: Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to suspend the further reading of this report until to-morrow, if I can be recognized for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading until to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, if that is done I hope it will be agreeable to allow the report to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McMILLIN. That has already been ordered, and the statement with it. I believe that was the understanding, that the statement was also to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The reading is to be continued to-morrow morning.

Mr. McMILLIN. This does not interfere with the reading to-morrow. It is only the conference report, which has already been ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS. Will not the gentleman from Tennessee let the statement be read, and waive the balance of the reading?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will see about waiving to-morrow.

CORRECTION OF RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I desire, if I can get unanimous consent, to offer a joint resolution to correct an error in the river and harbor bill, and I ask to suspend the reading until it can be passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks five minutes more might be occupied in the reading, but without objection the resolution can be offered now, and then the reading can be resumed. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to suspend the reading long enough to enable him to present his resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 221) to correct an error in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved September 19, 1890.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved September 19, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the clause making appropriation for the improvement of Illinois River, Illinois, shall read: "Improving Illinois River, Illinois: Continuing improvement, $200,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THE TARIFF.

The reading of the conference report was resumed.

Mr. MCKINLEY (during the reading). I understand the completion of this reading will take about ten minutes. I ask unanimous consent that the session be continued ten minutes longer, to enable the Clerk to finish the reading.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the session be extended until the reading of the report is concluded. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rose, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of objecting, but as the Speaker has made the announcement I will not object.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires to object the Chair will entertain his objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rose for the purpose of objecting; but I do not desire to seem to be in a race with the Speaker, though the Speaker did not use any unusual haste in making the announcement.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I intended to object, and the reason I did not was because the gentleman from Tennessee rose to object, and as he is on the committee I did not object.

The SPEAKER. It has always been the custom of the House to take the statement of a member as to his purpose in rising. Objection is made.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I thought the gentleman from Tennessee wanted to hear the report read?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I want to hear it read to-morrow.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, you want to hear it to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the House is declared in recess until 8 o'clock, when the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] will please preside as Speaker pro tempore.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., Mr. PERKINS in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

CORRECTION.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I notice that in connection with the consideration of a bill on last Friday evening granting a pension to a Mr. Haley, I am made to say in the RECORD that I was in command at the time he was wounded. What I did say was, that I was stationed with the command. I was a staff officer, and of course could not have been in command. I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who desires to call up a bill, and who is obliged to leave the House on account of illness in his family.

MRS. ANN CARR.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the kindness of the House, and will occupy only a moment. The bill which I propose to call up has not been reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, but I can say to the House that I have the permission of the chairman, and also of such other members of the committee as I could reach, to make the motion which I now do make, that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8506) granting a pension to Ann Carr, and that the bill be put upon its passage.

This lady is old and blind, and is dependent on the charity of working people. Her husband was in the Army for four years. I do not claim that she is entitled to this pension because of her husband's disability, but, as I have said, he was in the service for four years, and she is now old and blind and dependent, and it seems to me that under such circumstances, she being entitled to a pension of $8 per month under the law, it would be a generous and a proper act to allow her at least $12. It has been done in other cases, and I ask that the bill be read with the amount fixed at $12.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of Ann Carr, of Vevay, Ind., widow of Patrick Carr, late a private in Company K, Second Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and late of Company C, Eighth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and grant her a pension of $12 per month during her widowhood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that we take up Senate bills, those upon the Calendar and also any others that have been reported but are not yet on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to make a suggestion. It is quite probable that this is the last evening that we shall have for the consideration of business of this character during the present session, and while there are not many members yet in the Hall, the Chair has quite a large list, many gentlemen having spoken for recognition, so that they will probably be present during this evening session.

The Chair therefore suggests that the bills be read, and that the reports be printed in the RECORD without being read. In this way the time of the House will not be consumed in the reading of the reports. The Chair suggests that this arrangement be made with the understanding that any gentleman shall be at liberty in the morning to move for the reconsideration of the vote upon any particular bill if he shall feel called upon to do so.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not think that would be entirely satisfactory, Mr. Speaker. It is not a businesslike way of proceeding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is extremely anxious to give every gentleman present this evening recognition to call up a bill if it is possible to do so, this being probably the last pension evening that we shall have during this session of Congress.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes; I hope to get one of those recognitions myself [laughter], but still I think it is more important that we should proceed here in a businesslike manner than that any member or members should be recognized several times to call up bills. I am willing to give up the recognition that I am entitled to rather than have it go to the country that we are doing business in a way that we would not be willing to have known.

The RECORD shows the manner in which we transact this business and we would not like the country to know that it was done in that way, but it might leak out [laughter], and hence I think I must object to such an arrangement. Where a report is very long, however, I will not insist upon its being read, and I do not know that I care about having the reports on these Senate bills read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that, while acting on the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas, every gentleman present can be accommodated this evening.

Mr. KILGORE. It is understood, however, that where reports are not read they shall be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the reports on these Senate bills will be printed in the RECORD, but unless a special request is made they will not be read.

JOHN W. CABLE.

The first Senate bill was the bill (S. 3375) granting a pension to John W. Cable.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of John William Cable, of Lawrence County, South Dakota, who served in the Ordnance Department as a soldier of the United States Army during the Mexican war, and by reason of that service is totally and permanently disabled, and that he be granted a pension of $24 per month instead of $8 per month, his present rating.

The report (by Mr. SCULL) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3375) granting a pension to John William Cable, have considered the same and beg leave to submit the following report:

Said bill is accompanied by Senate Report No. 1360. Your committee adopt the same as their report and return the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

[Senate Report No. 1360, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 3375, for the relief of John William Cable, have had the same under consideration and report as follows:

It appears from the evidence submitted to your committee that the pensioner, John W. Cable, entered the service of the United States on the 12th of May, 1846, having enlisted for five years; that he was an armorer and machinist by trade and was assigned to the Ordnance Department; that he was sent to the field with the Army in Mexico and there did gallant and effective service, at the battle of Monterrey and other battles, in charge of heavy mortars; that he served with General Taylor's command from the Rio Grande to Buena Vista; that, while he was so serving in the Army of the United States, in the month of April, 1847, at Black Fort, or Fort Confederation as it was afterwards called, while the pensioner was engaged in remounting some heavy cannon, he received an injury, to wit, a rupture, from the effects of which he has suffered more or less ever since; that on the 16th of May, 1847, he was honorably discharged from said service and received his certificate therefor, this discharge being the result of his own application; that afterwards he served the United States during the war of rebellion in his capacity as armorer, serving a part of the time in the State of Pennsylvania, and afterwards going to Fort Scott, Kansas. In this capacity he served for four years. He also had two sons who served in the Twelfth Kansas Volunteers.

The pensioner is now over seventy years of age; he is very poor and unable to perform any kind of labor; he has no income except the $8 per month allowed him as a service pension under the law relating to pensioning survivors of the Mexican war; he is in feeble health, his injury has greatly increased, and has no one who is legally bound for his support.

Your committee, therefore, think this a meritorious case and that relief should be granted this soldier, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL M'GARVEY.

The next Senate bill (on the Private Calendar) was the bill (S. 3196) granting a pension to Michael McGarvey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael McGarvey, late of Company K of the First Regiment Missouri Light Artillery, and now blind in both eyes, and pay him a pension at the same rate allowed for loss of both eyes, in lieu of the pension now allowed him under certificate numbered 195607.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3196) granting an increase of pension to Michael McGarvey, submit the following report:

The Senate report clearly sets forth the facts in this claim and is hereby adopted with the following amendment: Striking out in line 10 the words "the same rate allowed for the loss of both eyes" and inserting "forty dollars per month."

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3196) granting an increase of pension to Michael McGarvey, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant, Michael McGarvey, late of Company K, First Regiment Missouri Light Artillery, and now residing at Salem, Dent County, Missouri, is receiving a pension of $14 per month, $5 for gunshot wound and $9 for loss of the sight of the right eye.

About three years since he lost, accidentally, the sight of his left eye, thus rendering him totally blind. This accident is described in the affidavit hereto appended.

"The affiant, T. J. Scott, says that he has known Michael McGarvey, of Salem, Dent County, Missouri, intimately for eighteen or nineteen years; that said McGarvey was in the employ of the Scotia Iron Company for ten years, and in the employ of the Nova Scotia Iron Company for four years; that said affiant was the superintendent of said two companies for and during said years; that said McGarvey had but one good eye; that he had lost his right eye, as affiant is informed and believes, during his (McGarvey's) service as artilleryman in the United States service during the war of the rebellion.

"Affiant says that during the fall of 1867 said McGarvey was employed by him for purposes of mining in Stoddard County, Missouri, at the town of Paxico; that on November 29 of said year said McGarvey lost his left eye by a premature explosion in an iron-ore mine in an unavoidable accident.

"Affiant says that he saw said McGarvey the day after the accident occurred; that he removed him to Cape Girardeau, Mo.; that he remained there in a hospital for a week or ten days under care of a physician, whose name he can not now recall; that he then had him removed to St. Louis and placed him in a hospital where he remained for some weeks under treatment of Dr. Green, known as the best oculist in St. Louis; that said treatment was continued for some weeks; that it was impossible to restore his sight, and that he has been totally blind since the date of said accident.

"Affiant says that McGarvey is a most worthy man.

"T. J. SCOTT.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me, a notary public in and for McCracken County, Kentucky, by T. J. Scott, this 6th day of March, 1890.

[SEAL.]

"CLARENCE DALLAM,
"Notary Public."

The amendment recommended by the committee in the report was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA J. DODGE.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 792) granting a pension to Martha J. Dodge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha J. Dodge, an army nurse during the late war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 792) granting a pension to Martha J. Dodge, submit the following report:

The Senate report sets forth the facts in this claim, and is adopted by your committee.

SENATE REPORT.

It appears that Miss Dodge was detailed by a commission signed by Mrs. D. P. Livermore, Mrs. A. L. Hoge, and Mrs. James E. Yeatman, of the Chicago Sanitary Commission, as an army nurse, and assigned to duty at Murfreesborough, Tenn., March 16, 1863, and served faithfully until the close of the war. She is now sixty-nine years old, and is supported by the Woman's Relief Corps, of St. Louis, Mo.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Her residence is 4830 North Broadway, St. Louis, Mo.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

KATHERINE W. HOWELL.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 3649) granting increase of pension to Katherine W. Howell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of her present pension of $30 per month, the name of Katherine W. Howell, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Joshua B. Howell, commander of the Third Division, Tenth Corps, United States Army.

Mr. KILGORE. I ask for the reading of the report in this case.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3649) granting increase of pension to Katherine W. Howell, submit the following report:

Your committee recommend the adoption of the Senate report, which is as follows, and that the bill do pass:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3649) to increase the pension of Katherine W. Howell, have examined the same and submit the following report:

"Mrs. Katherine W. Howell is the widow of the late Brig. Gen. Joshua B. Howell, commander of the Third Division, Tenth Corps, United States Army. He was killed during the siege of Petersburg on the 15th of September, 1864, while in command of the Third Division, Tenth Corps.

"General Howell entered the service of his country in the earliest period of the war as colonel of the gallant and battle-tried Eighty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers. In almost every battle of the first campaign on the Peninsula, at Williamsburg, at Fair Oaks, protecting the retreat on Harrison's Landing, General Howell bore a prominent and often a distinguished part. He was the first to land his troops upon the island that gave the Union forces their firm foothold for the siege of Charleston; was commandant at Hilton Head, and served with honor in the Army of the James, and everywhere maintained a reputation high and growing for all the noble traits that are essential to the character of a gentleman and soldier.

"General Alfred H. Terry and General O. A. Gillmore have testified in personal letters to his exhaustless ability and great bravery, the former stating, 'General Howell as a soldier, an officer, and a patriot had few equals and no superior; he was a loss both to the Army and the country.'

"Mrs. Katherine W. Howell is now of advanced age and an invalid. In view of the distinguished services of her husband in the defense of his country and her indigence and dependence, and in order that she may pass the few remaining years of her life in comfort, Mrs. Howell is entitled to $50 per month in lieu of her present pension of $30 per month.

"The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass."

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize now, if there be no objection, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], who desires to leave on account of an engagement with his committee this evening in connection with the tariff bill.

There was no objection.

DREWRY PORTER.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11703) granting a pension to Drewry Porter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Drewry Porter, of Mitchell County, Georgia, late a private in Captain McCrary's Georgia Volunteers in the Indian war of 1836, at the rate of $8 per month.

The report (by Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11798) granting a pension to Drewry Porter, have considered the same and report as follows:

The claimant is shown by the records of the Treasury Department to have served three months as a private in Capt. Isaac McCrary's company of Georgia Volunteers, Indian war of 1836.

In his petition for relief the claimant states that he participated in four battles during said war, and in one engagement received a slight wound of the left leg. He further states that he is now seventy-four years old, in failing health, and without any means of support aside from his daily labor.

W. N. Spence, of Mitchell County, Georgia, testifies that the claimant is a poor man, his only means of support being his manual labor. Mr. Spence further states that from his acquaintance with the claimant he believes the statements contained in his (the claimant's) petition for relief to be true.

In view of the claimant's service and his advanced age and necessitous condition, your committee believe that the relief prayed for should be granted. The passage of the bill is therefore recommended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY L. MILLER.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 987) granting a pension to Mary L. Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary L. Miller, dependent mother of Warwick W. Miller, late of Company F, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 987) granting a pension to Mary L. Miller, submit the following report:

The beneficiary is the dependent mother of Warwick W. Miller, late private in Company F, Second Wisconsin Regiment. She is unable to secure a pension under the recent law for the reason that the soldier died from the result of his military service, leaving a widow. It appears that no one is now drawing a pension on account of the deceased soldier. The Senate report is hereto attached and is made a part hereof.

Your committee believe this to be a just case, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 987) granting a pension to Mary L. Miller, have examined the same and report:

This is a bill to pension Mary L. Miller, mother of Warwick W. Miller, who was a private in Company F, Second Wisconsin Regiment.

The soldier enlisted May 18, 1861, was discharged June 28, 1864, and died September 29, 1870.

After his death the widow was pensioned and her minor child. The widow drew a pension until she remarried, and the child until she arrived at the age of sixteen.

It appears that while the soldier was in the service he contributed to his mother's support. In affirmation of this the committee have the testimony of two witnesses, and he continued to aid her so far as he could after his marriage and until his death. When he died she had no means of support, and from that time to the present she has struggled to obtain a living by her own exertions, with very poor success. At the present time she is far advanced in years, is in delicate health, and being without resources from relatives or friends she is entirely destitute of income.

Her case corresponds with some of the needy and meritorious cases that Congress has sometimes recognized, and the committee do not think it will be any excess of liberality on the part of the Government to allow her the small pension provided for in the bill, which is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN T. BAKER.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 2531) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin T. Baker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin T. Baker, late a quartermaster on the United States steamer Spuyten Duyvil in the United States Navy, and pay him at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

Mr. KILGORE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) was read in part. It is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2531) granting a pension to Benjamin T. Baker, submit the following Senate report, and adopt the same as their report:

[Senate Report No. 309, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The distressing facts in this case are fully set forth in the sworn evidence filed with your committee. The statement by Mrs. Saville is especially full, and made so at the request of the member of the committee to whom the case was referred for special examination. It is indeed seldom that the tragic records of suffering occasioned by patriotic service have so strongly appealed to the justice and sympathy of the country.

We append the evidence in the case supporting the application for increase of pension.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Benjamin T. Baker, being sworn according to law, certifies as follows:

I enlisted in Colonel Sewell's First New York Volunteer Engineers, Company H, Capt. F. Cruess, January 22, 1862; served one year and six months; was honorably discharged for paralysis of the legs and other disabilities.

In June, 1864, I enlisted in the Navy as quartermaster; was with Capt. John Lay at Dutch Gap, on board the torpedo-boat Spuyten Duyvil. During the winter of 1864 and 1865 we lived on board the torpedo boat, the Government failing to send the tender for us to sleep on, as they had promised to do. I was in charge of the boat during Captain Lay's absence, and for five long, weary months had no birth to lie in. To keep the iron under water we filled bags of sand and put on the deck, being obliged to keep them wet all the time.

From these and donkey pumps the water was constantly dripping below on the torpedo-boat on which I was obliged to lie. We could not stand on the top of the torpedo-boat for many minutes at a time, the weather being bitterly cold, and the frost and ice preventing our keeping a foothold. We were obliged to crouch down, or stand the best we could, between the wet bags. Our clothing was constantly saturated with water, and we had no place to go in order to change, as everything we had was below and wet before we put it on. We took our meals on the Onondaga, a double-turreted monitor, which lay about 50 yards from us; we had no further privileges on the monitor. Our lives at this time were in great peril and we suffered more than words can describe.

During this winter I contracted bronchitis and was very ill for two months, my only resting place being the wet sand-bags and the torpedo-box below, with no spot to crawl into to escape the dripping water from above. In the spring I was sent to the hospital, at this time entirely helpless; I was two months in the hospital when the surgeon brought me my discharge, as my health was entirely broken, and at that time they did not think I would live to reach New York City, my home. I have suffered ever since with chronic bronchitis, and my life has been one long period of suffering.

I have been unable to support myself or family for long years, and have been dependent upon my daughter, who is now a widow, and is obliged to provide for us all by her own exertions. My family have to attend to me personally; my constitution has become so weakened by frequent paroxysms of coughing, which completely prostrated me. I desire to secure the highest grade of pension—$72 per month—as my sufferings have been severe and I am unable to care for myself, financially or physically, but a pensioner on others.

BENJAMIN T. BAKER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 17th day of April, A. D. 1888.

[SEAL.]

M. M. ROHRER.

Notary Public.

This certifies that I am the daughter of Benjamin T. Baker, and personally cognizant of his condition in the past and at the present time. He has been an invalid since the war, having contracted chronic bronchitis while in the service of the United States Navy through neglect of the Government to provide proper accommodations while on board the torpedo-boat Spuyten Duyvil (Capt. John Lay) at Dutch Gap. No sleeping accommodation was provided him, and he was constantly saturated with the water which dripped from the deck above. He is a great sufferer; reduced to a skeleton from years of pain and torture, of which to give a copious account would make the heart of adamant turn in pity. He has had very severe hemorrhages from the lungs, in every instance leaving him near death. He can not bear the least atmospheric change without a violent fit of coughing, which lasts many minutes or an hour, as the case may be; in the latter event he becomes so exhausted he faints away, and lies unconscious until restoratives are administered, then he is unable to leave his couch for hours after. At such times we have to give him stimulants frequently, and by this artificial means keep him alive. He has not been able to bathe himself for several years.

He never lies down at night or rises in the morning without a long paroxysm of coughing, usually lasting an hour, and often longer. His medicine and a stimulant is always brought to his room and prepared for use, to relieve him if possible. These spells must be endured; he expects them upon rising and retiring, and the anticipation is such agony he often wishes himself dead. A poor, weak, emaciated body aches but to imprison a soul to torture and harass. The unseen particles floating in the air irritate his throat so constantly that an incessant hacking and expectoration is kept up night and day. No interval from pain marks the day, no respite of a few moments for the lungs in the efforts to clear the air passages. These convulsions are incessant, in a greater or less degree, month in and month out, while these drag into years, for his life is one long period of pain and suffering and fighting with disease. Four or five of these fearful paroxysms of coughing have to be gone through every day; hence his strength is gone and he is rendered entirely helpless.

He is now past seventy years old, with no hope of ever again being able to know a month's freedom from suffering. He served a double record during the late rebellion, having been in both the Army and the Navy, remaining in the Army until totally unfit for duty by sickness from exposure, only giving up when he could no longer stand on his feet, and then by order of the surgeon, who absolutely drove him from duty to the hospital, he being a friend, and fearing he would die on his feet. He left the hospital for his home, accompanied by two friends from New York, who went to fetch him, the surgeon quietly telling these friends he would die on the way home. This was the belief of every one. But he recovered sufficiently to go out, and immediately entered the Navy and again took up the cause of his country's honor. Surely his record as a soldier deserves some recognition, and his present condition a great deal of sympathy and the proper reward.

His wife is sixty-two years of age; entirely broken down in health, and terribly emaciated by constant anxiety and attendance upon her invalid husband. Her sight is so very defective from a cataract, and her other physical weakness, that she is no longer able to attend to his personal wants, as it is dangerous, even if her health would permit, for her to do so. In a moment of fright, when the said Benjamin T. Baker was in a violent paroxysm of coughing, she was hastening to him with a restorative, and supposing she had reached his room, she stepped off the stairs, falling down nineteen winding steps, escaping death by a miracle, but injuring herself very seriously. She was terribly bruised, and ill for three weeks; from this shock she probably never will recover.

The care of both parents now devolves upon me, which I am quite inadequate to, both financially and physically. I struggle through, but am fearful with this constant strain I shall give out completely. I am not able to employ a nurse; thus every little detail which makes up so much of an invalid's life depends on me. I must be in constant attendance. The proper care of one alone would be deemed sufficient for one person.

Aside from this my young sister is in a very precarious state of health. She is the only other living child of my parents, and her condition is another sorrow added to my life. She can not endure the severity of our Northern winters. Hitherto she has gone South, accompanied by mother or myself. Having met with severe financial losses two years ago, I could not go away with her or send her away with another. My means would not permit me to move my family, and I could not leave two invalids to preserve the life of another. My physician constantly warns me of my sister's danger, and I am saddened by the thought that I am chained by poverty, unable to raise my hand to save her. The money which I now employ to render my parents comfortable would permit me to make a provision for her, but at the present time we must keep together to live.

A consultation with our physician, Dr. T. H. Yarrow, of Philadelphia, a few days since, resulted in the same warning words: "Your sister should go South in the early fall and remain until the late spring." This is ominous for me, and I can simply clasp my hands in despair.

My parents, and sister as well, are dependent upon me for everything—home, clothing, food, etc. Having no other income than the $24 a month awarded Benjamin T. Baker a few months ago, this amount hardly pays for the medicines and tonics which are constantly required, and as often changed in the hope of some new drug which may bring relief.

The physician's bill is also another of the cares which rest entirely upon me, and this expenditure is not trifling. My sister being obliged from my inability to go away with her or send her away has caused me more expense in this direction for several years, as her condition is very much aggravated by the severity of this winter. She, too, is so weak I have to give her great care and be very watchful. It is a very distressing state of affairs for me to see her becoming more frail every day, and to feel that she is fading away like a flower simply because I can not give her the proper attention.

This case is all the more sad from the fact that in his enthusiasm Benjamin T. Baker, to preserve the honor and glory of his country, closed out a flourishing business, leaving his wife and young family a small competency to answer their wants during his absence, thereby changing their living from one of luxury and happiness to that of extreme economy, loneliness, and sorrow. We can only sit now and dwell upon the impoverishment of his family—everything gone, and he a dependent upon a widowed daughter. I am obliged to earn my living by my pen, which is often very embarrassing and in my case not remunerative. I barely make enough to provide for my dependent ones and myself. I am sadly retarded by the incessant care demanded of me, and I find my strength weakening.

I therefore make this statement of the true facts and the infirm and helpless condition of the said Benjamin T. Baker, hoping Congress will give him an increase of pension from $24 to $72 a month, his dependent and painful condition making his case worthy of this reward.

WILHELMINA A. SAVILLE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me 20th day of April, A. D. 1888.

[SEAL.] M. M. ROHRER, Notary Public.

This certifies that I have known Benjamin T. Baker personally and am thoroughly cognizant of his condition. He has long been a sufferer from chronic bronchitis and hemorrhages. To my personal knowledge he is totally unable to aid himself, being a confirmed invalid, and being in such an enfeebled condition he requires the attendance of his wife or daughter constantly.

He has severe coughing spells, which render him insensible and prostrate him for hours at a time. He is reduced to a skeleton through disease contracted while in the Navy during the rebellion. He is entirely dependent upon his daughter (a widow), who is also dependent upon her own exertions for a livelihood, and who also has others dependent upon her. His wife is now in failing health, her sight being very defective and her physical condition generally giving way, rendering her unable to give personal attention to her invalid husband, thereby throwing the entire care upon her daughter, who can not afford to hire an attendant to relieve her.

This certifies that I have known Benjamin T. Baker, formerly residing in Philadelphia, for several years. His physical condition renders him unable to support himself and family, he having suffered with chronic bronchitis very severely, at times having severe hemorrhages. I attended him for several years during his residence in this city.

Personally came B. T. Fisher, residing in the city of Philadelphia, who, being duly affirmed according to law, affirms and says that he is acquainted with Benjamin T. Baker, formerly residing in the city of Philadelphia, now a resident of Washington City. From my knowledge of him and his family he has been for some time past wholly dependent upon the love and care of his daughter, Mrs. Wilhelmina Saville, herself a widow, dependent upon her own exertions to provide for herself and her father and mother. The said Benjamin T. Baker is in infirm health, now over seventy years of age, very deaf, and in my judgment will, during all his future years, be dependent upon others and not able to earn anything, by reason of his general physical debility; and I understand he requires an attendant nearly all the time to perform the ordinary things of life, such as washing himself, etc.

Personally came Seth W. Wilson, residing in the city of Philadelphia, who, being duly sworn according to law, says that he is and has long been acquainted with Benjamin T. Baker, formerly residing in the city of Philadelphia, now a resident of Washington City. From my knowledge of him he has been for some time past wholly dependent upon his daughter, Mrs. W. A. Saville, herself a widow, supporting her father and mother by her own labor.

Mr. Baker, now over seventy years old, is, and has long been, in infirm health, is very deaf, and in my opinion will never be able to exercise any care or provision for himself, as he now requires a personal attendant in the ordinary exercise of daily life.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to know what pension this man is drawing now. Does any one know anything about this bill? This man appears to have been a quartermaster—not a man whose claims would commend him to any preference.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman will bear in mind that in pensioning our soldiers and sailors the question is not one of rank at all, but of disability. Under our present law there is no rate between $30 and $72, so that unless a man can show himself entitled to $72 a month, he can not receive more than $30. We propose to allow this man $10 a month, which we are thoroughly satisfied he is entitled to according to his disability.

Mr. KILGORE. The report, so far as read, did not indicate any disability.

Mr. MORRILL. I am aware of that, but as the report is long it was not all read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report shows that this man is now receiving a pension of $24 a month.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. BROWN.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 2574) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Brown

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Benjamin F. Brown, late second lieutenant of the First New Hampshire Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2574) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Brown, submits the following report as adopted by the Senate:

"Benjamin F. Brown was a second lieutenant of the First Regiment United States Sharpshooters, serving nearly two years in the late war. He is now an inmate of the Lunatic Hospital at Worcester, Mass., with no prospect of recovery, according to the statement of Dr. Park, the superintendent of that institution. There is appended a copy of a report made to Mrs. Brown of her husband's condition in December last. The lady is blind and has been so for several years. Their property is gone and the case appeals strongly for favorable action.

"A copy of the soldier's service is attached hereto, which shows the excellent record which he made and also that he was discharged because of disability. The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground of insufficient testimony as to continuance of disease since discharge. General Berdan, who commanded the regiment in which Mr. Brown served, bears testimony to the soldier's excellent character, to his illness while in the service, and to the probability of the incurability of his stroke while in the line of duty.

"In view of the strong testimony filed in this case before the Pension Office and of the recommendation of the board of surgeons of that office by whom the claimant was examined, your committee report the bill favorably.

"THE WORCESTER LUNATIC ASYLUM,
Worcester, Mass., December 10, 1889.

"DEAR MADAM: Mr. B. F. Brown is suffering from paralysis. He walks about with great difficulty and his speech is so much affected that it is almost impossible to understand him when he talks. He is delusional and at times considerably excited. He was committed to this hospital from Newton, October 31, 1887, then said to be twelve years insane.

"Very respectfully,

"Mrs. B. F. BROWN,
Newton Highlands, Mass.

"T. G. PARK, Superintendent.

"NEWTON HIGHLANDS, MASS., December 9, 1889.

"To whom it may concern:

"This will certify that Mrs. B. F. Brown is a resident of this parish and known by myself and all her neighbors to be blind, an affliction of several years' standing.

"GEO. G. PHIPPS,
Pastor of Congregational Church."

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT P. DAVIS.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 3159) granting an increase of pension to Albert P. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Albert P. Davis, late a private in Company K, Ninth Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3159) granting an increase of pension to Albert P. Davis, submit the following report as adopted by the Senate:

Your committee report this bill favorably and recommend its passage in view of the claimant's affidavit and the medical testimony hereto attached. Dr. Gallinger was a Representative from the Second New Hampshire district in the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses, and a member of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions during that period; Dr. Morrill is one of the most prominent physicians in the State.

OFFICE OF J. H. GALLINGER, M. D.,
Concord, N. H., March 13, 1890.

This may certify that I have this day made a careful physical examination of Albert P. Davis, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and find his condition to be as follows:

(1) His left hand is practically useless from a wound received in the United States Army, and for which he is pensioned.
(2) In consequence of an injury received in a railroad accident in April, 1879, the right arm is almost entirely useless, ankylosis of the elbow joint existing and much other deformity having resulted.

(3) There are evidences of chronic malarial trouble, which confirm soldier's statement that he has suffered from chills and fever ever since his army service. In short, soldier is a total physical wreck, and in my opinion is equitably entitled to a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

J. H. GALLINGER, M. D.

CONCORD, N. H., March 11, 1890.

Albert P. Davis first consulted me ten years ago for symptoms of chronic malaria. I have visited him and prescribed for him occasionally since that date for the same disease.

I am now treating him for an acute attack of malaria, with headache, nausea, vomiting, high fever, following a severe chill, then sweating and moderate icterus. Yesterday afternoon and to-day he was able to come to my office for advice.

Mr. Davis is a man of great pluck and energy, otherwise he would long ago have been helpless. The functions of the liver are imperfectly performed at all times, and occasionally they seem to be almost entirely suspended. Moreover, the general and habitual malaise resulting from the malnutrition which almost invariably attends chronic malaria is another cause of constant weakness and debility in this case.

S. C. MORRILL, M. D.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET FLAHERTY.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 2575) granting a pension to Margaret Flaherty.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret Flaherty, mother of Bartlett Flaherty, late a private in Company F, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month, in lieu of the pension she now receives.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2575) granting a pension to Margaret Flaherty, submit the following report as adopted by the Senate:

"The claimant is now on the pension-rolls by special act at $8 per month. The rate being named in the special act prevents an increase under the general law to $12, the rate at which dependent mothers are now pensioned. This is the only case of a dependent mother pensioned at the lower sum now on the rolls of the Concord (N. H.) agency.

"Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill as an act of justice to the claimant, who is an old lady deserving aid and poor."

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HARRIET B. HAMILTON.

The next Senate bill (on the Private Calendar) was the bill (S. 3234) granting a pension to Harriet B. Hamilton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws the name of Harriet B. Hamilton, step-mother of William L. Hamilton, late a private in Company D, Fourteenth Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3234) granting a pension to Harriet B. Hamilton, submit the following report, as adopted by the Senate:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill granting a pension to Harriet B. Hamilton, have examined the same and report:

"Mrs. Hamilton was the step-mother of the soldier. The soldier's father, Alfred Hamilton, drew pension as dependent parent from time of soldier's death in 1836 to his own death in 1838. Mrs. Hamilton married Alfred Hamilton in 1844, and had charge of the soldier during his youth, being in fact the only mother he knew. Precedents for the desired action are numerous. The bill is reported with a favorable recommendation."

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA N. HUDSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3431) granting a pension to Martha N. Hudson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha N. Hudson, widow of Lieut. Col. James Hudson, of the Eighth Massachusetts Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3431) granting a pension to Martha N. Hudson, submit the following report as adopted by the Senate, with an amendment, inserting between the words "pension laws," in line 5, and the word "the," in line 6, the words "at the rate of $8 per month."

[Senate Report No. 1504, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

Martha N. Hudson is the widow of Lieut. Col. James Hudson, of the Eighth Massachusetts Volunteers. Colonel Hudson died in 1868. In 1870 Mrs. Hudson married again, one Joseph Chipman, by whom she was deserted in 1874, and from whom she obtained a decree of divorce in 1881. Chipman died in 1883. By this second marriage she forfeited her right to pension under the general law. She has supported herself by her own labor since her husband's desertion, sixteen years ago, but now finds herself unable longer to do so, owing to increasing weakness and age.

Mrs. Hudson's petition, certificates showing each of her marriages, her divorce from Chipman, and the death of each husband, are hereto attached.

She is now about sixty years of age, dependent for support upon others, especially her brother, who is not able to assume the extra responsibility in addition to that imposed by his own family.

In view of these facts and Colonel Hudson's meritorious services, your committee report the bill favorably and recommend its passage.

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS, County of Suffolk, ss:

I, Martha N. Hudson, of Charlestown, in said county, under oath depose and say I was married to James Hudson, jr., at Lynn, Mass., in January, 1864. He was captain of Company F, Eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers. He answered to the first call for troops in 1861 and served as captain of said company for three months. He was stationed at Annapolis and at the Relay House, Md., also at Washington, D. C. In November, 1862, he was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the same regiment and with his command served nine months. He was stationed at New Bern, N. C. Upon his arrival home in July, 1863, he was sick with malarial fever and chills, and for several weeks kept his room and bed. He was sick a great deal of the time after he left the service in 1863 until his death in April, 1880. In 1879 I married Joseph Chipman, of Beverly, Mass., who served in Captain Porter's company, unattached infantry, in July, 1864, for one hundred days. I obtained a divorce from him for non-support in 1878. He was run over and killed by the cars at Beverly, Mass., in 1882.

Ever since the death of Colonel Hudson I have supported myself by manual labor, though at times wholly unable, owing to the feeble condition of my health. I am now wholly dependent upon charity, as my health is so poor I am unable to earn anything, to be relieved from which I shall ever pray and ask your honorable body to afford me that relief. Colonel Hudson's health was so impaired while in the service of the United States that he was unable to properly attend to his business up to his death. He left but a little property for my support, which was all used up in two years. I am fifty-eight years old, was born in Salem, Mass., Essex County. My maiden name was Martha N. Kenney.

MARTHA N. HUDSON.

BOSTON, March 10, 1890.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, Suffolk, ss:

Then personally appeared the above-named Martha N. Hudson, to me personally known, and made oath to the truth of all the statements in the foregoing affidavit, including the eight interlined words on this page.

Before me.

ABNER C. GOODELL, Jr.,

Justice of the Peace for Essex County,

Duly authorized to administer oaths in said county of Suffolk.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
SECRETARY'S DEPARTMENT, Boston, March 10, 1890.

I hereby certify that at the date of the attestation hereto annexed, Abner C. Goodell, jr., was a justice of the peace for the said Commonwealth, duly commissioned and constituted; that to his acts and attestations, as such, full faith and credit are and ought to be given, in and out of court; that I believe his signature to be genuine; and that said justice of the peace is by law authorized to take depositions, administer oaths, and take acknowledgments of deeds and other instruments throughout the Commonwealth.

In testimony of which I have hereunto affixed the seal of the Commonwealth the date first above written.

[SEAL.]

HENRY B. PIERCE,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
City of Lynn, March 5, 1890.

I, Chas. E. Parsons, hereby certify that it appears by the record of marriages in said Lynn that a marriage was solemnized in said Lynn between James Hudson, jr., and Martha N. Kenney, on the 11th day of January, in the year 1864.

The record is in the following words and figures to wit: Date of marriage, January 11, 1864; name and surname of groom, James Hudson, jr.; name and surname of bride, Martha N. Kenney; by whom married, E. Winchester Reynolds, clergyman.

I, Chas. E. Parsons, above named, depose and say that I hold the office of city clerk of the city of Lynn, in the county of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts; that the records of births, marriages, and deaths in said city are in my custody, and that the above is a true extract from the records of marriages in said city, as certified by me.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said city of Lynn, on the day and year first above written.

[SEAL.]

CHAS. E. PARSONS, City Clerk.

NOTE.—By a decision of the Commissioner of Pensions, December 6, 1864, these certificates need not be sworn to. The seal of a city is sufficient, without further attestation.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
City of Lynn, March 5, 1890.

I, Charles E. Parsons, hereby certify that it appears by the record of deaths in said Lynn, James Hudson, jr., died in said Lynn on the 8th day of April, in the year 1868.

The record is in the following words and figures, to wit: Date of death, April 8, 1868; name and surname of deceased, James Hudson, jr.; name and surname of father Isaac O. Hudson; name and surname of mother, Louisiana Hudson; by whom registered, Benj. H. Jones, city clerk.

I, Charles E. Parsons, above named, depose and say that I hold the office of city clerk of the city of Lynn, in the county of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts; that the records of births, marriages, and deaths in said city are in my custody, and that the above is a true extract from the records of deaths in said city, as certified by me.

Witness my hand and the seal of the city of Lynn on the day and year first above written.

[SEAL.]

CHAS. E. PARSONS, City Clerk.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Town of Beverly, March 5, 1890.

I, William H. Lovett, hereby certify that it appears by the record of marriages in said Beverly that a marriage was solemnized in said Beverly between Joseph Chipman and Martha A. Hudson, m. n. Kenney, on the 12th day of June, in the year 1870.

The record is in the following words and figures, to wit: Date of marriage, June 12, 1870; name and surname of groom, Joseph Chipman; name and surname of bride, Martha A. Hudson, m. n. Kenney; by whom married, G. W. Whitney, pastor Universalist church.

I, William H. Lovett, above named, depose and say that I hold the office of town clerk of the town of Beverly, in the county of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts; that the records of births, marriages, and deaths in said town are in my custody, and that the above is a true extract from the records of marriages in said town, as certified by me.

WILLIAM H. LOVETT, Town Clerk.

MARCH 5, 1890.

ESSEX, ss:

Subscribed and sworn to before me this day; and I certify that I am not interested herein.

JOHN M. MURNEY, Justice of the Peace.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, Essex, ss:

At the supreme judicial court begun and holden at Salem, within and for the county of Essex, on the first Tuesday of November, in the year of our Lord 1881, Martha N. Chipman, of Salem, in the county of Essex, shows that she is the wife of Joseph Chipman, now resident at Beverly, in said county, and that she was lawfully married to said Joseph on the 11th day of June, A. D. 1870, at said Beverly, and that she and her said husband lived together as husband and wife at said Beverly, and at Lynn, in said county, until the month of April, A. D. 1874, at which time said Joseph utterly and willfully deserted the libellant, without cause and against her will, and has continued such desertion ever since and until this date, being more than three consecutive years; and she also shows that during said time since April, 1874, and before that date, said Joseph, being of sufficient ability, has wantonly and cruelly neglected and refused to furnish the libellant with sufficient, or any maintenance.

Wherefore the libellant prays for a divorce from the bonds of matrimony between her and her said husband, and that said Joseph may be decreed to pay her sufficient and suitable alimony, as well pending this suit as subsequently, for her comfortable support, and that the goods and estate of said Joseph may be attached to the amount and value of $5,000, as security for the payment of such alimony and the enforcement of such other decrees as may be made in the premises.

This libel was entered at April term, 1878, when it appeared to the court that all proceedings required by law had been had upon the same. And the said Joseph Chipman, although solemnly called to come into court and show cause why the prayer of said libellant should not be granted, did not appear, but made default. And the evidence adduced in support of said libel having been heard and understood, the court were of the opinion that the material facts therein alleged were satisfactorily proved.

It was therefore considered and decreed sist, by the court, that the bonds of matrimony theretofore entered into between the said Martha N. Chipman and the said Joseph Chipman, for the desertion of the said Joseph, be dissolved; the decrees to be made absolute, on motion, after the expiration of six months from the first publication thereof, upon compliance with the terms thereof, unless sufficient cause to the contrary should appear.

And now the said period of six months having expired, and it being made to appear that the said libellant has complied with the terms of said decree, and no cause to the contrary appearing, it is considered by the court here that the decrees aforesaid be made absolute; of which all persons interested are to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

The foregoing is a true copy of record.

In testimony whereof I herewith set my hand and affix the seal of said court on this 15th day of March, A. D. 1890.

Attest:
[SEAL.]

EZRA L. WOODBURY, Assistant Clerk.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Town of Beverly, March 5, 1890.

I, William H. Lovett, hereby certify that it appears by the record of deaths in said Beverly that Joseph Chipman died in said Beverly on the 11th day of October, in the year 1882.

The record is in the following words and figures, to wit: Date of death, October 11, 1882; name and surname of deceased, Joseph Chipman; name and surname of father, John H. Chipman; name and surname of mother, Elizabeth Chipman (Hill); by whom registered, William H. Lovett, town clerk.

I, William H. Lovett, above named, depose and say that I hold the office of town clerk of the town of Beverly, in the county of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts; that the records of births, marriages, and deaths in said town are in my custody, and that the above is a true extract from the records of deaths in said town as certified by me.

WILLIAM H. LOVETT, Town Clerk.

MARCH 5, 1890.

ESSEX, ss:

Subscribed and sworn to before me this day; and I certify that I am not interested herein.

JOHN M. MURNEY, Justice of the Peace.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, and agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SALINA B. MERRICK.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 3543) granting a pension to Salina B. Merrick.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Salina B. Merrick, widow of Arthur L. Merrick, late a private in Company K, Fifteenth Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3543) granting a pension to Salina B. Merrick, submit the following report as adopted by the Senate:

"Arthur L. Merrick was the color-sergeant of the Fifteenth Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteers. He received a gunshot wound of the right thigh at Port Hudson in 1863, from which he suffered severely until his death in 1868, and for which he was pensioned at the rate of $16 per month at the time of his death. The bullet was never extracted.

"All the reports of examinations of him by the examining board of surgeons indicate clearly that there resulted from the soldier's wound great suffering, lack of exercise, necessary use of opiates to obtain relief from pain, and a weakening of the system as a natural outcome of the foregoing. In the record of his death filed by the attending physician, the immediate cause is stated as heart-failure, the predisposing cause as his army disabilities. The Bureau of Pensions declines to accept the connection thus indicated between these causes, although the claim receives the approval of the legal reviewer.

"The attending physician, whose reputation and ability are attested, assigns the soldier's army disabilities as a predisposing cause, and two other reputable physicians make affidavit to treating soldier for valvular disease of the heart, which they considered a legitimate result of his army wounds. In view of this medical testimony, the soldier's honorable record, the widow's need, your committee report the bill favorably and recommend its passage."

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM NORWOOD.

The next Senate bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4046) granting a pension to William Norwood.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Norwood, late seaman United States Navy.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MALINDA COLLINS.

The next Senate bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 435) granting a pension to Malinda Collins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Malinda Collins, widow of James L. Collins, a private in Company A, Sixth Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and Company H, Seventy-fourth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia.

Mr. KILGORE. Unless we can have some explanation of this case, I would like to hear the report.

Mr. MORRILL. I think I can save time by stating the facts of the case. This man, who was a member of the Missouri Enrolled Militia, was taken prisoner and paroled. Instead of obeying his parole, he returned to his command. He was again taken prisoner and was shot. This bill is to pension his widow.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS H. WILKERSON.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 1040) granting a pension to Thomas H. Wilkerson.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas H. Wilkerson, a private in the company of Capt. John W. Biven's company of Arkansas Home Guards, attached to the First Regiment of Arkansas Cavalry.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

GEORGIANA W. VOGDES.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 3532) granting a pension to Georgiana W. Vogdes.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Georgiana W. Vogdes, widow of Israel Vogdes, late colonel and brevet brigadier-general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $109 per month.

Mr. KILGORE. Let the report be read.

Mr. CRAIG. I will state to the gentleman that this is a particularly lengthy report, and I think I can state the facts in brief form so that the gentleman will be satisfied that the bill ought to pass. In the first place we have amended the bill so as to provide for a pension of $50 per month.

Mr. KILGORE. I am not having the report read for my benefit, but for the benefit of the House.

Mr. CRAIG. But the report recommends this amendment, and I supposed that the gentleman's objection was to the amount carried by the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. Did this man serve in the Army?

Mr. CRAIG. He served in the Army from 1833 to 1861.

Mr. KILGORE. All right.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

J. SEATON KELSE.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 3760) granting a pension to J. Seaton Kelse.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. Seaton Kelse, late assistant surgeon Second Wisconsin Cavalry.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

JOHN M. DUNN.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 4370) granting a pension to John M. Dunn.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John M. Dunn, late first lieutenant of Company E, First Regiment Delaware Volunteers, and subsequently first lieutenant of Company C, Seventh Delaware Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of the rate of $4 per month which he is now receiving.

Mr. KILGORE. Let the report in that case be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the report is still in the hands of the Printer.

Mr. DALZELL. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that this bill passed the Senate giving a pension of $72 a month. As proposed to be amended by the House committee it gives but $50. The report of the Senate committee, however, is adopted. And I want to say to the gentleman that this report reads like a romance.

Mr. KILGORE. That is the reason I would like to have it read. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. No braver soldier ever drew a sword. I can furnish the gentleman with a copy of the report if he desires to examine it.

I am told by gentlemen who have examined the evidence that this man is in a condition where under existing law he would be entitled to $72 a month in a short time.

Mr. KILGORE. The House committee recommend $50, I understand?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, sir; the committee recommend a reduction from $72 to $50.

Mr. BELKNAP. The amendment is stated in the report.

Mr. KILGORE. All right.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

EMILY F. WARREN.

The next Senate bill was the bill (S. 1812) granting an increase of pension to Emily F. Warren.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Emily F. Warren, widow of G. K. Warren, late a major-general in the United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. KILGORE. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1812) granting an increase of pension to Emily F. Warren, submit the following report: The committee find the facts fully set forth in the Senate report accompanying said bill, which is annexed hereto and made a part of this report. Concurring in said report your committee recommend the passage of said bill.

[Senate Report No. 231, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill granting an increase of pension to Emily F. Warren, widow of Maj. Gen. G. K. Warren, have examined the same and report:

The appended report, made by your committee in the last Congress, is adopted and the bill reported with a favorable recommendation.

REPORT.

Mrs. Warren is now becoming old, in weakened health, with a very limited and uncertain income, so that her present pension does not afford the comforts of life. Beyond this she has little that she can depend upon, and besides herself has necessary expenditures for two of her children. Her personal labor has become unavoidable in obtaining a livelihood.

In several familiar cases pensions to the amount provided in this bill have been granted to the widows of officers whose record of service, however distinguished, could not and did not surpass that of General Warren.

It is an act of justice merely to the memory of this gallant and devoted officer, whose remarkable record is hereto appended, to provide for the comfort of her who is the widow of one of the purest patriots who ever served in the American Army.

[General Orders, No. 5.]

HEADQUARTERS CORPS OF ENGINEERS, U. S. ARMY.
Washington, D. C., August 9, 1882.

It has become the painful duty of the brigadier-general commanding to announce to the Corps of Engineers the death of a brother officer, Lieut. Col. Gouverneur K. Warren, brevet major-general, U. S. Army, who died at Newport, R. I., yesterday.

General Warren was graduated from the Military Academy and promoted to the rank of brevet second lieutenant in the Corps of Topographical Engineers, July 1, 1850. He served as assistant engineer on the Topographical and Hydrographical Survey of the Delta of the Mississippi, 1850-'52, and to the board for the improvement of canal around the Falls of the Ohio, 1852-'53; in charge of surveys for the improvement of Rock Island and Des Moines Rapids, Mississippi River, 1853-'54; in compiling the general map and reports (conjointly with Captain, now General, A. A. Humphreys, of Pacific Railroad explorations, 1854; as chief topographical engineer on Sioux expedition, 1855, being engaged in the action of Blue Water, September 3, 1855; in charge of reconnaissances in Dakota Territory and making map and report of same, 1855-'56; and in Nebraska Territory, 1856-'57, and preparing maps and reports thereof, 1857-'59.

He was assistant professor of mathematics at the Military Academy, 1859, and principal assistant professor, 1859-'61.

He entered upon his distinguished service in the late civil war (1861-'66) in the Department of Virginia as lieutenant-colonel of the Fifth New York Volunteers, being engaged in the action at Big Bethel Church, June 10, 1861. He was engaged on the defense of Baltimore, and constructing fort on Federal Hill, 1861-'62, being temporarily detached on expedition to Northampton and Accomack Counties, Virginia, 1861; in the Virginia peninsular campaign (Army of the Potomac), 1862, being engaged in the siege of Yorktown, April 11-May 4, 1862, and in command of brigade, May 24, 1862; skirmish on Pamunkey River, May 26, 1862; capture of Hanover Court-House, May 27, 1862; battle of Guinea's Mill, June 27, 1862, where he was wounded; repulse of Wise's division at Malvern Hill (in command), June 29, 1862; battle of Malvern Hill, July 1, 1862, and skirmish at Harrison's Landing, July 2, 1862.

In the Northern Virginia campaign, 1862, he was engaged in the battle of Manassas, August 30, 1862, and the skirmish near Centreville, September 1, 1862. He was in command of brigade (Army of the Potomac) in the Maryland campaign, 1862, being engaged in skirmishes and battle of Antietam, September 15-17, 1862; skirmish with the enemy's rear guard on the Potomac September 19, 1862; and marched to Falmouth, Va., 1862. In the Rappahannock campaign, 1862-'63, he was in command of brigade till February 4, 1863. He then became chief topographical engineer of the Army of the Potomac, and was engaged in the battle of Fredricksburg, December 13-16, 1863; making reconnaissances, 1862-'63; action on Orange Pike, May 1, 1863; storming of Marye Heights, May 3, 1863, and battle of Salem, May 3-4, 1863, and as chief engineer of the Army of the Potomac, June 8 to August 12, 1863.

In the Pennsylvania campaign he was engaged in charge of the re-embarkation of stores at Aegula Creek, 1863; reconnaissance and battle of Gettysburg, July 1-3, 1863, where he was wounded; and construction of bridges, and making reconnaissances while pursuing the enemy, July-August, 1863.

He was in command of Second Corps (Army of the Potomac) from August 12, 1863, to March 24, 1864.

In the operations in Central Virginia he was engaged in movement to Culpeper and the Rapidan, September 12-16, 1863; combat at Auburn and Bristol Station (in command), October 14, 1863; skirmish at Bull Run, October 15, 1863, and at Kelly's Ford, November 8, 1863; movement at Mine Run, with heavy skirmishing, November 26-30, 1863, and demonstration upon the enemy across Merton's Ford, February 6, 1864.

He was in command of Fifth Corps (Army of the Potomac) from March 24, 1864, to April 1, 1865.

In the Richmond campaign he was engaged in the battle of the Wilderness, May 5-6, 1864; battles about Spottsylvania, May 6-26, 1864; battles of North Anna, May 23-25, 1864; skirmish on Totopotomoy Creek, May 29, 1864; battle of Bethesda Church, May 30, 1864; battles of Cold Harbor, June 1-4, 1864; skirmish on White Oak Swamp, June 13, 1864; assaults on Petersburg, June 17-18, 1864; siege of Petersburg, June 18, 1864-April 3, 1865; Petersburg mine assault, July 30, 1864; actions for the occupation of the Weldon Railroad, August 18-25, 1864; combat of Peebles's farm, September 30, 1864; action at Chapel House, October 1, 1864; skirmishes near Hatcher's Run, October 27-28, 1864; destruction of Weldon Railroad to Meherrin River, December 7-10, 1864; combat near Dabney's mill (in command), February 6-7, 1865; actions and movement to White Oak Ridge, March 23-31, 1865; battle of Five Forks, April 1, 1865.

He was in command of the defenses of Petersburg and Southside Railroad, April 3 to May 1, 1865; in command of the Department of Mississippi, May 14-30, 1865; and was at New York City preparing maps and reports of his campaigns, June 20, 1865, to July 31, 1866.

General Warren was promoted successively from the grade of Lieutenant to that of lieutenant-colonel, Corps of Engineers, and major-general, United States Volunteers. He received the brevets of lieutenant-colonel, United States Army, "for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Guinea's Mill," Va., 1862; colonel, United States Army, "for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Gettysburg," Pa., 1863; brigadier-general, United States Army, "for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Bristol Station," 1865; and major general United States Army, "for gallant and meritorious services in the field during the rebellion," 1865.

Since the close of the war he has been superintending engineer of surveys and improvements of the Upper Mississippi and its tributaries, 1866-1870; of survey of the battle-field of Gettysburg, Pa., 1868-'69; and survey of the battle-field of Manassas, 1878; of Rock Island Bridge across the Mississippi, 1870; of the fortification of New London and New Haven, Conn., 1870-1874; of the improvement of certain rivers and harbors on Long Island, 1870-1874; of construction of Block Island Breakwater, R. I., 1870-1882.

He was a member of commission to examine Union Pacific Railroad and telegraphic lines, 1868-'69, and member of many important boards of officers of the Corps of Engineers organized for the consideration of the plans and the execution of the works of the corps, among which were the board on improvement of the Des Moines Rapids, 1867; board on bridge across Niagara River, at Buffalo, N. Y., 1870-'71; on bridging the Ohio River, 1870-'71, and 1878-1882; on plan for docks constructed for breakwater at Chicago Harbor, Ill., 1871; on the completion of Cincinnati and Newport Bridge over the Ohio, 1871; on the harbors of St. Louis, Mo., and Alton, Ill., and banks of the Mississippi, 1873; on bridging the channel between Lake Huron and Lake Erie, 1873; on ship-canal from the Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico, 1873-'74; to examine the St. Louis bridge across the Mississippi, 1873; on the reclamation of the alluvial basin of the Mississippi, 1874-'75; on Mississippi bridges between St. Paul, Minn., and St. Louis, Mo., 1876; and on the improvement of the Mississippi River, from the Falls of St. Anthony to Rock Island Rapids, 1878. He was engaged in the survey of the battle-field of Groveton, Va., and in the preparation of campaign maps of certain operations in 1862-'63 of the Army of the Potomac in Virginia.

He was appointed a member of the advisory council of the harbor commissioners of the State of Rhode Island, 1878.

In 1870 General Warren was assigned to the charge of the surveys and improvements of various rivers and harbors in Southern New Massachusetts and in Rhode Island and Connecticut, on which duty and in the supervision of the construction and repair of the fortifications of New Bedford, Mass., of Narragansett Bay, and of Newport, R. I., he remained until the time of his death.

In scientific investigations General Warren had few superiors, and his elaborate reports on some of the most important works which have been confided to the Corps of Engineers are among the most valuable contributions to its literature.

In the field, in the late civil war, he was a brave and energetic officer, and in the high command to which he attained by his patriotic valor and skill he merited the admiration of the Army and the applause of his country.

He was kind and considerate in all the relations of life, and his family in its affliction will have the hearty sympathy of the Corps of Engineers.

As a testimonial of respect for the deceased, the officers of the corps will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

By command of Brigadier General Wright.

GEORGE H. ELLIOT.

Major of Engineers.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, it has not been the practice of the House to pass bills carrying so large a sum at these Friday evening sessions, and if the House insist on it now it will be a departure from the practice heretofore. It has always been the rule to carry them over to a full House. There is no difficulty about it—

Mr. CUTCHEON. I want to suggest to my friend from Texas that we are getting pretty near the end of the session now; and it would be unfortunate to pass any of these bills over to a full House; because conference reports and other matters will probably intervene to prevent their consideration. Besides, I think you never knew the House to reject one of these cases.

Mr. KILGORE. No, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And undoubtedly the time of the House will be well taken up by other matters.

Everybody knows General G. K. Warren, commander of the old Fifth Army Corps, one of the most distinguished officers of the Army, one of the very bravest of the brave.

Mr. KILGORE. I know that; I came in contact with him a time or two myself. [Laughter.]

But I understand the gentleman to say there will probably be no other Friday evening sessions during this session of Congress—

Mr. CUMMINGS. I hope in view of that fact the gentleman will not object to this bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I have never consented to the passage of any bill of this character on a Friday night session. If I consent to-night I want it understood that it will not be pleaded on me hereafter or that I will be stopped from making objection in the future.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that it will not be quoted as a precedent against the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. I hope not, because under all of the circumstances connected with this case I am willing that it shall go through to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be ordered to a third reading.

Mr. CHADLE. I do not think that bill should be passed. There ought to be some place where we will stop. This is not a good case to stop on, because the husband of this widow was a most distinguished soldier. But I want to say that it is absolutely wrong, this whole principle of granting such pensions, for the representatives of the people to give to the widow of one man eight times the amount we give to the widow of another. There can be no justification for it. I am told that the other day a pension of $2,000 a year was voted to a person who is worth $250,000. That is one special case, and we can all remember the other evening that we pensioned a widow at $12 per month who had four sons shot to death in the late war, while she herself had been in the poor asylum for twelve years. Now, if the pension of $30 is not enough to give to the widow of an officer, then increase the amount given by the general law, and stop this special pension legislation, because there can be nothing more inimical to the best interests of the people and that sets a worse class precedent to go down to the future than the precedent based on these special bills giving these large sums to favored classes and confining others to the limited amount fixed by the pension laws.

This is the very worst form of class legislation; and I but repeat the sentiment of every wage-worker in the country when I enter my protest against it. The men who dig the money out of the ground, country and the workmen of the country everywhere, are all opposed to it, and on behalf of myself and the people I have the honor to represent directly, and all the other common people of the country, I enter my protest against the passage of this and all similar bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be ordered to a third reading.

There was no objection.

The bill was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, House bill No. 5659, of the same title, will be laid upon the table. The Chair out objection, the Chair will now recognize alternately gentlemen who are present.

Mr. NUTE. Mr. Chairman, it has been customary, I believe, at this point in the proceedings to take up bills on the Calendar. I have made a very careful examination of the Calendar to-day, and I find several cases which I have reported from the committee, only one from my own State, but on behalf of gentlemen from other States ago, and they have been passed over. There are only seven of them, and only one of them calls for any stated sum. That is the case of an army nurse, and the amount is $12 per month. The others are simply to place the applicants on the pension-rolls subject to the limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, there were about a dozen of us on the last pension evening who remained here until half past 10. Some of us remained faithfully through several similar sessions before, and yet we were not recognized.

Mr. NUTE. This is only the regular order I am calling for. Mr. SAWYER. But there is not one of these men whose bills you have reported who takes enough interest in them to be here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first few bills on the Calendar.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. Your objection will not do any good, for this is the regular order. You can not object to the regular order.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will agree, Mr. Speaker, not to object, if the gentleman will limit himself to three bills. That will be two more than I have had passed this session.

Mr. NUTE. But this is the regular order.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the several bills now on the Calendar which are about to be reported by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CHARLES S. BLOOD.

The first House bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7110) for the relief of Charles S. Blood.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to set aside the findings of the court-martial in the case of Charles S. Blood, late second lieutenant of Company A, Forty-seventh Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

SEC. 2. That said Charles S. Blood be allowed all pay and emoluments to which he would have been entitled had he received an honorable discharge on the date of the muster out of said company and regiment.

The committee recommend to strike out section 2 and add the following proviso to section 1:

Provided, That said Charles S. Blood shall be entitled to no pay or allowances by virtue of this act from the date of his dismissal to the date of the final muster out of his regiment.

The report (by Mr. OSBORNE) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7110) for the relief of Charles S. Blood, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

The facts in the case largely appear in the report of the Adjutant-General, submitted herewith and made a part of this report. Charles S. Blood, the petitioner, had been a faithful soldier and officer for nearly two years, and about the 1st of July, 1863, was serving on detached duty away from his command, and at which time he was ordered to report back to his command. While on his way back he found his captain, who persuaded him to remain with him a few days at St. Louis, as he (the captain) was severely wounded and needed his care. Owing to such absence without leave for a period of about four weeks, he was court-martialed and discharged from the service. Your committee believe that the penalty was disproportionate to the offense in view of the mitigating circumstances, and this is borne out by the fact that the Secretary of War made an attempt to set aside the findings of the court, after a careful review of all the facts.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the second section and adding to the first section the following words: "Provided, That said Charles S. Blood shall be entitled to no pay or allowances by virtue of this act from the date of his dismissal to the date of the final muster out of his regiment," and that the bill so amended do pass.

CASE OF CHARLES S. BLOOD, LATE OF FORTY-SEVENTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEERS. RECORD AND PENSION DIVISION, March 12, 1890.

The records show that Charles S. Blood was mustered in as second lieutenant, Company A, Forty-seventh Illinois Volunteers, to date June 20, 1862, and was dismissed the service in orders of which the following is a copy:

[General Orders, No. 63.]

"HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE TENNESSEE, Vicksburg, Miss., October 14, 1863.

"III. At a general court-martial which convened at headquarters Eleventh Regiment Missouri Infantry Volunteers (Camp Sherman, Miss.), on the 20th day of August, 1863, pursuant to Special Orders, No. 57, of date August 12, 1863, General Buckland, and of which Maj. William Stubbs, Eighth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers is president, was arraigned and tried: Second Lieut. Charles S. Blood, Company A, Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

"Specification 1: In this, that he, Charles S. Blood, second lieutenant Company A, Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, did, on the 29th day of June, 1863, he being on duty at headquarters Third Division, Fifteenth Army Corps, receive a written order from Brigadier-General Tuttle, commanding said division, relieving him from duty at that place and ordering him, the said Blood, to report for duty to the officer commanding his company. That in disobedience of said order he, the said Charles S. Blood, did not so report or rejoin his company, which was at that time at Young's Point, La., but did remain absent from the command until the 10th day of August, 1863. This in the vicinity of Vicksburg, Miss., at the time above given.

"CHARGE 2.—Absence without leave.

"Specification 1: In this, that he, Charles S. Blood, second lieutenant of Company A, Forty-seventh Illinois Infantry, did absent himself, and remain absent from his company and regiment without authority, from the 29th day of June, 1863, to the 10th day of August, 1863. This in the vicinity of Vicksburg, Miss., at the time above given.

"CHARGE 3.—Conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline.

"Specification 1: In this, that Charles S. Blood, second lieutenant, Company A, Forty-seventh Illinois Infantry Volunteers, did, on or about the 29th day of June, 1863, in defiance of Brigadier-General Tuttle's Special Order No. 36, of that date, to report to his company commander, absent himself without authority from his company, regiment, and the division, and go to the city of Peoria, Ill., and charges and specifications the accused pleaded as follows: To the specification to first charge, guilty. To the first charge, guilty. To the specification to second charge, guilty. To the second charge, guilty. To the specification to third charge, guilty. To the third charge, guilty.

FINDINGS AND SENTENCE.

"The court having maturely considered the evidence adduced in this case find the accused, Second Lieut. Charles S. Blood, Company A, Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, as follows: Of the specification to the first charge, guilty. Of the second charge, guilty. Of the specification to the second charge, guilty. Of the third charge, guilty. Of the specification to the third charge, guilty. And the court do therefore sentence him, the said Second Lieut. Charles S. Blood, Company A, Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, to be dismissed the service of the United States and to forfeit all pay and all allowance due him from the 2d day of July, 1863."

"HEADQUARTERS FIFTEENTH ARMY CORPS, Camp on Black River, Miss., September 1, 1863. "The proceedings, findings, and sentence in this case are approved. No amount of good reputation will justify a desertion of duty such as this case exhibits. The officer should be dismissed."

"Major-General Commanding Fifteenth Army Corps. "Findings and sentence approved, and Second Lieut. Charles S. Blood, Company A, Forty-seventh Illinois Infantry Volunteers, accordingly ceases to be an officer of the United States. "By order of Maj. Gen. U. S. Grant.

"T. S. BOWERS, "Assistant Adjutant-General."

On December 7, 1863, and January 28, 1864, petitions were forwarded to this Department, signed by a number of officers of his regiment, praying that Lieutenant Blood be reinstated.

These petitions were referred to the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army, for review, and were returned by that officer, under date of July 12, 1864, with the following report:

"The proof in the case is that the accused maintained an excellent character for good conduct and efficiency as an officer up to the commission of the offense for which he was tried."

"It is shown by the testimony that the accused, being on duty at the headquarters of Third Division, Fifteenth Army Corps, near Vicksburg, Miss., received, on the 29th of June, 1863, an order from Brigadier-General Tuttle, directing him to report for duty to the officer commanding his company, at Young's Point, La. It was also shown that for several days after receiving this order the accused was necessarily engaged in the performance of duties required of him by a previous order; and it appears from his own statement before the court that before he had completed the performance of these duties he received a letter from his father informing him that his mother was extremely ill, supposed to be at the point of death, and was most anxious to see him.

"The accused further states that he had been in the service over two years without visiting home, and that following the impulse produced by his father's letter, he at once started in fulfillment of what he believed to be the dying request of his mother, with the purpose of remaining at home not more than three days; but, learning on his arrival there of the fall of Vicksburg, he remained at home seventeen days.

"Seventeen officers of the First Division, Sixteenth Army Corps, petition the President to reinstate this officer to his former rank and position in the Army, because he has always borne an excellent reputation as a thorough and efficient officer, whether in camp, on marches, or in action, and with the exception of the offense for which he was dismissed he has as clear a record of duties faithfully discharged as any officer need have; that he remained more than six months with his regiment after his trial, always ready and anxious for duty.

"The president and judge-advocate of the court that tried the accused concur with the petitioners in the object of their prayer. These officers state that as no defense was made the court could not do otherwise than it did, but that in their opinion there existed, outside the record, 'at least a good partial defense, and that the accused was not guilty to the extent apparent on the record.'

"Brigadier-General Mower, to whom the case was submitted for information, states that while in his command Lieutenant Blood had, on all occasions, borne an excellent character. He was brave, worthy, and efficient, and was considered one of the best officers of the regiment.

"In view of the mitigating circumstances presented in his case, of his honorable record before trial, and his creditable conduct thereafter, it is believed that the disability imposed on this officer by the sentence of the court may properly be removed."

This report was referred to the Adjutant-General, with the following indorsement:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, July 18, 1864.

"Case of Charles S. Blood, late lieutenant, Company A, Forty-seventh Illinois Volunteers. Respectfully referred to the Adjutant-General.

"The recommendation of the Judge-Advocate-General approved. The necessary orders will be issued removing the disability in his case.

"By order of the Secretary of War.

"JAS. A. HARDIE,

"Colonel and Inspector-General United States Army."

And thereupon on July 20, 1864, the commanding officer of the Forty-seventh Illinois Volunteers, and the governor of Illinois, were notified of the action of this Department in letters of which the following are copies:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, July 20, 1864.

"SIR: I am directed to inform you that the President has removed the disability resulting from the dismissal of C. S. Blood, formerly a lieutenant in your regiment, and the governor of Illinois has this day been notified of the fact.

"THOMAS M. VINCENT,
"Assistant Adjutant-General.

"COMMANDING OFFICER,

"Forty-seventh Illinois Volunteers.

"(Through headquarters Sixteenth Army Corps.)"

"WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, July 20, 1864.

"SIR: By direction of the President of the United States the disability resulting from the dismissal of Charles S. Blood (formerly a second lieutenant in the Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry), by sentence of general court-martial, as promulgated in General Orders, No. 63, Headquarters Department of the Tennessee, October 14, 1863, is hereby removed, and he may be recommissioned should your excellency so desire.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"THOMAS M. VINCENT,
"Assistant Adjutant-General.

"THE GOVERNOR OF ILLINOIS,
"Springfield, Ill."

Since which date the status of the case has not changed.
Respectfully submitted.

F. H. AINSWORTH,
"Captain and Assistant-Surgeon, U. S. Army.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES DUERSON.

The next House bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5583) for the relief of Charles Duerson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Duerson.

The report (by Mr. WILSON, of Kentucky) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5583) granting a pension to Charles Duerson, submit the following report:

Mr. Duerson was a resident of Winchester, Ky., which town was captured by the Confederate forces, and he being a Unionist went to Maysville, Ky., within Federal lines, where he remained several weeks and until the Federal forces started for Mt. Sterling, Ky., where General Humphrey Marshall and his Confederate forces were located, when about one hundred loyal citizens, Mr. Duerson being one of them, formed themselves into a company, and were furnished horses and arms and attached themselves to the Fourteenth Kentucky Cavalry, but were not then mustered into the United States service.

When within a few miles of Mt. Sterling, while the command was in ranks and on the march and in line of duty, a gun was accidentally discharged in the ranks and the whole load of buck and ball passed through Duerson's left leg, from which he was confined several weeks and by which he was disabled so long he did not rejoin the said regiment to be mustered. He was in discharge of military duty when wounded and was under arms in line of duty, and although his case is not covered by the pension laws, yet your committee find precedents for placing Mr. Duerson on the pension-rolls, and therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARIA T. LEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4238) pensioning Maria T. Lee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria T. Lee, dependent mother of Wilbur P. Lee, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4238) granting a pension to Maria T. Lee, submit the following report:

The basis of this claim is the service and death of claimant's son, Wilbur P. Lee, a private in Company F, One hundred and twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteers, who died in hospital at Helena, Ark., September 18, 1863, of typhoid fever, and the dependence of the mother.

Her claim was rejected on the ground that since the date of the filing of her claim she has not been dependent upon the soldier for her support, for, as shown by the evidence she and her husband in 1860 conveyed to their son, William H. Lee, a farm, in consideration of which their said son at that time entered into a contract to support claimant and her husband during their lifetime.

The evidence in the case shows that at the time of the soldier's enlistment his father was a superannuated preacher, about fifty-six years old, residing with claimant upon a farm near Hillsborough, Ill. With the assistance of the members of his family he carried on the farm. In 1864 claimant bought a farm near that place, and she, with her husband, removed to and lived upon their farm from that time to 1877, when they sold out in Illinois and removed to Sumner County, Kansas, where they bought a farm, costing $1,700, and conveyed the same to their son, William H. Lee, in consideration of which he entered into an agreement for the support of claimant and her husband during their natural lives.

The evidence shows that the son furnished a very limited and inadequate support of the parents, and since October, 1889, has failed entirely to support them, and they have lived upon small contributions and the benevolence of friends.

The husband is feeble and unable to do any kind of labor. The parents are very poor, in fact have no property of any kind, and are getting old.

In view of all the facts your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

W. B. CLOER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7107) granting a pension to W. B. Cloer, late private in Company L, D. Storm's Arkansas militia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of W. B. Cloer, late private Company L, D. Storm's company Arkansas militia, on the pension-rolls, subject to the conditions and restrictions of the pension laws of the United States.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I can not understand how a member of the Arkansas militia is entitled to be put on the pension-roll.

Mr. MORRILL. He was wounded, and we have just passed a bill for the widow of a man who was in the Missouri militia who was shot.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that in many instances militia soldiers were called into the service of the United States and while so serving received injuries.

Mr. KILGORE. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. GOODNIGHT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7107) granting a pension to W. B. Cloer, submit the following report:

W. B. Cloer was a member of the Arkansas State militia, organized at Fayetteville, Ark., under orders of the United States military authority, January, 1864. While in the line of duty, under Capt. Leroy D. Stone, the pensioner was severely wounded in the head, left shoulder, and arm by gunshot fired by the enemy.

That his injury is permanent and in the left arm and shoulder almost total. That the soldier was treated for these wounds by a surgeon of the United States Army, H. J. Manard, at Fayetteville, Ark., from June till in the fall of 1864, when he was discharged from the service on account of these wounds and permanent disability therefrom. All of which appears by proof of captain and surgeon and disinterested evidence. That soldier is needy and disabled to large degree.

Your committee therefore think this a meritorious case and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MATTHEW C. GRISWOLD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6196) granting an increase of pension to Matthew C. Griswold.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Matthew C. Griswold, late a first lieutenant of Company L, Twentieth New York Cavalry, to $30 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6196) granting an increase of pension to Matthew C. Griswold, have considered the same and report:

The claimant is pensioned for disease of lungs, phlebitis, and disease of kidneya, at the rate of $17 per month. He was a first lieutenant in Company I, Twentieth New York Cavalry.

Doctors Leroy J. Brooks, H. H. Beecher, and George W. Avery, all prominent physicians at Norwich, N. Y., and a number of other prominent citizens of the same place, testify that his diseases have reached such a stage as to incapacitate him for the performance of any manual labor.

Both his legs are covered with patches and varicose veins which render him lame and unable to labor while standing, and he is severely disabled by chronic bronchitis.

He filed an application for increase in the Pension Bureau, but the same was rejected March 21, 1889, the examining surgeons not having fixed a higher rating than that at which he is now pensioned.

Accompanying the bill is the testimony of Dr. D. M. Lee, late an assistant surgeon Twenty-second New York Volunteer Cavalry, which shows that the claimant is a sufferer from phthisis pulmonalis and that tubercular deposits and pleuritic adhesions exist in a marked degree. The doctor testifies, further, that the claimant also suffers from valvular disease of the heart, which probably results from the disease of the lungs, and that the veins of his legs are extensively varicose. These diseases, in the doctor's opinion, wholly and totally disable the claimant for the performance of any manual labor.

The testimony of Dr. Lee is corroborated in every respect by the testimony of Dr. Daniel J. Mosher and by an additional affidavit of Dr. Leroy J. Brooks.

It will be noted that opposed to the rating allowed by the examining surgeons is the testimony of five physicians, viz, Lee, Mosher, Brooks, Beecher, and Avery, all of whom know the claimant personally and are competent judges as to the extent of his disabilities. These physicians swear in positive terms that the claimant is so disabled as to be incapacitated for the performance of any manual labor.

In view of the facts set forth above, your committee are of the opinion that the increase of pension contemplated by this bill should be granted, and the bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

NATHAN G. BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8925) granting a pension to Nathan G. Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension-roll of the United States the name of Nathan G. Brown, the dependant father of Edwin F. Brown, late a private in Company A, in the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery, and to pay him a pension of $12 a month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8925) granting a pension to Nathan G. Brown, submit the following report:

That the claimant is the father of Edwin F. Brown, late a private in Company A, Eighth New York Heavy Artillery.

The records of the Adjutant-General's Office show that the son was enrolled in said company July 21, 1862; that he was captured at Ream's Station August 25, 1864; taken to Richmond August 27, 1864; transferred to Salisbury, N. C., October 9, 1864, where he died January 3, 1865, leaving no widow or child.

The evidence filed with your committee shows that the claimant is now nearly seventy years of age, poor, depending upon his labor as a blacksmith for his support. He has made no application for a pension because of his inability to show dependence upon his son at the time of his death, he then being a boy sixteen years of age.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET CONSTABLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5717) for the relief of Margaret Constable.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret Constable, widow of Capt. David C. Constable, late of the revenue-marine service of the United States, who was wounded in action on the James River in 1862, at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Mr. KILGORE. I think there ought to be some explanation of this. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5717) granting a widow's pension to Margaret Constable, submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of David C. Constable, who became a lieutenant in the United States revenue marine service in 1852, was commissioned a captain in 1862 by President Lincoln "for gallantry in action," and who died at Ugdensburg, N. Y., September 29, 1888.

On May 15, 1862, he was in command of the United States revenue marine steamer A. E. Stevens (also known as the Yangtuck), which vessel was at that time co-operating with the Navy on the James River, Virginia, under Commander John Rodgers, United States Navy. Acting under orders from Commander Rodgers, Lieutenant Constable made an attack on the Confederate battery at Ward's Hill, near Richmond, Va., May 15, 1862, and during said engagement he received an injury from the bursting of a Parrott gun on his vessel, resulting in concussion of the brain, which injury permanently impaired his health and ultimately caused his death.

For gallantry in action in the above engagement he was, on May 29, 1862, personally presented by President Lincoln with a commission as captain, which is referred to in a letter of commendation from Secretary Chase of same date, and was given a year's leave of absence to recover his health, if possible, from the effects of said injury. The evidence shows that this officer was under treatment on account of this injury from the date of injury up to the time of his death.

The widow of Captain Constable now prays that Congress will grant her the relief which she would not be able to obtain through the Pension Office (no papers having been filed), owing to the fact that her late husband was an officer of the revenue-marine service and therefore not entitled to a pension under the general law.

The bill to be amended, however, by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting in the place thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY ROBINSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6048) granting a pension to Mary Robinson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Robinson, of South China, Me., widow of Timothy Robinson, late of Company G, of the Twenty-eighth Regiment of Maine Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6048) granting a pension to Mary Robinson, submit the following report:

This is a widow's claim which was rejected by the Pension Department on the ground that the death of claimant's husband, Timothy Robinson, was not directly due to disease contracted in the service. It appears from the records that said Timothy Robinson enlisted in Company G, Twenty-eighth Maine Volunteers, September 19, 1862, and was mustered out August 2, 1863. Re-enlisted February 9, 1865, in Twelfth Maine and served until March 3, 1866, when he was mustered out with his company.

At the time of his death he was drawing a pension for "malarial poisoning and disease of kidneys, also affection of heart, result of malarial poisoning," as shown by certificate of Doctors Martin and Lapham, United States examining surgeons, of Augusta, Me., dated February 16, 1867. Dr. F. C. Perkins, of China, Me., who attended the soldier in his last sickness, in an affidavit dated June 26, 1889, says:

"I hereby certify that Timothy Robinson died January 17, 1889. The cause of his death was extravasation of blood into the substance of the brain, resulting in complete hemiplegia. * * * And judging from the condition in which I found him I have no doubt but what the hemorrhage was the result of the fatty degeneration of the vessels caused by malaria."

The following statement, signed by fourteen members of J. P. Jones Post, No. 106, G. A. R., South China, Me., clearly sets forth the needs and claims of the claimant:

"Mrs. Robinson is a lady nearly seventy-four years of age, almost entirely destitute of any means of support, her health very poor, and broken-down constitution. She is able to do but very little work of any kind. We consider her claim for a pension surpassed by few, considering her age and means of support, and taking into account that a husband, three sons, and four brothers went to the front, all as volunteers, and four of this number fell in battle."

"We saw Mr. Robinson once or twice each day during his sickness, and know that he suffered very much from his army troubles, which were a kidney trouble and malarial poisoning, for which he was pensioned. Although in his last days of life he was stricken with paralysis, yet we are of opinion that the direct cause of his death was his army troubles, and as there was no examination after death we think the widow's claim should never have been rejected because paralysis was among the list of ailments in his last moments."

In view of the evidence submitted the committee are of the opinion that the claim is a just one, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LYDIA HOOD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9132) granting a pension to Lydia Hood.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at $12 a month, the name of Lydia Hood, of Chelsea, Vt., mother (by adoption) of Hollis H. Hood, late of Company I, Tenth Vermont Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9132) granting a pension to Lydia Hood, submit the following report:

The evidence in this case shows the following facts: Lydia Hood is an old and well known resident of Chelsea, Vt.; her husband was a feeble man, who long ago left her a widow, and she has never remarried.

Before the war she and her husband took into their family a male child a few months of age, whose name was not known. If it had, and they called the child Hollis H. Hood and brought him up as if he were their own child, gave him an education, and in all ways treated him like a son of their own. He was the only male child in their family and was much depended upon by the mother, who looked to him for support in her declining years.

At the breaking out of the war he enlisted as a private in Company I, Tenth Vermont Volunteers, being eighteen years old.

The soldier died in the service from measles followed by fever, near Brandy Station, in February, 1864.

While this soldier was in the service he signed over to his mother his bounty and State pay, and after his death the chaplain wrote his mother that his strongest desire to live seemed to be on his mother's account.

Lydia Hood applied at Pension Office for pension as dependent mother of this soldier and claim was rejected because she was not the natural mother of said soldier.

She is now ninety-three years old and is so destitute that the town authorities find it necessary to make provision for her partial support.

She is shown to be entirely worthy and in needy circumstances and to have taken this soldier and reared and cared for him from a babe till he became a volunteer in the service of his country. She christened him in her own name and under that name he served and died, and the committee, to whom this bill was referred, think she ought not to be deprived of pension because she was not his natural mother.

We recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

NANCY M. GROSS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6809) granting a pension to Nancy M. Gross.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy M. Gross, who was a nurse in the Second and Sixth Maine Regiments, 1861 and 1862.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6809) granting a pension to Nancy M. Gross, submit the following report:

The claimant, Mrs. Nancy M. Gross, asks that a pension may be granted her in consideration of her services as nurse in the war of the rebellion. The claimant states that she enlisted as a nurse at Bangor, Me., June, 1861, under the name of Nancy M. Atwood; was assigned to the Sixth Regiment Maine Volunteers; accompanied said regiment to Portland, Me., and thence about the 17th of July, 1861, to Washington, thence to Chain Bridge, Maryland. October 10 was transferred to the Second Maine Regiment, then at Hall's Hill, Virginia.

Late in the spring of 1862 she was transferred to Washington, D. C., and then detailed by Miss Dix for work on the peninsula, around Yorktown, Va., but was obliged to resign on account of illness, and returned to Maine in the summer of 1862. In 1864 she was a nurse in the Gymnasium Hospital at Bangor, Me. Her husband, Stover P. Gross, late sergeant of the Second Maine, is a pensioner for wounds received at Malvern Hill in 1862, and is unable, with his increasing infirmities, to support himself and dependent family, and in the near future will require the constant attention of his wife.

H. P. Crowell, of Bangor, Me., late sergeant in Second Maine, certifies: "I have been acquainted with Mrs. Nancy M. Gross, formerly Nancy M. Atwood, for thirty years. In the fall and winter of 1861-'62, she was hospital nurse in the Second Maine Regiment, and was highly respected by the officers and men, especially the sick, to whom she rendered valuable aid, sparing no pains for their comfort and welfare."

Vigil P. Wardwell, first lieutenant, Company E, Sixth Maine Volunteers, certifies:

"Nancy M. Atwood went out with us as a nurse. She was with the regiment all the time I was with them. I positively know that she was held in the highest esteem by the officers and men as a woman, and as a nurse she was regarded as most excellent."

Charles W. Roberts, late colonel Second Regiment Maine Volunteers, certifies: "I am personally acquainted with Mrs. Nancy M. Gross, formerly Mrs. Nancy M. Atwood. In the years 1861 and 1862 she did effective service as a nurse in my regiment, and was very highly esteemed by the officers and men of my command."

Hon. Hannibal Hamlin states as follows: "I have no personal knowledge of the services of Mrs. Gross, but my acquaintance with her enables me to know she is an excellent and worthy woman, and I cordially recommend her as worthy of a pension."

In view of the evidence submitted, the committee is of the opinion that the claim is a just one and recommend that the bill do pass, amended, however, by adding after the words "sixty-two," in line 8, the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SYLVANUS B. DORSETT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker of the House has a bill that he would be very glad to have considered. Without objection, the Chair will lay it before the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11575) granting a pension to Sylvanus B. Dorsett.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Sylvanus B. Dorsett, dependent father of John Dorsett, late private in Company G, Ninth United States Infantry, killed September 13, 1847, at the battle of Chapultepec, at the rate of $12 a month.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11575) granting a pension to Sylvanus B. Dorsett, have considered the same and report as follows:

John Dorsett, the claimant's son, enlisted on the 23d of March, 1847, in Company C, Ninth United States Infantry; transferred to Company G, same regiment. He was killed in action at Chapultepec, Mexico, September 13, 1847.

In his petition for relief the claimant, Sylvanus B. Dorsett, declares that he is the father of the above-named soldier, and that he is aged and infirm, having been born June 7, 1802. He further declares that he lives alone, has no means of support, and is dependent entirely upon charity.

His post-office address is Silgo Falls, Cumberland County, Maine. Edwin R. Wingate, Gideon M. Tucker, Frank A. White, and twenty other citizens of claimant's vicinity vouch for the truthfulness of the claimant's statements and ask that the claimant be granted a pension.

No pension on account of the service and death of the soldier, John Dorsett, has ever been granted to any one.

The act of Congress passed at the present session, providing among other things for a pension to the dependent parents of the deceased soldiers of the war of the rebellion, does not include within its scope the aged and dependent parents of soldiers of prior wars, and the only way of affording this claimant the relief he stands in so much need of is by special act.

The passage of the bill is recommended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now recognize gentlemen to call up bills for consideration.

MRS. MARGARET WALKER.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 11635) to pension Mrs. Margaret Walker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Margaret Walker, late an army nurse, and to pay her a pension of $12 a month. SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11635) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Walker, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case was an army nurse who served for sixteen months, twelve or fourteen of which she was at the Camden Street Hospital, in Baltimore, and the remainder of the time at the Jarvis General Hospital, Baltimore. These facts are shown by the affidavit of Josephine R. Guy, and in part also by a letter written in September, 1862, by Dr. John Dickson, the acting assistant surgeon at the said Camden Street Hospital.

It is further shown by the affidavit of one Sarah H. Clark, who is the present landlord of the claimant, and also by the affidavits of others, that the claimant is now in her ninety-first year and that she is dependent for support upon her daughter, who supports her by sewing. Thus the facts of faithful service for more than one year, her advanced age and dependence being established, the committee recommends that the bill, which proposes to give her a pension at the rate of $12 a month from and after the passage of the act, do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN CASSIDY.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11996) for the removal of the charge of desertion from the record of John Cassidy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the records to be so amended as to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of John Cassidy, late an ordinary seaman on the United States ship Vandalia, and grant him an honorable discharge, dated June 20, 1865.

The report (by Mr. WALLACE, of New York) is as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11996) for the removal of the charge of desertion from the record of John Cassidy, respectfully report that they have given the matter due consideration and find that the said John Cassidy enlisted December 22, 1864, while under age, assuming the name of John Cummings, he having been rejected under his own name as a minor, and served faithfully until June 20, 1865, on board the United States ships Lenape and Mackinaw, off Fort Fisher, at the taking of Wilmington, N. C., and afterwards up the James and Appomattox Rivers.

When the war closed the Mackinaw was sent north to Portsmouth, N. H., and went out of commission in June, 1865; Cassidy, with others, was transferred to the United States steamship Vandalia, and on June 20 was given one month's leave on shore. Under the impression that the enlistment was for three years or until the war had closed, and the war having closed, Cassidy, who had found employment in Brooklyn, did not return to the Vandalia at the expiration of his leave. Cassidy's case falls outside the provision of the act of Congress approved August 14, 1863, "for the relief of certain appointed or enlisted men of the Navy," etc., only by less than two months in time of service.

We would also direct attention to the fact that Cassidy was only eighteen years of age at the time of his technical desertion. He has since then led an industrious and exemplary life and is a respected citizen of Brooklyn and an esteemed business man of New York City. For the sake of his children, especially, he is desirous of having the record of desertion removed, and your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM CLAWSON.

Mr. FLICK. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1971) for the relief of William Clawson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to enter the name of William Clawson as a private of Company I, Fourth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, upon the rolls of said company, mustered into the service August 2, 1861, and honorably mustered out August 8, 1863, and to issue to him an honorable discharge accordingly; and said Clawson shall be paid all the pay, allowances, and bounties due a soldier regularly serving in said company between the dates aforesaid.

The report (by Mr. DOLLIVER) is as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1971) for the relief of William Clawson, having considered the same, report as follows:

Your committee adopt the report, hereto annexed, from the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate of the present Congress, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

[Senate Report No. 747, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1971) for the relief of William Clawson, having considered the same, report as follows:

The facts of this case, as shown by the sworn petition of William Clawson, supported in all material respects by a number of affidavits of members of Company I, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, are these:

Clawson enlisted as a private in that company on the 2d day of August, 1861, and was sworn into service by its captain; but the mustering officer refused to muster him because he thought Clawson had consumption, which proved to be a mistake. Clawson with the consent of the captain, remained with the company and did regular service and participated in every action in which his command was engaged, including the siege of Vicksburg, until the 8th of August, 1862, when his captain resigned and he left the company, having, in the meantime, contracted disease in the service. The fact of his service between the dates named is clearly established, and although his name is not borne on the rolls of the company on file in the War Department, the actual service he performed seems to entitle him to relief.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended as indicated below, and when so amended that it pass.

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to enter the name of William Clawson as a private of Company I, Fourth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, upon the rolls of said company, mustered into the service August 2, 1861, and honorably mustered out August 8, 1863, and to issue to him an honorable discharge accordingly; and said Clawson shall be paid all the pay, allowances, and bounties due a soldier regularly serving in said company between the dates aforesaid."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY JANE MARTIN.

Mr. KILGORE. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11987) to pension Mary Jane Martin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Jane Martin of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, widow of Andrew Martin, deceased, late a private in Capt. James P. Barker's company of Colonel Smith's regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Indian war of 1837, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11987) granting a pension to Mary Jane Martin, have considered the same and report as follows:

The claimant's late husband, Andrew Martin, deceased, was enrolled October 31, 1837, at Philadelphia, Pa., a private in Capt. J. P. Barker's company, First Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, for six months, and is reported on company muster-out roll, dated May 23, 1838, at New Orleans, La., "discharged at Fort Brooks," date and cause not stated.

John W. Thompson and William P. Allan testify that they are personally acquainted with Mary Jane Martin, widow of Andrew Martin, and know that she is about fifty-nine years old, and without any property or income; also that she is entirely dependent upon friends and relatives for support, except such as she may earn by her own labor.

There are many precedents for pensioning the needy widows of the soldiers of the old Indian wars, and your committee therefore return the bill with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

AMANDA E. PARKIS.

Mr. BELKNAP. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 11064) granting a pension to Amanda E. Parkis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Amanda E. Parkis, widow of Elias Parkis, late of Company A, Eighth Michigan Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11064) granting a pension to Amanda E. Parkis, submit the following report:

Claimant was the wife of Elias Parkis, private Company A, Eighth Michigan Infantry, and who died in 1863 during the siege of Fredericksburg, Va., from disease and exposure. She was pensioned as the widow of this soldier until her marriage with one O. C. Goodrich, with whom she lived until the year 1877, and was then divorced from him on the grounds of extreme cruelty, since which time she has been dependent upon her own daily labor for her living. From the best information in possession of your committee it is clear that she has no means of support other than her daily labor and is truly dependent upon others much of the time.

As it is customary to renew pensions of this nature, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. FERGUSON.

Mr. GEAR. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9767) granting an increase of pension to John S. Ferguson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll John S. Ferguson, of Keokuk, Iowa, late of Company F, Twenty-eighth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $80 a month, in lieu of $36 a month now allowed said Ferguson for disability arising from loss of right arm at the elbow, partial deafness from concussion, and the shell wound received by him on April 8, 1864, in the battle of Sabine Cross-Roads, Louisiana.

Mr. KILGORE. Let the report be read in that case.

The report (by Mr. FLICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9767) granting a pension to John S. Ferguson, submit the following report:

Ferguson was a soldier of Company F, Twenty-eighth Iowa Infantry, and was desperately wounded at the battle of Sabine Cross-Roads by a shell that exploded in close proximity to him.

His right arm was lacerated, necessitating amputation thereof above the elbow; he was wounded in the right knee, shot through the left side of the face, blinding left eye and almost wholly destroying the hearing of left ear, and one piece of shell wounded left elbow, injuring the bones of the arm; another piece entered the left side of his neck and is now under the left shoulder blade, causing constant pain so that he carries his arm in a sling and it is rendered almost useless. He is pensioned at $36 per month and now asks for $80 per month.

His claim for total disability was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that he did not require the "constant aid of another person." He can walk about, is unable to dress himself, is a constant sufferer, a physical wreck. Your committee, having carefully examined the evidence submitted and also examined the wounds on the person of the applicant, believe that this is an exceptionally meritorious case and that the beneficiary is entitled to a pension for total disability, and therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "sixty dollars" in the seventh line thereof and inserting "72," and that when so amended said bill pass.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL MESKELL.

Mr. TRACEY. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 17) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Michael Meskell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause the records of the Navy Department to be so amended as to remove the charge of desertion from the service record of Michael Meskell, late a seaman on the United States ship Poconahontas, and to grant an honorable discharge to the said Michael Meskell as of the date of July 30, 1865.

The report (by Mr. DOLLIVER) is as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Michael Meskell, find from the papers submitted that the said Meskell enlisted in the United States Navy on March 20, 1865, and served as an ordinary seaman on board the United States ship Poconahontas. On the arrival of the vessel at New York, in July, Meskell went on shore without leave, with no intention to desert, and before the expiration of twenty-four hours he voluntarily returned to report for duty, but his name having already been recorded as a deserter permission to return to duty was refused him.

The reason assigned by Meskell for his temporary absence from the ship was that his sister and brother, whom he had not seen in many years, had just arrived in New York, and with whom he spent the day, and he states that he had not the least idea that his short absence from the vessel under these circumstances was such a breach of discipline that was to be so severely punished. If he had he would not have gone on shore. It also appears that Meskell exerted every effort to have the stigma hanging over him removed, in which he was supported by a numerous signed petition of the citizens of West Troy, N. Y., all of whom bore testimony as to his good character and worth. Since the pending bill for the relief of Meskell has been under consideration the applicant has died, leaving a large family, eight children, in whose behalf his surviving widow appeals that the charge of desertion may be removed for the benefit of his children. In view of these facts your committee believe that the charge of desertion should be corrected, and we accordingly recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JANE BOSWELL MOORE BRISTOR.

Mr. BAKER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6392) granting a pension to Jane Boswell Moore Bristor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Jane Boswell Moore Bristor, a field-hospital nurse during the late war, at the rate of $25 per month.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6392) granting a pension to Jane Boswell Moore Bristor, submit the following report:

Mrs. Jane Boswell Moore Bristor, of Baltimore, Md., at the commencement of the late war was residing with her mother in Baltimore. They immediately began visiting the hospitals that were improvised in that city, and continued in that work until the battle of Antietam, when they began active operations in the field in visiting field hospitals and caring for the sick and wounded. Their time was divided from this time until the close of the war between nursing in the field hospitals and gathering supplies and valuable donations from the Northern States, taking them to the front in person and distributing them.

Mrs. Bristor was a correspondent for a number of religious and secular periodicals from the Northern States, and by this means great quantities of donations were forwarded to her address in Baltimore, where her residence was turned into a store-house, where articles were prepared and taken to the front and distributed by their own hands.

For days at a time they would be ministering to the sick and wounded of both armies upon the battle-field, unsheltered from the inclement weather that generally followed great battles, sleeping at night in the small tents, that they might continue their work early in the morning.

The exposures incident to all of this work resulted in loss of health to Mrs. Bristor, the acquiring of painful and incurable disease of the kidney, and partial blindness. In their missions of mercy they spent a month at Taylor Hotel Hospital, Winchester, Va., among malignant forms of fever, and among the wounded of Chancellorsville, and a month among the sufferers at Gettysburg, staying upon the field during this time; some three months before Petersburg and on the Appomattox, where Mrs. Bristor was prostrated with fever for some weeks. They spent six months in the field, and especially among the wounded of Cedar Creek, after General Sheridan was in command. After the occupation of Richmond ten weeks were spent in ministering to the sick and wounded soldiers.

All this time they were receiving supplies, and materials were being forwarded to them by charitable associations of the Northern States. They carried mail to and fro, were intrusted with large sums of money by soldiers at the front to convey to a place of safety, when it was expressed in accordance with their directions. During the entire war neither Mrs. Bristor nor her mother was connected with any organization, aid society, commission, or association whatever. They did not receive a dollar for their services from any quarter, nor were they employed at any time by the Government or its agents. The Government furnished them teams at different times, but they paid their entire expenses.

All of these facts are thoroughly established by the very highest authority. Letters are filed vouching for these facts by Rev. J. G. Morris, D. D., a Lutheran minister; Professor Conrad, editor of the Philadelphia Lutheran Observer; Rev. E. J. Drinkhouse, editor of the Methodist Protestant, Baltimore; Rev. Dr. McCabe, corresponding secretary of the mission rooms of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of New York; Rev. William H. Boole, of New York, pastor in the Methodist Episcopal Church; G. A. Griffith, late president of the Maryland United States Christian Mission; Dr. J. W. Chambers, M. D.; Thomas Ople, M. D.; Julius Chisolm, M. D.; Russell Murdock, M. D.; George Ruling, M. D.; H. C. Graham, M. D.; John Dixon, M. D.; also original letters and orders addressed to her while engaged in this service from President Lincoln, Generals Grant, Meade, Hancock, Sheridan, Hooker, Schenck, Smith, Burnside, Wallace, Crook, Emory, Terry, Governor Pierpont, Colonel Strother, Dr. Brock, Chaplain Collins, Rev. P. S. Boyd, Rev. Dr. M. Jilton, Captain Todd, Colonel Shaffer, and many others. All of which clearly establish the facts set forth.

Mrs. Bristor is now in extremely poor health, caused by her army service, as proven by the evidence of the physicians above mentioned, and has lost her property and is in poor financial circumstances, absolutely needing the assistance this pension would grant her.

Your committee recommend that the bill pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. FREDERIKA B. JONES.

Mr. FLOWER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3174) granting a pension to Mrs. Frederika B. Jones.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Frederika B. Jones, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Roger Jones, on the pension-roll, and pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3174) granting a pension to Mrs. Frederika B. Jones, have had the same under consideration, and find that she is the widow of the late Brig. Gen. Roger Jones, who served with great distinction in the late war of the rebellion.

The following letters and extracts from newspapers describe the advancement of this officer on account of his gallantry, especially in the destruction of the arsenal at Harper's Ferry, during the late war:

WAR DEPARTMENT, April 22, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR: I take pleasure in apprising you that in consideration of your very skillful and gallant conduct at Harper's Ferry, I have ordered a commission to be issued to you as assistant quartermaster-general, with the rank of captain.

Lieut. ROGER JONES.

SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 22, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR: I am directed by the President of the United States to communicate to you, and through you to the officers and men under your command at Harper's Ferry armory, the approbation of the Government of your and their judicious conduct there, and to tender you and them the thanks of the Government for the same.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

Lieut. ROGER JONES,
Late Commanding at Harper's Ferry.

CAPT. ROGER JONES, THE HERO OF HARPER'S FERRY.

[Written for The Telegraph.]

In the excitement of the present difficulties I hope the important services of Capt. Roger Jones, the hero of Harper's Ferry, will not be forgotten. In command at Harper's Ferry, one of the most important stations and arsenals in the country, and learning through pickets, that he had thrown out for miles, that a large body of Virginians were coming to attack him, to secure the large number of minie and other muskets that were there, he notified the Government. They did not see proper to re-enforce him. Without orders he made preparation to blow up the building containing the arms, and in fact workshops and all, to defeat the purpose of the secessionists, the capture of the Government arms at that place.

It is now generally admitted that had they secured the arms at Harper's Ferry they would have attacked Washington, first having secured the co-operation of the secessionists of Baltimore and Maryland. At that time Washington was at the mercy of an invading Southern army. There were over twenty thousand stand of the most approved arms at Harper's Ferry at that time. The secessionists at Harper's Ferry were spies on Captain Jones, and every movement of his was watched and reported. He distributed the powder throughout the buildings by a trick. He carried kegs of powder in the chaff-bags of the soldiers, circulating that he was changing the quarters of the soldiers. When his scouts had announced to him that over three thousand Virginians were advancing, and were within 2 miles of the place, he and his little band fired the trains and destroyed the arms and buildings and retreated toward Chambersburg. How effectually he succeeded is well known.

If Captain Jones had acted like the great majority of Southern officers, what an incalculable amount of mischief he would have done. It was expected, as is now positively known, that Harper's Ferry would yield without a struggle and that the arming of the secessionists would be accomplished. Captain Jones is a son of General Jones, formerly Adjutant-General of the Army. His parents and all his relations are Virginians. He is a cousin of Colonel Lee, now in the command of the Virginia forces.

CARLISLE BARRACKS, PA., April 20, 1861.

SIR: Immediately after finishing my dispatch of the night of the 19th instant I received positive and reliable information that 2,500 or 3,000 State troops would reach Harper's Ferry in two hours from Winchester, and that the troops from Halltown, increased to 300 men, were advancing and were at that time (few minutes after 10 o'clock) within twenty minutes' march of the Ferry.

Under these circumstances I decided the time had arrived to carry out my determination as expressed in the dispatch above referred to, and accordingly gave the order to apply the torch. In three minutes or less both of the arsenal buildings, containing nearly 15,000 arms, together with the carpenter's shop, which was at the upper end of a long and connected series of workshops of the armory proper, were in a complete blaze.

There is every reason for believing the destruction was complete.

After firing the buildings I withdrew my command, marching all night, and arrived here at 2.30 p. m. yesterday, where I shall await orders. Four men were missing on leaving the armory and two deserted during the night.

Respectfully, I am, sir, your obedient servant,

R. JONES,

First Lieutenant R. M. Eiflemen, Commanding Department Recruits.

THE ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
Headquarters of the Army, Washington, D. C.

A copy respectfully furnished the Assistant Adjutant-General, headquarters of the Army, New York.

THE UNITED STATES ARMORY AT HARPER'S FERRY DESTROYED.

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1861.

General Scott has just received a telegraphic dispatch from Captain King'sbury, stating that he had burned the armory buildings, the troops having evacuated and marched into Maryland.

There were 15,000 stand of arms in the armory, which were all destroyed. There was a large force from Virginia on their way to seize the armory, in order to get possession of the arms. This will be a sad disappointment to the Virginia troops, who confidently expected to get possession of these arms.

General Scott received a dispatch at 2 p. m. to-day dated Chambersburg, 19th instant, from the commander of the arsenal at Harper's Ferry, as follows:

"Finding my position untenable, shortly after 10 o'clock last night I destroyed the arsenal, containing 15,000 stand of arms, and burned up the armory building proper, and under cover of the night withdrew my command, forty in number, almost in the presence of 2,500 or 3,000 troops. This was accomplished with but four casualties. I believe the destruction was complete. I will await orders at Carlisle."

"R. JONES, Captain Commanding."

CARLISLE, PA., April 19, 1861.

Lieutenant Jones, late in command at Harper's Ferry, arrived here with his command of forty-three men at 3 p. m. to-day.

Lieutenant Jones, having been advised that a force of 2,500 troops had been ordered by Governor Letcher to take possession of Harper's Ferry, and finding his position untenable, under direction of the War Department, destroyed all the munitions of war, armory, arsenal, and all the buildings. He withdrew his command under the cover of night, and almost in the presence of 2,500 troops. He lost three men.

Fifteen thousand stand of arms were destroyed.

The command made a forced march of 30 miles last night from Harper's Ferry to Hagerstown, in Maryland.

Lieutenant Jones and command looked much worn and fatigued. They were most enthusiastically received by our entire population.

PHILADELPHIA, April 19, 1861.

A dispatch received here from Washington says all the arms that were at Harper's Ferry were burned in a pile.

[Commercial Advertiser, New York, April 20, 1861.]

THE HARPER'S FERRY AFFAIR.

The exciting report was received on Friday that the Government buildings at Harper's Ferry had been destroyed. Later dispatches furnish the following facts:

A DISPATCH FROM THE OFFICER IN COMMAND.

General Scott received a dispatch dated Chambersburg, 19th instant, from the commander of the arsenal at Harper's Ferry, as follows:

"Finding my position untenable, shortly after 10 o'clock last night I destroyed the arsenal, containing 15,000 stands of arms, and burned up the armory building proper, and under cover of the night withdrew my command, 40 in number, almost in the presence of 2,500 or 3,000 troops. This was accomplished with but four casualties. I believe the destruction was complete."

"I will await orders at Carlisle."

"R. JONES, Captain Commanding."

THE REASON OF IT.

Lieutenant Jones, late in command at Harper's Ferry, arrived at Carlisle, with his command of 43 men, at 3 p. m. on Friday.

Lieutenant Jones, having been advised that a force of 2,500 troops had been ordered by Governor Letcher to take possession of Harper's Ferry and finding his position untenable, under directions of the War Department, destroyed all the munitions of war, armory, arsenal, and all the buildings. He withdrew his command under the cover of night and almost in the presence of 2,500 troops. He lost three men.

Fifteen thousand stand of arms were destroyed.

The command made a forced march of 30 miles last night from Harper's Ferry to Hagerstown, in Maryland.

Lieutenant Jones and command look much worn and fatigued. They were most enthusiastically received by our entire population.

LIEUTENANT JONES'S ACCOUNT.

He states that, hearing on Thursday that six hundred Virginians were approaching by the Winchester road to seize the arsenal, they put piles of powder in straw in all the buildings and waited quietly the approach of the picket guard, who gave the alarm, and the garrison set on fire the out-houses, carpenter-shop, and powder fuses, and then began to retreat.

The citizens of Harper's Ferry, who were evidently in league with the party advancing to seize the arsenal, were instantly in arms, pursued, fired, and killed two regulars. Two others deserted before the troops reached Hagerstown. They marched all night, missed the railroad train at Hagerstown, and took omnibuses to Chambersburg on Friday.

As the Federal troops rushed across the Potomac bridge at Harper's Ferry the people rushed in the arsenal. Lieutenant Jones believes that large numbers perished by the explosion. Repeated explosions occurred, and he saw a light of the burning buildings for many miles.

Lieutenant Jones, who has arrived from Harper's Ferry, is a son of the late Adjutant-General Jones, of the United States Army.

The troops are exhausted by the night march. They were fed by the people of Chambersburg, and were received with loud cheers along the route to Carlisle.

In view of the gallantry and very distinguished services of General Jones, the committee recommend that this bill do pass.

Mr. FLOWER. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill amended so as to read: "granting a pension of $50 a month."

Mr. MORELL. I would like to have that bill read again.

Mr. FLOWER. I will say that the bill was read the day before yesterday. It is the bill granting a pension to the widow of Brig. Gen. Roger Jones.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. This bill was referred to the Committee on Pensions, which fixed the amount at $30 a month. The chairman of the committee assents to the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that Mrs. Jones be pensioned at the rate of $50 a month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of this bill and that it be considered in the House at this time; and he also asks that the bill shall be amended so as to read: "Pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month." Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FAYETTE ADAMS.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6908) to amend the record of Fayette Adams, Company I, Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the record of Fayette Adams, of Company I, Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, having had under consideration House bill 6908, beg leave to report that the evidence in this case shows that Fayette Adams enlisted in Company I, Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, September 10, 1861, and was a good soldier until February 23, 1863, when, at the solicitation of a comrade, he deserted; said soldier was a mere youth, between sixteen and seventeen years of age, and did not fully comprehend the grave offense he committed by desertion; that upon seeing the proclamation of Abraham Lincoln and learning the serious offense, he immediately re-enlisted in Company D, Ninth Iowa Cavalry, on July 18, 1863, and served until March 23, 1866, when he was mustered out with an honorable discharge. This man served four years and two months as a soldier in the Union Army and was absent as a deserter fifty-four days over four months, the time allowed by the general law for the removal of the charge of desertion.

In consideration of his long service and of his youth and inexperience at the time he deserted, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON GRIGSBY.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9545) granting a pension to Washington Grigsby.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Washington Grigsby, dependent father of Jefferson Grigsby, late of Company B, Twelfth United States Colored Troops.

The report (by Mr. LEWIS) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9545) granting a pension to Washington Grigsby, submit the following report:

Washington Grigsby is the father of Jefferson Grigsby, who enlisted in Company B, Twelfth Regiment United States Colored Infantry, July 31, 1863, and died of chronic diarrhea in hospital at Nashville, Tenn., February 5, 1865.

The soldier left surviving him a widow, who died in February, 1872, but no children. Because of this fact the father has no title under the general law; hence the rejection of his claim by the Pension Office.

Claimant never owned any property, and being now about one hundred years old is utterly unable to earn a support, being maintained by the charity of his neighbors. Relief, if any, must soon come.

Your committee are of opinion that the bill should be passed without delay, and therefore return the same with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

DUNCAN D. CAMERON.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11587) for the relief of Duncan D. Cameron, late first lieutenant Ninth United States Colored Troops.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the military record of Duncan D. Cameron, late first lieutenant Ninth United States Colored Troops, by removing therefrom the entry of dismissal from the United States service March 27, 1865, for absence without leave, and granting him an honorable discharge as of that date; but nothing herein contained shall in any way entitle him to additional pay or allowance on account of such service.

The report (by Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11587) for the relief of Duncan D. Cameron, late first lieutenant Ninth United States Colored Troops, submit the following report:

Duncan D. Cameron entered the service August 26, 1862, as private in the sixth company, New York Sharpshooters, and was discharged therefrom November 10, 1864, to accept promotion in colored troops. He was mustered in as first lieutenant, Ninth Regiment, United States Colored Troops, November 29, 1864, and on January 31, 1865, tendered his resignation on the ground that he may be enabled to go home to settle the affairs of his father, who had died without will or other disposition of his property, which was encumbered to some extent and required immediate attention. He was the oldest male representative of the family, and therefore deemed it his duty to take charge of the affairs and make the best arrangements possible for the future comfort and welfare of his mother and the younger members of the family.

His resignation, however, was not accepted, but instead he was granted leave of absence for thirty days from February 9, 1865. At the time of his departure home under this leave his health was much impaired by reason of the hardships and exposure of the service, and about February 20, 1865, he became bed-fast by reason of malarial fever and inflammatory rheumatism, from which disease he did not recover until late in the following summer, which was very clearly shown by the testimony of his neighbors, persons of the highest character. On February 28, 1865, and before his leave of absence had expired, and while on his sick-bed, Cameron again tendered his resignation, and forwarded the same from Albany, N. Y.

The indorsement upon the resignation by the commanding officer of the regiment, who was evidently not friendly inclined toward Cameron, to the effect that its acceptance would benefit the service, was not borne out by the previous record of the officer. It nevertheless had its effect, as is apparent by the action of the brigade commander, who approved the said resignation only to be disapproved by the division and corps commanders.

The regimental commander, not satisfied with the result, called the attention of the Adjutant-General of the Army to Lieutenant Cameron's apparently unauthorized absence after March 11, 1865, and requested that the latter be ordered before the military commission at Washington, D. C., for trial.

From the records of the War Department it would further appear that Lieutenant Cameron was cited to appear before said commission, but failing to do so he was dismissed the service to date from March 27, 1865, for absence without leave.

Lieutenant Cameron during the period intervening between February 20 and March 27, 1865, was, as stated heretofore, confined to his bed with malarial fever and inflammatory rheumatism. He makes oath that he never heard of the action taken upon the tender of his resignation mailed from Albany, N. Y., February 28, 1865; that he never received a summons to appear before the military commission at Washington, D. C., and in fact knew nothing of any proceedings before said commission until about May 1, 1865, when he noticed his name in the Army and Navy Journal, in a list of those who had been dismissed "for absence without leave."

The proposed beneficiary is a man of high standing in the community in which he resides and of unimpeachable character. The fact of his severe and protracted illness after his arrival home under his leave of absence is clearly shown by the evidence on file. He had every reason to believe that his second resignation would be accepted, and while awaiting results and prostrated from sickness contracted in the service, without any notice whatever, his heretofore good record as a soldier and officer was stained by the finding of a military commission before whom he could not appear in his defense.

Your committee are of opinion that the facts in the case warrant favorable action on Lieutenant Cameron's request, and therefore return the accompanying bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH DODGE.

Mr. YODER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11421) granting a pension to Elizabeth Dodge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Dodge, an army nurse, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, subject to the rules and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. YODER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11421) granting a pension to Elizabeth Dodge, submit the following report:

Elizabeth Dodge served for fifteen months as nurse at the Chester Street Hospital at Philadelphia, Pa., under the charge of Thomas H. Bache, surgeon, United States Army. She proved herself so efficient and intelligent in the performance of her duties that she received the hearty and most complimentary indorsement of her superiors for appointment as matron at the Naval Asylum Hospital permanently located in that city.

She is now over seventy-two years of age, has no property or income except such as is derived from her own labor, which, by reason of infirmities of age, is inadequate for comfortable support.

The case comes clearly within a long line of precedents; wherefore your committee report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ALMOND C. WALTERS.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9877) directing the Secretary of War to issue an honorable discharge to Almond C. Walters.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to issue an honorable discharge from the service of the United States to Almond C. Walters, late a member of Company E, One hundred and sixth New York Infantry, and Company C, One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Infantry, said honorable discharge to date from the day on which the said Almond C. Walters' first service terminated, and up to which he received pay. This act shall entitle the said Almond C. Walters to all rights and privileges heretofore withheld by reason of the failure to receive such discharge.

The report (by Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9877) directing the Secretary of War to issue an honorable discharge to Almond C. Walters, have considered the same and respectfully report:

Almond C. Walters enlisted as a private of Company E, One hundred and first New York Infantry Volunteers, December 10, 1861, to serve three years. He was wounded at the second battle of Bull Run, taken to hospital and furloughed to go home. Being a minor at time of enlistment, he was taken from the service by writ of habeas corpus.

In consequence he is borne on the rolls as a deserter. On September 2, 1864, he again enlisted in Company C, One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Infantry, and served faithfully therein until mustered out July 1, 1865, as first sergeant. These facts are obtained from the records in the War Department.

In consideration of the above state of facts the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES FLETCHER.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4426) for the relief of Charles Fletcher, alias James H. Mitchell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the charge of desertion standing against Charles Fletcher, who served under the name of James H. Mitchell as a private in Company H, Ninety-fifth Regiment of New York State Infantry Volunteers, is hereby removed, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to discharge the said soldier as of the date to which said company and regiment were paid on their discharge.

The report (by Mr. CAREY) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4426) for the relief of Charles Fletcher, alias James H. Mitchell, having considered the same, respectfully report:

The evidence offered shows that Charles Fletcher, under the name of James H. Mitchell, was mustered in as a private of Company H, Ninety-fifth New York Volunteers, January 7, 1865, to serve three years, and was reported as deserted June 15, 1865, from Ball's Cross-Roads, Virginia. The command was mustered out of service one month later.

This soldier says he did not intend to desert, but was broken down in health, and, being sick, he left the command at Arlington and returned to his home in the District of Columbia, and that when he was convalescent he found that his company had been mustered out of service and disbanded. The soldier did not absent himself until after the war was over. The evidence offered in the case is printed herewith and made a part of this report.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Case of Charles Fletcher, alias James H. Mitchell, late private Company H, Ninety-fifth New York Volunteers.

RECORD AND PENSION DIVISION, February 27, 1890.

The records show that James H. Mitchell was enrolled and mustered in as a private of Company H, Ninety-fifth New York Volunteers, at Tarrytown, N. Y., January 7, 1865, to serve three years, and appears present for duty until June 15, 1865, when he deserted from Ball's Cross-Roads, Virginia.

He did not rejoin his command up to its muster-out on July 16, 1865, nor report his whereabouts or the cause of his absence to the proper military authorities of the United States.

His original application was returned to him (through his attorney) on June 27, 1889 with the information that his case was not covered by the act of March 2, 1889 (his total service prior to May 1, 1865, amounting to a less period than six months).

As no new evidence has been presented (he filed none in support of his original claim) the soldier's status has not since been changed.
Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Captain and Assistant Surgeon, U. S. Army.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington, ss:

Francis C. Tucker, of lawful age, being duly sworn, deposes that he resides at 2530 P street, northwest, Washington, D. C., and has all his life known the applicant, Charles Fletcher, and in the fall of 1864 affiant gave Fletcher money to go to New York and enlist in the Army.

A short time thereafter he received a package of $250 from Tarrytown, N. Y., and having told the express agent he expected money from Charles Fletcher, the same was withheld, because sent by James H. Mitchell, until correspondence revealed the fact that they were one and the same person.

That affiant thereafter learned that Fletcher had enlisted in Company H, Ninety-fifth New York Volunteer Infantry, and learning about the 1st of July, 1865, that said regiment was encamped just across the river, he visited claimant and found him there serving in said company and regiment, under the name of James H. Mitchell.

That applicant came to the city to visit his friends the 4th of July, and was taken sick and was unable to rejoin his regiment prior to their taking transportation to New York; and that he has no interest in the application.

FRANCIS C. TUCKER.

Witness:

THOS. J. STALEY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 21st day of June, 1899, and I further certify that I have no interest in this application.

[SEAL.]

THOMAS J. STALEY, Notary Public.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington, ss:

Charles Fletcher, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is the identical person who enlisted and served in Company H, Ninety-fifth Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, under the name of James H. Mitchell.

That from his birth to the time of his enlistment he resided in the said District of Columbia, and his parents and friends being averse to his going in the Army, he went to Tarrytown, N. Y., and there, about December, 1864, he enlisted in said company and regiment.

That he served faithfully till the close of the war, and while on the march home and while said regiment was at Arlington Heights, Virginia, just across the river from the city, he came over to visit his friends.

That his health was very much broken with the fatigues of the spring campaign and rapid march returning and he was taken ill and while ill his regiment moved, and when convalescent he learned that they had been paid off and disbanded.

That he fully intended to serve out his full period of enlistment and would have done so had he not been prevented as above stated and set forth, and he asks, in view of the premises, that he be now honorably discharged, and any and all charges standing against him be removed and canceled.

(On the margin:) The deponent further says that none of the officers or enlisted men in said regiment know him by any other name than James H. Mitchell.

CHAS. FLETCHER.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Subscribed and sworn to before me the 21st day of June, 1899, and I further certify that I have no interest in this application. I further certify that the marginal note was made before signing.

[SEAL.]

WILLIAM W. MOFFETT, Notary Public.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington, ss:

In the matter of the application of Charles Fletcher, alias James H. Mitchell, for removal of charge of desertion, personally appeared Charles Fletcher, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that within a few days after his enlistment he joined his company, the same being Company H, Ninety-fifth Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, and took part with them in the battles of Dabney's Mills, Hatcher's Run, and Five Forks.

That the weather was very bad and stormy during the entire spring campaign; that he was but sixteen years of age, and the exposure and fatigue brought on piles and rheumatism, which were aggravated by the rapid march back to Washington.

That he has held no correspondence with either officers or men of his company and does not know their whereabouts.

That when he obtained leave to visit his family in this city he fully intended to return to duty on the day following, and would have done so had he not been taken down with fever.

That there was no other duty remaining to be done by him except to proceed to New York, be mustered out and to receive his pay.

CHARLES FLETCHER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 24th day of March, 1899.

N. D. ADAMS, Notary Public.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MATILDA M. HARRIMAN.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10294) granting a pension to Matilda M. Harriman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Matilda M. Harriman, widow of William Harriman, late of Company F, One hundred and seventieth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. YODER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10294) granting a pension to Matilda M. Harriman, submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of William Harriman, a member of Company F, One hundred and seventieth Ohio National Guard, who enlisted in the hundred days' service May 14, 1864, and was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability June 22, 1864.

The claim was rejected in the Pension Bureau on the ground that the soldier's fatal disease, consumption (soldier having died April 9, 1865), existed prior to enlistment, and the claim is not embraced in the law passed June 27, 1890, as the soldier served less than ninety days.

Miles J. Saunders, of Harrison County, Ohio, late colonel commanding the One hundred and seventieth Ohio Volunteers, the regiment in which said soldier served, testifies that he was well acquainted with the soldier, and that while he was in said service and in the line of his duty as a soldier, at a place called North Mountain, in the State of Virginia, he contracted a severe cold which settled on his lungs and prevented him from performing military duty; that the disease was brought on by exposure to wet and cold weather and fatigue of camp life; that he knows if said soldier had had proper care at the time he contracted said cold he would have survived. He further testifies that he recommended his discharge after the cold had settled on his lungs.

Dr. James Stone, a resident of Harrison County, Ohio, testified in April, 1866, that he was personally acquainted with the said soldier before his enlistment and that he is satisfied that the disease of which soldier died was contracted and brought on by exposure during his army service, and that his lungs were not diseased before he enlisted, but that the exposure of camp life was the cause of his death.

John H. Hammond, a comrade of said soldier in the same company, testifies that soldier contracted a severe cold at North Mountain, Virginia, which settled on his lungs and incapacitated him for active duty. That at the date of his enlistment the said soldier was in good health and as free from disease as men generally are.

Your committee believe that the widow should be pensioned and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN D. BAGBY.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 12013) to pension John D. Bagley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and restrictions of the pension laws, the name of John D. Bagley, who was a private in Capt. Japhet A. Ball's independent mounted company, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, during the Black Hawk war.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12013) granting a pension to John D. Bagby, have considered the same and report as follows:

The claimant, who resides at Marion, Kans., was a private in Capt. Japhet A. Ball's Company of Illinois Volunteers, and served from April 21, 1832, to May 28, 1832, in the Black Hawk war. He is now seventy-six years old and so crippled and feeble as to be unable to perform any manual labor. He has been badly crippled for sixteen years.

Mr. Bagby has no property or income from which to support himself and aged wife, and he stands in great need of the pension prayed for. His standing in the community in which he resides is first class, and the facts above recited are vouched for by prominent citizens.

The case seems an exceptionally meritorious one and your committee think it would be an act of simple justice to pass the bill, and that action is respectfully recommended. Amend by spelling the claimant's surname Bagby.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to correspond with the change in the bill.

CORNELIUS M'LEAN.

Mr. LANSING. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 2375) to correct the military record of Lieut. Cornelius McLean.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to correct the military record of Lieut. Cornelius McLean, late of Company G, Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, by removing therefrom the charge of dishonorable dismissal "for absence without leave and failing to file the necessary surgeon's certificate of disability, and to make reports to his regiment as required by the regulations of the War Department," and to grant said Lieutenant McLean an honorable discharge from the military service as of the date of July 7, 1864, and that he be paid whatever compensation may be due him up to that date.

The report (by Mr. LANSING) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2375) to correct the military record of Lieut. Cornelius McLean, having considered the same, respectfully report:

That Lieut. Cornelius McLean was in the hospital at Annapolis, Md., being treated for a disease contracted in the service, on the 7th of July, 1864. While so in hospital the commanding officer of his regiment, the Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, requested that Lieutenant McLean be dismissed the service for continued absence and failure to report.

Pursuant to such request, Lieutenant McLean was summarily dismissed the service without any knowledge of such action on the part of his officers. On the same day he was examined by the medical board at Annapolis, who reported him unfit for duty and recommended his honorable discharge for disability. Thus it appears from the records of the War Department this officer was dishonorably discharged for a matter that was beyond his control. He was disgraced for being sick. Your committee think he should be relieved. The facts are fully set forth in the report from the War Department, herewith submitted.

Your committee recommend the bill be amended by striking out the words commencing in line 12 of the bill: "and that he be paid whatever compensation may be due him up to that date," and recommend that the bill so amended do pass.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 17, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith letter of Col. C. McLean, dated the 18th ultimo, relative to his dismissal from service as second lieutenant, Company G, Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, referred to the Department by Hon. W. W. Morrow, House of Representatives, the 24th ultimo, for the military record of the officer, with view to introducing a bill for his relief, and to report as follows:

The records of this office show that Cornelius McLean served originally as second lieutenant, Company C, Forty-second New York Volunteers, but there is no muster-in roll of him in that grade and regiment on file.

His name is first taken up on the company return for March, 1862. Roll of company for March and April, 1862, reports him present; and the muster-out roll states that he was mustered in as second lieutenant April 30, 1862. He is reported present with company from April 30, 1862, to June 19, 1862, when he ten-tered his resignation as second lieutenant on account of physical disability and was honorably discharged thereon June 20, 1862, in special orders, Army of the Potomac.

About six months later (December 8, 1863) he enlisted at New York City for the Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers (enlistment papers on file), but his name is not taken up on the rolls of any company of that regiment until the roll for January and February, 1864.

His name first appears on the morning reports of Company G, Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, for February 12, 1864, with remark: "Sergeant; gained from detached service;" and on same, February 13, 1864, "Sergeant; promoted to second lieutenant, in charge of company."

He was mustered in as second lieutenant Company G, said regiment, February 12, 1864, and from February 13, 1864, to March 12, 1864, is reported "present, sick," and "sick in quarters."

March 9, 1864, upon the recommendation of the medical director of the Second Army Corps, Lieutenant McLean was directed in special orders from corps headquarters to proceed to Washington and report for treatment to Surg. R. O. Abbott.

He entered Seminary (officers') General Hospital, Georgetown, D. C., March 14, 1864, with rheumatism and was granted leave of absence for twenty days on surgeon's certificate of disability with permission to proceed to New York by special orders of April 12, 1864, Department of Washington.

He was readmitted to same hospital May 3, 1864; transferred to general hospital, Annapolis, Md., May 4, 1864; entered division No. 1, Officers' General Hospital, Annapolis, with debility, May 7, 1864; was examined by the medical board at Annapolis, Md., May 11, 1864, and by said board recommended that "he remain in hospital a few days for observation."

On June 27, 1864, the commanding officer Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers requested that Lieutenant McLean "be dismissed the service for continued absence and failure to report as required by existing orders. Lieutenant McLean was ordered to Washington in February, 1864, and has been absent since without reporting his station or condition. I hear of him in New York City apparently fit for duty."

Thereupon he was dishonorably dismissed the service July 7, 1864, in special orders from this office "for absence without leave and failing to file the necessary surgeon's certificate of disability, and make reports to his regiment, as required by the regulations of the War Department."

July 7, 1864 (date of dismissal), he was re-examined by the medical board at Annapolis, which found the officer suffering from rheumatic pericarditis, and that he would not be fit for active duty in the field again," and recommended that he be discharged the service.

The recommendation of the board was received at this office July 8, 1864, and the president of the board advised, July 12, 1864, that Lieutenant McLean had been dismissed the service.

July 19, 1864, Asst. Surg. William S. Ely, treasurer Officers' General Hospital, Annapolis, Md., reported that Lieutenant McLean, who had received pay for the month of June, 1864, in hospital, stated that he had made such disposition of his funds as to be unable to settle his board account by cash.

July 22, 1864, the Paymaster-General was directed to stop the pay of Lieutenant McLean until he had settled his board account with the hospital, which stoppage has never been removed.

Lieutenant McLean was last paid to include June 30, 1864, at Officers' Hospital, Annapolis, Md.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The amendment recommended by the committee in the report was agreed to.

Mr. LANSING moved to amend by adding at the end of the bill the following: "Provided no pay or allowance shall be deemed authorized by this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. SUSAN YOUNG.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5517) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Young.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan Young, widow of the late Samuel Young, late captain of the Independent Scouts of West Virginia.

The report (by Mr. CRAIG) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5517) granting a pension to Susan Young, submit the following report:

Susan Young is the widow of Samuel Young, who was commissioned by the State of West Virginia as captain in the Pocahontas County State Guards, August 29, 1864, joined for service September 1, 1864, and discharged June 10, 1865. About the 23d of October, 1864, with twenty-eight or thirty men, on a scout in the enemy's country at or near Oldfield Fork of Elk, Virginia, he received a pistol-shot wound in his hand. The enemy was believed to be present or in near neighborhood.

After dark an alarm occurred and there was considerable confusion and firing by claimant's men. The testimony of comrades shows that he was shot; that he was acting, as he believed, against the enemy. None were seen, but that he was shot as aforesaid at the time.

There is further testimony from William Orvens, M. D., late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, that Rev. Samuel Young called on him for consultation about an injury to his hand, which he stated was received while in the service.

"It presented the peculiar appearance of elevated erratic edges or pouting of the margins of the ulcer. It suggested the presence of some foreign body in the wound, which it was recommended should be removed by an operation. This he declined, saying his physician at home could do that. I have learned Mr. Young died a year or two later of cancerous affection arising in connection with his wound."

Dr. J. W. Ely says:

"I also lived a neighbor to him for about three years. I knew he was afflicted with a very sore hand, and I also observed his physical condition was very much impaired. I made a careful examination of his hand on October 13, 1864, which I found to be malignant cancer caused by a gunshot wound during the late war. I am confident that the cancer was caused from the wound, etc. I treated Rev. Mr. Young after October 13, 1864, until his death."

Mr. Young died November 2, 1865.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH A. BLAIR.

Mr. PETERS. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2542) pensioning Joseph A. Blair.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph A. Blair, late of Company C, Seventh Kentucky Cavalry, now of Lyons, Kans.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2542) pensioning Joseph A. Blair, submit the following report:

It appears from the testimony that the claimant was enlisted in Company C, Seventh Kentucky Cavalry, on or about July, 1862; that while in the discharge of his duty as a soldier, with his command at Sharpsburgh, Ky., he received a wound from a rebel sympathizer which disabled him for the performance of military duty; therefore he was never regularly mustered into the United States service.

James P. Ashley, captain of claimant's company, makes affidavit that he is personally and well acquainted with claimant, who enlisted in his company, but was never mustered in for the reason that, soon after enlistment, claimant, with two other comrades, was detailed to go to a rebel sympathizer's house near East Union, Ky., and cause him to take the oath of allegiance, but the said sympathizer resisted and threw an ax from the head of the stairs striking claimant in the face, cutting through his nose, so disabling him that he was never again fit for duty. William H. Hopkins and W. H. Howe make affidavit substantially to the same facts.

From the evidence submitted in this case it appears to your committee that the claimant was in line of duty in obedience to the command of his superior officer, and in the performance of the duty of a regularly mustered soldier when he received his disability, therefore should not be deprived on account of technicality of muster-in.

Your committee report the claim favorably and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORRIN DAY.

Mr. RUSSELL. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 11604) granting pension to Orrin Day.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Orrin Day, late of Company A, Third United States Artillery, with Capt. Thomas Childs, in the Florida war, 1832.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11604) granting a pension to Orrin Day, have considered the same and report as follows:

Orrin Day was a sergeant in Battery A, Third United States Artillery, and served from June 30, 1832, to June 30, 1837. He was discharged at Fort King, East Florida, where he had been rendering service in the Florida Indian war.

He filed an application in the Pension Bureau on the 16th of July, 1890, declaring that while in said service he incurred a rupture from lifting cannon and baggage wagons that had become stuck in the mud. This claim he is unable to establish, however, because he can not, through lapse of time, find any one who served with him and knew the facts.

Mr. Day is now seventy-eight years old, wholly without means of support, and unable to perform manual labor. He is in great need of immediate assistance. The claimant's condition is fully shown by the testimony of George Leavens, John Waldo, and Simon S. Waldo, citizens of Windham, Conn.

Your committee believe the case to be a just one, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES EWING.

Mr. BLISS. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9423) for relief of Charles Ewing.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Ewing, late a member of Company D, Twelfth New York Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9423) granting a pension to Charles Ewing, submit the following report:

The claimant, Charles Ewing, served nearly three years in Company D, Twelfth New York Cavalry. He filed a claim for pension April 23, 1897, alleging rupture of the abdomen and nervous prostration. The claim was rejected by the Department because he could not prove that this disability originated in the service. This the claimant could not prove for the following reason: While on duty with his company at or near Kingston, N. C., in the month of April, 1865, he was detailed to carry an order by General Schofield, who was then engaging the enemy. He was ordered to urge his horse to the utmost. Once, while so riding and crossing a small bridge, his horse broke through the bridge, falling and throwing him headlong upon the bridge. By this accident he received a rupture of the "testicles" and abdomen of a very serious nature, and also straining the cords of his back and neck.

He avers that he did not place himself under the surgeon's care for fear of the severe operations they would perform upon him; and, it being near the close of the war, he remained with his company, doctoring himself, and was shortly after mustered out with his company. He has ample proof of the existence of disabilities from the physicians who have treated him from the year 1865 to the present time; also that of the examining board, who rate him as one-half disabled; also many of his neighbors, who have known him ever since the war, that he has never been able to do more than one-quarter of a man's work, and that he has always been placed at a great disadvantage in a struggle for a living, and that he is now in a dependent condition, sixty-five years of age, and largely depending upon his aged wife, who does washing and laundry work.

He has always been a man of good habits, was a good and true soldier, and your committee, believing this a very meritorious claim, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE S. HOWARD.

Mr. FLOWER. I ask the House to consider at this time the bill (H. R. 3080) granting a pension to George S. Howard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George S. Howard, late a private in Company E, Twentieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3080) granting a pension to George S. Howard, submit the following report:

Claimant enlisted as a private in Company E, Twentieth Ohio Infantry, April 17, 1861. Discharged August 18, 1861. Made application for pension in 1883, alleging that he contracted chronic diarrhea while in line of duty during campaign in Virginia about July 1, 1861; that he was treated in regimental hospital for said disease. Surgeon-General reports that there are no regimental hospital reports on file for the Twentieth Ohio previous to October, 1861. There are no reports of the company to which claimant belonged on file in the Adjutant-General's Office except muster-in and muster-out rolls, therefore claimant is unable to furnish any record of disability.

Two comrades belonging to claimant's company and regiment testify that claimant contracted chronic diarrhoea at near Burton Station, Va.; that he was left sick at Battery Knob, Va.; that he was continuously sick with said disease until mustered out at expiration of service, and, further, that prior to about July 1 claimant was sound and in good health. Two witnesses testify that they were near neighbors to claimant prior to his enlistment, and that he was a sound and healthy man, that when he returned home after discharge he had chronic diarrhoea, which often confined him to his bed, and that the said disability continued with claimant up to the time when he went West, which was in 1870.

Several witnesses testify to the continuation of claimant's disability from 1870 to the present time. Dr. Kirby, a practicing physician in the State of Iowa, testifies that he has treated claimant for chronic diarrhoea; also, Dr. Matthews makes affidavit that he has several times given claimant treatment for said disability. Notwithstanding the absence of hospital record in this case, your committee are of the opinion that there is merit in it; while the testimony does not come up to the standard required at the Pension Office as to incurrence, that fact being established by two comrades, and continuous disability since discharge warrants your committee in making favorable report; therefore we recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WARREN STAMP.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5537) for the relief of Warren Stamp.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing on record against Warren Stamp, late a private in Company I, One hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. CAREY) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House bill 5537, entitled "A bill for the relief of Warren Stamp," have had the same under consideration, and report it to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

The committee in making this report are controlled by the following reasons: The records show that this soldier was enrolled on January 14, 1862, a private of Company I, One hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, to serve three years, and served with his command until he deserted on October 22, 1862, at Loudoun Heights, Virginia.

The records further show that the said Warren Stamp, under the name of John W. Thompson, was enrolled on February 26, 1864, a private in Company G, Second Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, to serve three years, and served faithfully with this organization until mustered out with it September 11, 1865.

It has been made apparent to the committee that the cause of the desertion of the said Warren Stamp was the fact that, having struck an officer, he was under arrest, and that, fearing he would be court-martialed and dealt with severely, he left the regiment in which he had originally enlisted and entered the service under another name. The cause of striking the officer was that he was struck with a sword by the officer because of some alleged misconduct on his part.

It has been further made apparent that at the time of the enlistment of the said Warren Stamp he was only fifteen years of age, and in consequence could hardly realize the penalties which would ensue to him by reason of his having deserted the service of his country.

Under date of April 25, 1866, the said Warren Stamp applied to the War Department for the removal of the charge of desertion against him. His request could not be complied with in consequence of the provisions of section 3 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1869, which provides that if the desertion exceeds the period of four months before the second enlistment the charge of desertion can not be removed by the Department.

In view of the fact that the said Warren Stamp was so very young at the time of his desertion, and that he afterwards faithfully served in the Union Army until after the end of the war, to wit, September 11, 1865, the committee see no reason why the charge of desertion on the records of the War Department should not be removed and an honorable discharge issued to him.

The committee herewith append to this report a statement of facts submitted by the War Department bearing upon this case of the date of March 22, 1890.

Case of Warren Stamp, late private Company I, One hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, alias John W. Thompson, late private Company G, Second Ohio Cavalry Volunteers. (In violation of twenty-second, now fiftieth, Article of War.)

RECORD AND PENSION DIVISION, March 26, 1890.

Warren Stamp was enrolled on January 14, 1862, a private of Company I, One hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, to serve three years, and served with his command until he deserted on October 22, 1862, from Loudoun Heights, Va.

Under the name of John W. Thompson he was enrolled on February 26, 1864, a private in Company G, Second Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, to serve three years, and served faithfully with this organization until mustered out with it on September 11, 1865.

Warren Stamp, under date of April 25, 1866, applied for removal of the charge of desertion against him, and testified that the reason for his desertion was his fear of being arraigned before a court-martial, he being at the time of his desertion under arrest for having struck his superior officer who had first struck him with his sword; that he was at the time of his enlistment only fifteen years of age; he afterwards enlisted in Company G, Second Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, under the name of John W. Thompson.

His enlistment in the Second Ohio Cavalry Volunteers while a deserter from the One hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers was in violation of the twenty-second (now fiftieth) Article of War; and as such absence in desertion before his subsequent enlistment exceeded the period of four months, the provisions of section 3, act of Congress approved March 2, 1869, prohibit favorable action on his application by the War Department, and his application was accordingly rejected.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Captain and Assistant Surgeon, U. S. Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

EMMA FULTON.

Mr. TRACEY. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 9019) granting a pension to Emma Fulton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emma Fulton, widow of George Fulton, late a member of Company C, Fifth Michigan Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9019) granting a pension to Emma Fulton, submit the following report:

Claimant is the widow of George Fulton, late private Company C, Fifth Michigan Cavalry, with which he served nearly three years, and who died July 1, 1877. The soldier was pensioned for injuries received in action at the battle of Cedar Creek, Virginia, October 19, 1864. This injury was caused by his horse falling upon him, breaking three ribs and contusion of chest and left side, right knee, hip, and thigh. For these injuries he was discharged from the service. The surgeon's certificate cites him as crippled and forever unfit for further service.

The soldier's death was caused in the following manner: While at work in the field, he being a farmer, his injured leg was fractured by an accident, but from the fact of the previous injury the bones had become weak, unhealthy, and diseased, and would not heal, and his leg was amputated, and from the debilitated condition, caused by his former injuries, as shown by the surgeons who attended him, death resulted. Of this there is ample and uncontradicted proof.

The widow's claim was rejected upon the ground that the latter injury, breaking of his leg, was the cause of death. However, as it is so plain that this leg was very severely injured in the service and that the soldier never recovered the full use of it, it is very clear to the mind of your committee that his death was the result of the wounds for which he was pensioned.

The widow is poor and advanced in life, without means of support, and your committee believes it is a very meritorious claim and recommends its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES W. WHITNEY.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7125) granting a pension to Charles W. Whitney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles W. Whitney, late of Company I, Ninety-second Regiment United States Colored Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7125) granting a pension to Charles W. Whitney, submit the following report:

The soldier enlisted in Company G, Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers, September 15, 1861, and served until September 27, 1863, when he was mustered out to accept the position of first lieutenant in Company I of Ninety-second Regiment United States Colored Infantry. He served until December 31, 1865, when he was discharged at New Orleans, La. He served four years four months and sixteen days in the Army. Was a prisoner of war six months.

He claims that while at Fort Hudson on detached service he contracted dengue fever, or break-bone fever, and had a very severe attack. Since then he has never been a well man. He has suffered from the effects of the disease ever since, and the disease has increased every year. He has trouble in urinating, has pains in the small of his back, left shoulder, and hips, with dull pain in his head. In the fall of 1867 he was prostrated with a severe attack of rheumatism, and a general break-down of the whole system, and was confined to the bed till the following spring, and could not do any work during the ensuing summer. Every fall since he has had a sick spell and is unable to do much work.

His claim was rejected on the ground that there was no ratable disability for dengue fever shown since filing the claim, and the disease of kidneys and rheumatism are not shown to be results. The hospital record shows that during the month of October, 1865, he was taken with dengue fever. The testimony of the colonel of Ninety-second Regiment, and Bvt. Brig. Gen. H. N. Frisbie says that he knows Charles W. Whitney, and that he among many others suffered from malaria at Fort Hudson in 1865. He was in command of that port and district a good part of that year. He says:

"Lieutenant Whitney was one of my trusted officers, and so I particularly remember his sickness. He had an unusually severe attack of dengue fever. I consider it to result from malaria where we were so long after the mosquitoes broke and the greatest overflow ever known took place. Following it was an epidemic of this peculiar fever, from which I myself have twice suffered. It resulted in case of claimant in an affection of the kidneys, suppression of the urine, and rheumatism. It was a severe and dangerous case."

E. G. Dannel, lieutenant of said regiment, says he has known claimant since 1865, and from that till 1872; resided near him, part of the time in the same house, and has seen him quite frequently. During the entire time the claimant suffered with what he called break-bone fever, chronic inflammation of the kidneys, rheumatism, and nervous debility, and in affiant's opinion was unable to perform more than one-third the labor of an able-bodied man.

William B. Gates, D. J. Whitney, and others swear to about the same state of facts. Gates says that he resided in the immediate neighborhood of claimant from July, 1872, to April, 1886, and has seen him as often as once a month during that period and that he can not perform more than one-fourth the labor of a well man.

J. S. Little, special examiner, in his report of March 8, 1890, says: "From all the evidence I am of opinion that the claim is one of merit."
W. S. Rondsbusch, special examiner, in report of March 17, 1890, says: "I think the claim is meritorious."
A. Downing, special examiner, in his report of March 29, 1890, says: "From the reputation for probity of claimant and the high character of the witnesses interviewed I am led to believe the claim is meritorious."
T. N. Webster, special examiner, in his report of March 31, 1890, says: "I believe the claim has merit."

There is no evidence of the condition of the claimant previous to enlistment, but it is fair to assume that a man who entered the service and won distinction and promotion and received the commendation of his superior officer, and continued in the performance of his duty for more than four years as an able-bodied man when he entered the service. His impaired physical condition subsequent to discharge and through all the years subsequent thereto, his poverty, his high character for honesty and probity being such as to elicit the commendation of special examiners commissioned to look for evidence, and the conclusion of every one of them that the bill has merit, lead your committee to the conclusion that the bill is meritorious, and we therefore recommend that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY B. COOK.

Mr. CRAIG. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 11640) granting a pension to Mary B. Cook.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary B. Cook, who was the widow of Henry W. Torbett, late second lieutenant of Company K, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry.

Mr. KILGORE. It appears that this beneficiary bears a different name from her husband. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. CRAIG) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11640) granting a pension to Mary B. Cook, submit the following report:

That Mary B. Cook was the widow of Henry Torbett, who served as second lieutenant and finally lieutenant-colonel of the Seventy-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers through the war 1861-1865. He was appointed second lieutenant Twenty-ninth United States Infantry May 22, 1867, and was transferred to the Eleventh Infantry April 25, 1869. He died June 8, 1871. His widow was granted a pension at $15 per month December 30, 1872.

Said widow married Dr. Cook December 25, 1883. He lived two years and died December 24, 1885.

In view of the long and faithful service of the said Lieutenant Torbett, who died in the service as a result of his hardships and exposures, the dependent condition of his former widow, her inability to earn a support, and the fact that no one is legally bound for her support, her delicate health and age and precedents heretofore in similar cases, your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS A. ROWLEY.

Mr. OSBORNE. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10418) to increase the pension of Thomas A. Rowley, late brigadier-general of United States volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to increase the pension of Thomas A. Rowley, late brigadier-general United States volunteers, to $50 per month.

Mr. KILGORE. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CRAIG) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10418) granting an increase of pension to Thomas A. Rowley, submit the following report:

Thomas A. Rowley was a soldier in the Mexican war. He was mustered into the United States service as colonel of the One hundred and second Pennsylvania Volunteers August 6, 1861. He was promoted to brigadier-general of volunteers February 18, 1863. He commanded Third Brigade, Third Division of the Sixth Corps from November, 1862, to March, 1863, when he was placed in command of First Brigade, Third Division, First Corps, until July 3, 1863, when wounded at Gettysburg, Pa. He had also been wounded in the hand at Fair Oaks May 31, 1862.

He occupied various important and responsible positions until his resignation December 23, 1864. He was granted a pension of $7.50 per month February 14, 1870, increased to $15 March 19, 1884, and increased by special act $10 per month June 24, 1886.

He suffers from his wounds, which also affect his eyesight. About two years ago he met with an accident on a railroad which crippled him and he is very lame. He is in very limited circumstances, and is dependent on his pension.

In view of the faithful service of this soldier, his age, which is eighty years, and his suffering condition, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HANNAH B. SHEPHERD.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12012) granting a pension to Hannah B. Shepherd.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Hannah B. Shepherd, dependent mother of Henry J. Shepherd, late a private in Company E, Ninety-sixth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. FLICK) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12012) to grant a pension to Hannah B. Shepherd, submit the following report:

Hannah B. Shepherd is the mother of Henry J. Shepherd, who enlisted in Company E, Ninety-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, August 2, 1862, was discharged in 1863, and died of disease of lungs October 25, 1871. The mother's claim has been rejected on the ground that soldier left surviving him a widow to whom he was married on his death-bed. The widow has long since remarried and there is no one drawing any pension on account of said soldier's death. The evidence clearly shows that the soldier's death cause was directly chargeable to malarial poisoning of an aggravated type, from which he suffered during service, and a hacking cough which developed before discharge.

It is also shown that before enlistment, during service, and after discharge, he made ample provisions for the comfortable maintenance of his mother, but his death has cut off this avenue of support, and having no property or income from any source, she is now dependent upon others not legally bound in her support.

The case comes within a well established rule of Congress to grant relief to the poor and aged parents of those who lost their lives in the service of their country, and the committee therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN LINDT.

Mr. REED, of Iowa. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 4254) granting a pension to John Lindt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, empowered and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of John Lindt, late a private in Company B, Independent Regiment Light Artillery, Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that he be rated at $12 per month from January 1, 1885.

The report (by Mr. FLICK) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4254) granting a pension to John Lindt, submit the following report:

The claimant filed an application for pension for disability, caused by injury to his hearing, and rheumatism. His claim was rejected on the ground that he had not established the incurrence of the disabilities in the service. He showed by evidence other than his own the existence of the disabilities, but he was not able to furnish any testimony except his own that the disabilities were the result of his service.

He was a private in Company B, Independent Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. He testified that in one of the actions during the Atlanta campaign, in 1864, the gun with which he served was placed in action in a gap or narrow valley between two high hills, and that the concussion caused by the firing of the gun injured one of his ears, and that the injury has constantly grown worse since his discharge from the service, and that he is now able to hear but little in that ear.

The fact of the occurrence of the injury is necessarily within his exclusive knowledge. It was not of such serious character as to demand medical treatment at the time. He is shown to be a man of good repute and worthy of credit, and your committee think his testimony ought to be accepted as sufficient to establish the occurrence of the injury. The disability, although serious, does not disable him from earning a livelihood by manual labor, so that he can not be pensioned under the act approved June 27, 1890.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "and" in the sixth line, and all the seventh and eighth lines, and by inserting the following: "Subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and that as so amended it be passed.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE EVERTS.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 8124) granting a pension to George Everts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the invalid pension-roll the name of George Everts, late of Company A, Fifteenth Iowa Infantry Volunteers, the said pension to be subject to the limitations of the general pension laws at the rates to be established by the usual examination.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8124) to pension George Everts, submit the following report:

George Everts, Company A, Fifteenth Iowa Infantry Volunteers, filed his claim No. 606903 for an invalid pension. House bill 8124 is supported by a petition signed by a very large number of his neighbors, in which the merit of his claim and his necessity for a pension are vouched for. The petition states his inability to furnish the proof required by the rules of the Pension Bureau as to the origin of his disability.

C. H. T. St. Clair has filed an affidavit with the committee in which he states that the claimant is old and broken down in health and suffering from heart disease, disease of the spine, and rheumatism; that he is confined to his bed a part of the time each day. The claimant states that his diseases were contracted from hard marching and exposure on march at Black River, Miss., in the spring of 1864. The surgeon's certificate of the board of examiners at Fairfield, Iowa, states that the disability of the soldier is total.

Rufus A. Eno testifies to his acquaintance with the soldier since 1861, and describes his disability substantially the same as said St. Clair.

E. F. Williams, another neighbor, who has known the claimant from 1870 and had opportunities to know him, states the disability to have been continuous. Dr. J. C. Millikin also testifies as to the disability in 1882.

The records of the War Department show the sickness of the soldier in Marietta, Ga., in July, 1864, and to February, 1865; and absent, sick, in February, 1865; sick in May, 1861; had diarrhea in July, 1864.

Charles Bailey testifies that he knew the soldier in 1873, when he was suffering from disease, but does not clearly state the nature of the disease.

A further record of the War Department on file shows that the soldier suffered from remittent fever, chronic diarrhea, acute diarrhea in 1864, and in 1865 chronic hepatitis.

His continuous sickness during the last two years of his service, and his subsequent illness, as shown by the affidavits on file, clearly indicate that his army service has produced his present condition of health in whole or in part.

The soldier is greatly disabled and his case is an extreme one, so that the liberal provisions of the disability act are inadequate, as his disability was evidently contracted in the service, although the proof is not clear enough to entitle him to pension under the old law.

Owing to the extent of his disability, we deem the new law inadequate and recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JESSE G. HAMILTON.

On motion of Mr. KILGORE, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 7928) granting a pension to Jesse G. Hamilton was considered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jesse G. Hamilton, late of Company B, Twenty-first Indiana Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7928) granting a pension to Jesse G. Hamilton, submit the following report:

The claimant enlisted in Company B, Twenty-first Indiana Heavy Artillery, on the 24th day of July, 1861. Discharged by reason of hernia, April 1, 1862. Filed declaration for pension March 27, 1869, alleging that at Newport News, Va., about March 1, 1862, while lifting a log to build a fire, he incurred rupture of right side. Declaration filed April 3, 1880, alleges that from carrying a heavy log for fire-wood at the hospital near Newport News, Va., in March, 1862, he received a rupture of the right side. This case was finally rejected after a lengthy special examination. Reason stated, the evidence is insufficient to overcome the adverse record, but strongly tends to prove that claimant was slightly ruptured at date of enlistment.

The fact of existence of disability at discharge is established beyond doubt; therefore rejection was based principally upon the hypothesis that disability existed at enlistment. Ezra Read, surgeon Second Indiana Volunteers, who signed claimant's certificate of disability for discharge, made the remark on said certificate that disability existed at time of enlistment. Dr. Salem A. Tilford, president of the examining board at Martinsville, Ind., states that before the war he had frequently given claimant and family treatment, and in his opinion claimant was a sound man and free from hernia when he enlisted in the service.

Dr. Wilhite, a practicing physician for twenty-eight years, testifies that he knew claimant before his enlistment; that he was a sound man; that the fall and winter of 1861 he was in the hospital at Baltimore with claimant, they both being nurses; that about March, 1862, they went to Newport News; that claimant was cook and nurse in hospital; that soon after arrival at Newport News claimant became ruptured by lifting a heavy log.

Ten or twelve witnesses testify that claimant was a sound man to all appearance before enlistment, and was performing heavy and laborious work prior to enlistment. Special Examiner Cox says claimant has excellent reputation for truth and veracity, is broken down physically, and financially destitute, believes the claim has merit, and recommends further examination. Special Examiner McCoy finds claimant to have good reputation in Indiana, where he enlisted; that all the witnesses which he examined except one believed claimant was sound at enlistment. He also recommended further examination.

From the large amount of testimony showing that claimant was sound at and prior to enlistment your committee are inclined to give him the benefit of the doubt, with favorable report recommending that the bill do pass.

Mr. FLOWER. What is the rate of pension?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIAS D. THOMPSON.

On motion of Mr. NUTE, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 11173) to increase the pension of Elias D. Thompson was considered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Elias D. Thompson, of Company F, First Louisiana Volunteers in the Mexican war, a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11173) granting an increase of pension to Elias D. Thompson, have considered the same and report as follows:

Mr. Thompson was a corporal in Company F, First Louisiana Volunteers, Mexican war, and served as such from May 7 to July 27, 1846. He is now in receipt of a pension at the rate of $8 per month under the Mexican-service act of January 29, 1867.

The applicant is now nearly seventy-eight years old and so badly afflicted with chronic rheumatism as to require the constant attendance of a nurse. The disease has resulted in much deformity and rigidity of the joints, and he has been unable to do any manual labor for years. He stands in much need of the increase prayed for.

The facts are substantiated by the testimony of Dr. George W. Benson and Dr. J. Harvey Hill, both of Baltimore, Md.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES H. VANDERVOORT.

On motion of Mr. DE LANO, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 4870) to relieve Charles H. Vandervoort of the charge of desertion was considered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States Army the charge of desertion now standing on the said rolls and records against Charles A. Vandervoort, late of Company A, Second Regiment New York Heavy Artillery Volunteers, and, when so removed, that the said Charles A. Vandervoort be restored to all rights lost or suspended by the said record.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JEREMIAH M. SIDWELL.

On motion of Mr. FLOWER, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 2417) granting a pension to Jeremiah M. Sidwell was considered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jeremiah M. Sidwell, of Spring Arbor, Mich., late a private in the Indiana Home Guards, said Sidwell having been wounded at the battle of Panther Creek, Kentucky, while serving in the Army of the United States.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2417) granting a pension to Jeremiah M. Sidwell, submit the following report: This claimant made an application for pension in the proper way and was rejected by the Department, as the regiment in which he served was a State organization and not mustered into the United States service.

It appears from the evidence on file with this claim that he served with the Fourth Indiana Legion, a regiment of home guards, and that his regiment was ordered out of the State and to the State of Kentucky, where, in a skirmish with the enemy, he received a gunshot wound in left leg. Upon this point the evidence seems conclusive, and your committee, believing the claim a just and proper one for Congress to act upon, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPHINE S. HANSEL.

On motion of Mr. CHEADLE, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 10742) granting a pension to Josephine S. Hansel (late Wilson) was considered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the pension-rolls of the United States the name of Josephine S. Hansel (formerly Wilson), widow of James Wilson, late of Company K, Twenty-eighth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $12 a month.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10742) granting a pension to Josephine S. Hansel (late Wilson), submit the following report:

Josephine S. Hansel was the widow of James Wilson, of Company K, Twenty-eighth Iowa Infantry Volunteers, who died in the United States service; that said widow forfeited her right to pension by remarriage with Cephas J. Hansel; that the said Hansel is now dead, and she is left in destitute circumstances, and that she is the proper subject of the bounty of the Government, and we recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET HAWKINS.

On motion of Mr. GEST, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 8119) to grant a pension to Margaret Hawkins was considered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret Hawkins, widow of William Hawkins, who was a private in Capt. Alexander M. Houston's company of Illinois Mounted Volunteers in the Black Hawk war, and pay her a pension of $20 per month.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8119) granting a pension to Margaret Hawkins, have considered the same and report:

The claimant's late husband, William Hawkins, was a private in Capt. Alexander M. Houston's company of Illinois Mounted Volunteers in the Black Hawk war, and was honorably discharged therefrom August 15, 1832.

It is shown that the soldier died February 12, 1830, and that his widow is poor, old, and feeble. Her age is about seventy-four years, and she is so much afflicted with palsy as to require almost constant care and attention from others.

The claimant's husband was in receipt of a pension at the rate of $20 per month at the time of his death, the same having been granted him by special act at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress.

Your committee regard the case as a meritorious one, and therefore favorably report the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BAZEL LEMLEY.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 9400) granting a pension to Bazel Lemley was considered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of Bazel Lemley, late a member of Company I, Eighth Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. CRAIG) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9400) granting a pension to Bazel Lemley, submit the following report:

That claimant enlisted July 15, 1861, in Company I, Eighth Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, was transferred to Company H, One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, June 30, 1864, and was discharged June 28, 1865.

His claim for a pension was filed September 13, 1879, for gunshot wound of right shoulder received at battle of the Wilderness May 6, 1864, and heart disease, which claim was rejected on medical grounds that there has been no disability from alleged wound of shoulder, and that the disease of heart is not the result of said wound, and inability to satisfy the Pension Office with evidence of incurrence of heart disease.

There is abundant evidence of prior soundness both by family physician and neighbors. Dr. G. W. Mass, the family physician, thinks he would have known it if he had heart disease, and thinks he was free from any functional disease of same.

There is evidence quite satisfactory of the wound having been received in battle as stated.

There is lay testimony of the contraction of heart disease in the service, but the Pension Office refused to consider it conclusive.

Dr. G. W. Mass testifies that when claimant returned from the Army in the summer of 1865 he had functional disease of the heart, and it produced frequent attacks of syncope and to a very great extent disqualified him from manual labor. In addition to this a number of respectable witnesses testify to his having heart disease on his return from the service. His neighbors generally unite in giving him an excellent character.

This case was specially examined in the field and by the examiner recommended for admission.

Your committee, in view of all the circumstances, his long service and his wound, think it reasonable to give him the benefit of the doubt and recommend the passage of the bill, amended by adding after word "corps" the words "transferred to Company H, One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARK F. CARTER.

Mr. TRACEY. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Pensions from the further consideration of the bill (S. 573) granting an increase of pension to Mark F. Carter and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mark F. Carter, late a member of Company E, Second Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, a pension at the rate of $50 a month, in lieu of that which he now receives, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, was passed.

FRANC E. BABBITT.

On motion of Mr. O'DONNELL, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 2434) granting a pension to Franc E. Babbitt was considered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Franc E. Babbitt, sister and heir of George S. Babbitt, late lieutenant-colonel of the Twenty-third Regiment Indiana Infantry, the pension of said Franc E. Babbitt to be fixed at the rate of $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2434) granting a pension to Franc E. Babbitt, submit the following report: Franc E. Babbitt is the sister of George S. Babbitt, late lieutenant-colonel of the Twenty-third Indiana Infantry.

Colonel Babbitt entered the service as a captain, and remained until the close of the war; he ran the blockade at Vicksburg as volunteer commander of the J. W. Cheeseman, manned by a volunteer crew from his company, remaining under fire for six hours, and the vessel was struck many times by cannon-balls and grape, canister, and musketry beyond mention; the consort of the Cheeseman was relieved and rescued.

Colonel Babbitt took part in all the battles under Grant, beginning at Belmont and ending at Vicksburg; he was in the battles about Atlanta; marched with Sherman to the sea. He contracted pulmonary disease in the Army and died, after a lingering consumption, June 22, 1869. He was never married; his mother died when he was a babe, and his father while he was a small boy. The sister was a mother to the boy and raised him. When he grew up he contributed to his sister's support until he became unable to do any kind of work. She is the heir at law; she cared for him in infancy and during his long illness. The soldier would not apply for a pension during his lifetime. The sister is sixty-five years of age, broken in health from her long care of the gallant soldier; she is without income, being dependent upon her exertions.

General Gresham, on whose staff the soldier served, in a letter to Mr. O'Donnell, the author of the bill, testifies to the services of Colonel Babbitt as a faithful and valuable officer; he approves the proposition to have the sister pensioned by act of Congress. General Lew. Wallace, who served with the soldier, also favors such action.

In view of these facts, and as it has become customary to grant pensions in cases of this nature, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

URIAH J. O'NEIL.

On motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 5687) for the relief of Uriah J. O'Neil was considered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the removal of the charge of desertion from the record of Uriah J. O'Neil, late Company B, Fifty-ninth New York Infantry.

The report (by Mr. SNIDER) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5687) for the relief of Uriah J. O'Neil, having considered the same, respectfully report:

That they have carefully examined the evidence submitted in this case and believe the soldier entitled to relief asked.

They recommend the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SARAH H. PHILP.

On motion of Mr. CUTCHEON, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 11243) granting a pension to Sarah H. Philp was considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to put the name of Sarah H. Philp, widow of Thomas Kinrade, late a member of Company K, Second Ohio Cavalry, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11243) granting a pension to Sarah H. Philp, submit the following report:

Sarah H. Philp was the wife of Thomas Kinrade, a member of Company K, Second Ohio Cavalry, and who died from injuries received in line of duty April 8, 1862. She was granted a pension by certificate 5631, which was paid to her until March 2, 1864, when she married William Philp, with whom she lived until his death several years ago, since which time she has remained a widow and has supported herself by teaching. She has no other means of support and is now advanced in years.

Your committee therefore recommend that her name be restored to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN SCRAM.

Mr. WICKHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11027) granting a pension to Benjamin Scram.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, this is a dangerous practice without some explanation or report. If this is a Senate bill the report ought to be read; if a House bill some explanation should be given.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin Scram, late a private in Colonel Thompson's regiment in the Black Hawk war, at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. WICKHAM. I move that the word "twelve," in line 7, be stricken out and "eight" inserted.

The facts are that this man was wounded in the Black Hawk war, is now an aged man, and needs the money he gets from his pension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions is here, and I would like to ask if he has examined the bill and knows anything about it.

Mr. DE LANO. I have examined the bill during this day, and it is the custom of the committee to report favorably upon such bills.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment adopted, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

OWEN T. GALE.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11916) for the relief of Owen T. Gale, alias Thomas Mott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel the record of desertion now resting against the name of Owen T. Gale, alias Thomas Mott, as of Company E, Eighty-first Regiment of New York Volunteers, and issue to him an honorable discharge in his favor.

Mr. BAKER. In this connection I desire to print the record of the War Department and the affidavits relating to the case, in lieu of the formal report.

The documents referred to are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, May 22, 1890.

SIR: Referring to the application for removal of the charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge in the case of Owen T. Gale, alias Thomas Mott, as of Company E, Eighty-first Regiment New York Volunteers, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that, upon a careful consideration of the additional testimony presented by you, nothing is found to justify a reversal of the former adverse decision in the case, and the application is, therefore, again denied.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH.

Captain and Assistant Surgeon, U. S. A.

Mr. H. E. HAMMON,
Attorney, Rochester, N. Y.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, July 30, 1890.

SIR: In returning herewith a letter addressed to you and by you referred to this Department (received on the 26th instant), having reference, apparently, to a removal of the charge of desertion against Thomas Mott, a former member of Company E, Eighty-first New York Volunteers (whose true name it is alleged is Owen T. Gale), I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that the official records show that this soldier was enrolled October 4, 1861, to serve three years; that on June 18, 1863, he was granted a furlough for twenty-five days, from which he never returned, and was accordingly reported as having deserted July 18, 1863, although the actual date of desertion was July 13, 1863.

As it appears from the letter of your correspondent that the only ground for his failure to return was because his mother threatened him with arrest if he did so, there is no provision of law under which the Department can afford him any relief.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,

Captain and Assistant Surgeon, United States Army.

Hon. CHARLES S. BAKER,
House of Representatives.

General affidavit.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Monroe, ss:

In the matter of removal of charge of desertion, case of Owen T. Gale, Company E, Eighty-first New York Infantry.

On this 7th day of August, A. D. 1890, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, Owen T. Gale, aged forty-four years, a resident of Brockport, in the county of Monroe and State of New York, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declared in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

That he is the man who enlisted under the name of Thomas Mott in the above-named organization; that the affiant changed his name at the instance of comrades to elude pursuit by his parents at the time of his enlistment, as he was a minor; that he served said organization faithfully for two years, and was promoted for bravery; that affiant drew a furlough by lottery and came home to visit his parents; that his father had died during his absence, and that his mother threatened him with arrest if he attempted to return to the Army; that he never returned nor tried to evade arrest; that this application is made for the purpose of being restored to citizenship, and is not in any way designed to secure either a pension, or bounty, or any pay whatever other than an honorable discharge, which will restore him to citizenship and entitle him to the benefits of a soldiers' home.

OWEN T. GALE.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Monroe, ss:

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant, and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant, including the words erased and the words added, and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further testify that I am in no wise interested in said case, nor am I concerned in its prosecution; and that said affiant is personally known to me, and that he is a credible person.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Monroe, ss:

In the matter of Owen T. Gale, late private Company E, Eighty-first New York Infantry, for removal of charge of desertion.

On this 12th day of August, A. D. 1890, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, Owen T. Gale, aged forty-four years, a resident of Brockport, in the county of Monroe and State of New York, whose post-office address is Brockport, N. Y., well known to me to be respectable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to the aforesaid case as follows:

That he is the veritable Owen T. Gale who enlisted under the name of Thomas Mott as heretofore described. That by reason of the opposition exercised by his said mother, late deceased, as also of his two sisters, Mary J. Berry, now of Brockport, N. Y., and Margaret S. Eifler, now of Flatonia, Fayette County, Texas, he was prevented from returning to his command. That had he exercised his own will he certainly should so have done. That the tears and entreaties of his mother and two sisters, coupled with the final threat of his summary arrest by his mother, decided him to reluctantly yield under protest, and for which he is now, as he was then, heartily sorry and mad at himself to think that he did not force the issue, even to resistance. That his age at time of his enlistment was sixteen years. That he has stated the exact truth as to age, which possibly might be verified by a journey to Albany, N. Y., in the archives of the old Catholic rectory of St. Mary's in said city, if in existence. That affiant has not sought, neither does he seek, bounty or pension, but restoration to citizenship that he may, if occasion demands, find a resting place in some soldiers' home before his final crossing to the other side.

OWEN T. GALE.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Monroe, ss:

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant, and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant, including the words erased and the words added, and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in said case, nor am I concerned in its prosecution, and that said affiant is personally known to me, and that he is a credible person.

DELBERT A. ADAMS,

Notary Public in and for Monroe County, New York.

General affidavit.

STATE OF NEW YORK, COUNTY OF MONROE, ss:

In the matter of Owen T. Gale, alias Thomas Mott.

On this 12th day of August, A. D. 1890, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, Mary J. Berry, aged forty-eight years, a resident of Brockport, in the county of Monroe and State of New York, whose post-office address is same, well known to me to be respectable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to the aforesaid case as follows:

That she has been well and personally acquainted with Owen T. Gale for forty years and over, and that she is the sister of said Gale, alias Thomas Mott, late of Company E, Eighty-first New York Infantry; that her said brother Owen T. Gale ran away from home and enlisted in said company and regiment under the said alias of "Mott," and that this occurred at Waterville, Oneida County, New York, and on or about —

That at the expiration of two years, or thereabouts, said brother came home on furlough, a soldier with his chevrons on as a non-commissioned officer in said company and regiment; that her mother, late deceased, was of course overjoyed to see her son, the said brother, Owen T. Gale.

That her mother and affiant, as also affiant's sister Margaret, then and there determined that said brother Owen T. Gale should never be permitted to return to the Army, furlough or no furlough.

That the mother sought legal counsel, and was informed that minority without consent was an effectual bar to his said enlistment, and that she, his said mother, had the primary right to interpose said plea in his own behalf, claiming the jurisdiction of parental authority, which said interposition would be an effectual bar upon said grounds, as provided by statute, she being a dependent widow and mother.

That the said Owen T. Gale protested to the point of rebellion. That her said mother argued and entreated, which said argument and entreaties were skillfully parried by said son, who pictured to his mother, and the two sisters aforementioned as well, the glowing glories of the "tented field."

That further promotion awaited him, and that he had only to stretch forth his hand to be a commissioned officer.

That the said mother resisted all entreaties and finally interposed the ultimatum that any attempt to leave again for the war would be speedily followed by his arrest and imprisonment by her, saying that she needed his help and demanded it, that if he went back he would be killed anyway, and that this must be an end of all argument, as the parental ius dixit was final.

That affiant concurred heartily with the authority which her said mother exercised, as did also her sister Margaret, next younger than herself, the affiant.

That said sister Margaret and affiant held many secret consultations in which many and various schemes were evolved and put in execution for a most complete and perfect system of espionage over said brother.

THIRD GENERAL AFFIDAVIT.

That affiant has every reason to believe, and none to doubt, that said brother would never have allowed said furlough to have lapsed and become vitiated except upon compulsion and restriction. That said compulsion and restriction were imposed by her said mother, who is now dead and gone, together with herself, the affiant, and her said sister Margaret, above mentioned.

That the subject-matter as above related by affiant was a sacred family secret and was only known and talked of between the four persons named, mother, son, and two daughters, which for obvious reasons was never hinted or breathed outside; hence the inability to furnish outside evidence. Her post-office address is Brockport, N. Y.

MARY J. BERRY.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Monroe, ss:

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant, and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant, including the words erased and the words added, and acquainted her with its contents before she executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in said case, nor am I concerned in its prosecution; and that said affiant is personally known to me and that she is a credible person.

General affidavit.

STATE OF TEXAS, County of Bexar, ss:

In the matter of Owen T. Gale, alias Thomas Mott.

On this 18th day of August, A. D. 1890, personally appeared before me, a clerk of a court of record in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, Margaret S. Eifler, aged thirty-seven years, a resident of Flatonia, in the county of Fayette and State of Texas, well known to me to be respectable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to the aforesaid case as follows:

That she has been well and personally acquainted with said Gale always, and that she is the sister of Owen T. Gale mentioned above; that the affiant distinctly remembers of the return of her said brother, Owen T. Gale, from the war. She also remembers the opposition which her mother made to his returning to the said regiment at the front.

That by reason of said opposition, coupled with the determined opposition of herself and sister Mary J. Berry, now of Brockport, N. Y., may be attributed the prevention of the return of her said brother to the front at the time he came home on furlough, and most certainly not because he did not wish to return.

That said brother would certainly have returned, as he was a born soldier and talked continually of the chances of promotion.

That it was a sore and grievous disappointment to him to meet with the bitter opposition he did from his mother and sisters for his return.

That it was a family secret, which was only known to his mother, sister, brother, and self, and was never talked of outside the family circle.

MARGARET S. EIFLER.

STATE OF TEXAS, County of Bexar, ss:

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant, and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant, including the words erased and the words added, and acquainted her with its contents before she executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in said case, nor am I concerned in its prosecution; and that said affiant is personally known to me and that she is a credible person.

THAD. W. SMITH,

Clerk County Court, Bexar County, Texas,
By R. C. SYMINGTON, Deputy.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JAMES A. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2537) to increase the pension of James A. Underwood.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to increase the pension of James A. Underwood, late of Company B, Eighth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, to $50 per month.

Mr. KILGORE. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2537) to increase the pension of James A. Underwood, submit the following report:

Claimant's pension was increased to $30 by special act of Congress in 1896. The Committee on Invalid Pensions submitted the following report at that time, which is adopted by your committee as a part of this report:

"We find that claimant enlisted August 30, 1861, in Company B, Eighth Indiana Volunteers, and was discharged September 14, 1863.

"February, 1864, he applied for a pension for loss of left arm at battle of Vicksburg, which was granted, and for which he is now receiving a pension of $24 per month.

"May 23, 1885, he applied for an increase on account of chronic diarrhea and erysipelas, which was rejected on the ground that the combined disabilities were not equal to total inability to perform manual labor. Two of his neighbors swear that he is unable to perform any manual labor whatever. December 4, 1876, Dr. W. W. Spiers, United States medical examiner, says:

"I find that left forearm has been amputated at upper third; considerable sloughing has occurred from gangrene, leaving a stump with very tender cicatrix. Claimant states that two years ago an eruption broke out on his left arm and spread all over his body; continued nine weeks; was confined to his bed four weeks; muscles of leg were contracted; went on crutches for awhile. Last August eruption came out on biceps muscles of left arm; lasted two weeks; comes out in warm weather. I find no eruption now. I think it is not erysipelas, but a vesicular eruption resulting from chronic diarrhea. His gums are badly eaten by scurvy. There is not much emaciation, but his weight is some less than it ought to be. Rated total third grade for loss of arm and $4 for diarrhea."

"June 24, 1885, the examining board at Ellsworth, Kans., report him suffering with chronic diarrhea, and recommend $4 per month in addition to his pension for loss of arm. The evidence shows that he is at times confined to his bed for weeks with chronic diarrhea and the resulting eruptions, which he calls erysipelas. The man is a complete wreck, and it would seem that the evidence would entitle him to the full rating given to those totally disabled for the performance of manual labor. The examining boards recommend $23 per month. There is no such rating provided by law. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

Your committee would further state that the evidence shows a decided increase in claimant's disabilities, the chronic diarrhea developing in hemorrhoids causing frequent loss of blood; also fistula in ano of severe form. The combined disabilities without the loss of arm would be sufficient to totally incapacitate the claimant for the performance of any manual labor. As claimant's present rating was fixed by special act, his pension can not be increased by the Bureau of Pensions. Therefore, in view of the above facts, your committee make favorable report and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. RACHEL WRIGHT.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) granting a pension to Mrs. Rachel Wright.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Rachel Wright, mother of Charles Wright, late a teamster in the United States Army; said pension to commence from the date of his death.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

In line 8, after the word "of," strike out the words "his death" and insert in lieu thereof "approval of this act, at the rate of $12 per month."

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7786) granting a pension to Mrs. Rachel Wright, submit the following report: Charles H. Wright, designated as Charles Wright in the bill H. R. 7786, entered the service of the United States during the autumn of the year 1863 as a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army. On the 26th day of November, 1863, while gathering up the dead and wounded from a field of battle in Fairfax County, Virginia, he was made a prisoner by the enemy, and held and confined as a prisoner of war at Richmond, Va., and afterwards at Andersonville, Ga., where he died on the 4th day of August, 1864, of disease resulting from his imprisonment.

The deceased prisoner was the oldest son of Rachel Wright, the claimant for pension, and she was dependent upon him for support, her other children being infants from four to eleven years of age. The claimant was a widow at the time her son entered the service of the United States, and she has ever since remained unmarried. She is now sixty-four years of age, and by reason of the imprisonment and death of her son she was at times in great distress and suffered from want of the necessities of life. The deceased left no widow or children, never having been married. Applicant has no means with which to support herself.

The fact of the deceased's capture and death are shown by the records of the War Department, as appears by a communication therefrom among the papers on file in this claim.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, amended, however, by striking out the words, in line 8, "his death," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "approval of this act, at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a few remarks upon the pension bill of the widow of General George B. McClellan.

There was no objection.

MARY A. IRVIN.

Mr. RIFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8779) granting a pension to Mary A. Irvin, widow.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Mary A. Irvin, widow of William Irvin, late private Company G, First Louisiana Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. CRAIG) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8779) granting a pension to Mary A. Irvin, submit the following report:

That Mary A. Irvin was married to William Irvin in 1855. William Irvin enlisted in Company G, First Louisiana Cavalry, March 20, 1864, and was discharged March 11, 1865. He was immediately pensioned, which was at time of his death, April 22, 1868, at the rate of $24 for disease of heart and dropsy. His death was the result of this disease. Mrs. Irvin applied for a pension, but was refused upon the ground that she had been previously married.

The evidence shows that when quite young she had married one Samuel P. Seibert, a minor; that his father threatened prosecution of the officiating minister, who advised her to consent to a peaceable separation. The father of the boy took him home to another county within five days of the marriage, and she, the claimant, assumed her maiden name. That her father in 1863 moved from her home in Perry County, Pennsylvania, to Illinois. She went with him and married William Irvin. That she lived with him as his wife, bore nine children to him, cared for them and him as his loyal wife, and nursed him in his long sickness until he died in 1868. She supposed her infant marriage was null and void always, and never doubted she was Irving's true wife until she made pension claim. That Samuel P. Seibert also, about 1865, married another woman, and at last account of him was living.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, in accordance with abundant precedent in similar cases.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BELINDA JANE PHILLIPS.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9583) pensioning Belinda Jane Phillips.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Belinda Jane Phillips, imbecile daughter of Isaiah Phillips, late of Company F, Thirtieth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $8 per month, and that the same be paid to and upon the order of Hannah Johnson, of Santa Fé, Kans., who is the natural mother of said imbecile daughter.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9583) granting a pension to Belinda Jane Phillips, submit the following report: Belinda Jane Phillips is the daughter of Josiah Phillips, late of Company F, Thirtieth Iowa Volunteers. Her father died at Vicksburg, February 20, 1863, while in the service. Her mother remarried October 18, 1874.

The claimant drew a pension as the minor child of said soldier until she arrived at the age of sixteen years. She is now twenty-seven years old and is, and has been since her birth, deformed, imbecile, and wholly dependent upon others for support. Since the time of the discontinuance of her pension no one has been receiving a pension on account of said service of Josiah Phillips.

The affidavits of the mother and of two persons who have known the daughter, and are acquainted with the facts, fully substantiate the report.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, amended as follows: Strike out all after the word "pay," in line 6, and insert "to her legally constituted guardian for her use a pension at the rate of $18 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ANNA S. SHUMAN.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11641) granting a pension to Anna S. Shuman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-rolls the name of Anna S. Shuman, late a nurse in the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. CRAIG) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11641) granting a pension to Anna S. Shuman, submit the following report:

Anna S. Shuman, shortly after the breaking out of the late war, took upon herself to render aid to the sick and wounded soldiers at the different hospitals in Washington City, and by her labor and contributions aided much toward their relief and comfort, until in August, 1864, she was regularly appointed a nurse by Miss Dix, and assigned to duty at the general hospital at Fortress Monroe, Va.

She faithfully performed her duties in that overcrowded hospital until her health failed, when on March 28, 1865, she received an order from Miss Dix to report to Washington under a sick leave granted her by Surgeon McClellan, as appears from the original order before your committee.

Since leaving the service her only source of income has been that derived from nursing the sick, but being now well advanced in years and still suffering from disease contracted in the service she will be unable before very long to provide for her support by her own labor, and there being no one legally bound to aid in her maintenance, must become an object of charity, unless the Government comes to her assistance.

Your committee therefore recommend favorable action on the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

EMILY P. COLLINS.

Mr. SIMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7879) granting a pension to Emily P. Collins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily P. Collins, of Hartford, Conn., and grant her a pension of $8 a month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Collins," insert the words "an army nurse." Also in line 7 strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

The report (by Mr. CRAIG) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7879) granting a pension to Emily P. Collins, submit the following report:

The claimant was a volunteer army nurse at the hospital in Martinsburgh, Va., from May, 1864, until late in the fall of the same year, where she performed faithful service in nursing large numbers of sick and wounded soldiers.

Claimant had two sons who did faithful service in the war, one as surgeon, the other as lieutenant and who was severely wounded and died from the same subsequently.

Mrs. Collins was the daughter of a brave soldier of the Revolutionary war. She alleges that no one is now receiving a pension on account of these services to the country. She is now seventy-five years of age, has been a widow for fifteen years, and is now without adequate means of support.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments: After the name insert "an army nurse," and change the word "eight," in the last line, to "twelve."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTIAN POPE.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7251) granting a pension to Christian Pope.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Christian Pope, late a private in Company K, Fifth Regiment of Missouri State Militia Cavalry Volunteers.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the letter "o" in claimant's name and insert "a."

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7251) granting a pension to Christian Pope, submit the following report:

Claimant enlisted in Company D, Twelfth Missouri State Militia Cavalry, January 3, 1862; was discharged therefrom on certificate of disability February 28, 1864, said certificate showing that claimant was incapacitated for performance of the duties of a soldier because of varicose veins in his legs; that said disability was three-fourths total, rendering him unfit for service in the Invalid Corps.

Claimant filed application for pension May 22, 1882, alleging that in the fall of 1862, while on a forced march from Jackson to Bloomfield, Mo., and on the second day's march he was first disabled by varicose veins. His claim was rejected at the Pension Office because the certificate of disability for discharge shows that the varicose veins of left leg existed prior to enlistment. Claimant took an appeal, and the Assistant Secretary, in his review, states that claimant admits that he had varicose veins in left leg very slightly previous to enlistment; therefore affirmed former rejection. Several witnesses testify to their intimate acquaintance with him and to his soundness previous to enlistment.

The Adjutant-General's report shows claimant present for duty until September, 1862. Surgeon-General's report shows that claimant was first admitted to hospital in September, 1863. These facts, taken in connection with soldier's date of enlistment, prove that claimant performed his duty as a soldier for about twenty-one months, which is good evidence to your committee that claimant's disability previous to enlistment, if such disability existed, must have been very slight, and the Pension Bureau intimates disability prior to enlistment in left leg only, while the surgeon, in certificate for discharge, says "the dilation is extensive and implicates both legs."

Therefore, your committee are of the opinion that soldier's present disability is very largely due to his service, and recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendment: Striking out the letter "o" in claimant's name and inserting "a," so that the name will be "Pape."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to conform to the provisions of the act.

FREDERICK HART.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5213) granting a pension to Frederick Hart.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frederick Hart, late of Company K, Sixth Michigan Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5213) granting a pension to Frederick Hart, submit the following report:

The claimant enlisted October 13, 1862, and was discharged May 15, 1865, on surgeon's certificate of disability. Thomas H. Helsley, surgeon, who states in his certificate that an extensive exostosis tumor of right femur, lower third, greatly impeding marching and the free use of the limb, unfitting him for service in the Veteran Reserve Corps.

This disease has existed all the time since the war and to the present time. He made application for a pension in 1876, and it was rejected upon the ground that this disability existed prior to his enlistment, but your committee believe this is based upon error, as the man served nearly three years in active service, making heavy marches and engaging in many battles. He claims his disabilities were received at the battle of Falling Waters, Maryland, and your committee believe, from the evidence on file with the claim, that such is the truth, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN RAGAN.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8067) to correct the military record of John Ragan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the record of John Ragan, Company F, Ninety-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, and issue to him an honorable discharge as a private of said company and regiment.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"This act shall not authorize any pay, allowance, or bounty to said Ragan for service under such enlistment."

The report (by Mr. LANSING) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8067) to correct the military record of John Ragan, submit the following report:

The rolls of the Army disclose the fact that John Ragan, Company F, Ninety-fourth New York Volunteers, is recorded as a deserter. It appears by affidavits that Ragan enlisted in said company and regiment in 1861 or 1862; that on or about the month of February said Ragan was taken from said command by writ of habeas corpus issued by a justice of the supreme court of the State of New York, since deceased; that no record of said discharge can be found; that said Ragan was when so discharged a minor.

The committee do report that said bill do pass, with the following amendment, to wit:

"This act shall not authorize any pay, allowance, or bounty to said Ragan for service under such enlistment."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

D. G. SCOOTEN.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3520) granting a pension to D. G. Scooten.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of D. G. Scooten, late a private in Company H, Fifty-ninth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3520) granting a pension to D. G. Scooten, submit the following report:

The claimant was a private in Company H, Fifty-ninth Regiment Illinois Infantry, and was also on detached service in Colonel Ellet's ram fleet on the Mississippi. It was in the latter service that he claims to have received injury to his back while carrying wood, and for this he asks a pension. The records show that he was in hospital for diarrhea, and his discharge says he was unfit for service on account of dysentery, chronic diarrhea, and an ulcer on his leg. There is no record reference to the disability referred to in his application. The examining surgeon says he thinks his is a case of spinal irritation.

In his declaration he says he became disabled while on detached service with the ram fleet, carrying wood.

The letter of transmission says the case is still pending and awaits evidence of the origin of said injury to back in the service; but it has been briefed for rejection on the ground that there is no record evidence of alleged injury, and the claimant is unable to furnish evidence of origin.

The Adjutant-General's report shows that he first served in the Ninth Missouri Volunteers, subsequently the Fifty-ninth Illinois; that he was present for duty December 31, 1861; February 28, 1862, absent with sick leave; April 30, 1862, on detached service, and subsequently borne as on detached service in Colonel Ellet's ram fleet, from April 30, 1862, until discharged, October 8, 1862, at Cairo, Ill., for disability.

The man's record is good, and it is owing to his varied service and the imperfect reports that he can not furnish the evidence in the form required.

His neighbors and acquaintances testify that he was sound prior to service. Dr. Yarnold says he treated him for injury to his back when he returned from service, and claimant told him it was on account of this injury that he was discharged. His certificate of discharge recites several complaints, but does not mention the injury to his back.

The detached duty to which he was assigned was with the ram fleet on the Mississippi, and consisted in carrying cord-wood on his back to fill a barge in order to protect the ram while passing the rebel batteries at Fort Pillow. He says he is unable to comply with the requirements of the office for the reason that he was on detached service; that James Bockner was the only one on said detached service of his company, and he earns that Bockner was killed in a skirmish in 1863; that Colonel Ellet was wounded at Memphis and died at Cairo; that his son Charles, who was present when he was injured, has since died, and Colonel Ellet's brother, who succeeded him, was killed by accident.

The examining surgeon reports—

"Injury to spine by carrying wood on the shoulder up a gangway plank and slipping. He complains of pain at or about the eighth dorsal vertebra, extending around to the breast, on sitting, standing, or stooping, or in any position if maintained for a short time; weakness of the back, and inability to perform any except light manual labor. Also pain in the night, obliging him to get up and walk about. I think his a case of spinal irritation caused by injury as above stated."

Inasmuch as prior soundness is satisfactorily proven, and the disability was identified by his attending physician immediately after discharge, and its continuance and present existence are shown by the certificate of the examining surgeon, and in view of the difficulty of procuring evidence in the cases of soldiers who have been placed on detached service, the committee are of the opinion that the relief for which the claimant appeals to Congress should be conceded.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ABRAM F. SPRINGSTEEN.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11344) to correct the record of Abram F. Springsteen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Abram F. Springsteen, formerly a member of Company A of the Thirty-fifth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, by removing the charge of desertion therefrom and granting him an honorable discharge, to date December 23, 1861.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, the facts in this case are these: The beneficiary of this bill, when a little boy, a few days over eleven years of age, enlisted in Company A, Thirty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, as a drummer, and on the 13th of December, 1861, his mother and sister took him home. The report of the adjutant-general of Indiana shows that he was discharged as a minor, but the report of the Adjutant-General of the Army states that he was a deserter.

Again on the 29th day of July, 1862, when he was twelve years and twenty-four days old, he enlisted in Company I, Sixty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and served until June 21, 1865, when he was discharged at Greensborough, N. C., just two days before he was fifteen years of age. I ask that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered at this time; and in this connection I will print in the RECORD a statement made by Mr. Springsteen giving the facts in his case.

The statement is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 14, 1890.

To whom it may concern:

I have the honor to state that I was born July 5, 1850, at Brooklyn, N. Y., and went with my parents to Indianapolis, Ind., in 1852, where I resided until September 22, 1862, when I was appointed to a clerkship in the War Department.

At the breaking out of the war, in the spring of 1861, I left school and commenced beating the drum for the various recruiting officers who were engaged in raising troops for the field.

In May, 1861, I endeavored to be enlisted in Company A, of the Eleventh Indiana (three months) Volunteers, but was refused admission on account of my size and age, being at that time not quite eleven years of age. I continued, however, beating the drum for the recruiting officers until the last of August, 1861, when I became acquainted with Capt. Henry N. Conklin, of Company A, Thirty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, then organizing at Camp Morton, and whom I once wanted me to enlist in his company as drummer-boy. I told him I was perfectly willing provided he could have me enrolled.

He then consulted with my father in regard to the matter, and then instructed me to give my age as fourteen years instead of eleven years, which I did, and was finally enrolled and mustered in as drummer-boy of Company A, Thirty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, and served with my command at Camp Morton, Indianapolis, Ind., until the 13th of December, 1861, when my regiment received orders to go South. Being afraid that my mother, who, by the way, had not given consent to my enlistment, would cause me trouble, I said nothing to my folks about our intended departure.

On the evening of December 13, 1861, we broke camp and marched to the Governor's Circle, where the colors were presented to the regiment. We then marched to the Cincinnati freight depot, where we were to take the train for the South, but were detained about an hour on account of the making up of a train. I was seated on a foot-bridge, conversing with some of my little acquaintances, when all of a sudden my mother and sister, who in the mean time had heard of our intended departure, came upon me, and on pretense of taking me to a bakery to fill my haversack with cakes, etc., took me home instead, and upon the following day I was taken to the house of an uncle, who resided about 20 miles from Indianapolis, where I remained for about two weeks, when, through the kind assistance of a neighboring farmer, I found my way back to Indianapolis, and while endeavoring to ascertain the destination of my regiment was again captured by my parents, and this time taken to the house of an uncle who resided about 40 miles from Indianapolis and about 12 miles from the railroad station; here I was compelled to remain until about the middle of May, 1862, when on account of a death in my father's family I was taken home, and upon promising to keep away from the soldiers was permitted to remain. Not being used to idleness I soon thereafter secured employment at the United States arsenal, assisting in the manufacture of ammunition, at which I continued until about the last of June, 1862, when I offered to beat the drum for an officer who was recruiting a company of soldiers, and who had a tent pitched in the old State-house yard, just across the street from the arsenal.

When the company was completed I was offered the position of company drummer, provided I could secure the consent of my parents, and upon returning to my home I stated the facts to them, and also informed them that if they would not give consent to my enlistment I would certainly run away from home. This sudden and unexpected announcement on my part had the desired effect, and upon the 20th day of July, 1862, at the age of twelve years and twenty-four days, I was enrolled as drummer-boy of Company I, Sixty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and served faithfully with my command until June 21, 1863, when honorably discharged with my company at Greensborough, N. C., returning to my home at Indianapolis, Ind., on the 3d day of July, 1863, just two days prior to my fifteenth birthday.

During the Georgia campaign, and just prior to the battle of Kennesaw Mountain, I met the Thirty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, to which I had formerly belonged, and upon inquiring for a young drummer-boy by the name of Justice, was informed that upon the arrival of the regiment at Bardonia, Ky., about December 15 or 16, 1861, he as well as myself was discharged as a minor, and the printed adjutant-general's report of Indiana, volume 5, page 132, confirms this report, and upon the strength of this I applied on the 20th day of June, 1890, to the Adjutant-General United States Army for a discharge certificate as of Company A, Thirty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, and in due time I was informed by the Secretary of War that I am charged with deserting my command at Jeffersonville, Ind., which is certainly an error, as I never left Indianapolis with the Thirty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, but was stolen away by my mother and sister upon the night of its departure for the South, December 13, 1861, and through no fault of my own was forcibly detained from my command.

I desire also to state that the photograph inclosed with the papers in my case is an enlarged copy from an ambrotype, which was taken in September, 1861, the original of which may be seen at any time.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ABRAM F. SPRINGSTEEN,
Clerk, Class 1, Surgeon-General's Office.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 14th day of July, A. D. 1890.
[SEAL.] J. A. TERREY, Notary Public.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, although this bill has not been reported to the committee, I have examined it myself and am satisfied it is a proper case for relief.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of this bill and that it be considered in the House? The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN GEORGE.

Mr. KILGORE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4236) pensioning John George.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John George, dependent father of — George, late of Company H, Fourteenth Illinois Volunteers, now deceased. Residence of father is at Ingalls, Kans.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4236) pensioning John George, submit the following report:

John George, the claimant, is the dependent father of Lafayette George, deceased, who enlisted in Company H, Fourteenth Illinois Infantry, May 23, 1861, and was discharged June 13, 1864. Claimant filed application for pension as dependent father of deceased soldier November 20, 1879, alleging in declaration that his son, Lafayette George, died from the effects of chronic diarrhea on the 1st day of January, 1865, at Bloomington, Ill., and that said disease was contracted while in the service. Also that he was dependent upon his son for support.

The testimony in the case corroborates claimant's allegations as to dependence, he being at the time of soldier's death and ever since in reduced financial circumstances. Claimant furnishes no positive proof that his son's death was due to his service, for which cause his claim was rejected at the Pension Bureau. There being no records on file of soldier's regimental hospital, therefore his inability to show record of incurment; but the fact of the prevalence of chronic diarrhea in the service and the soldier's death from that disease in less than seven months after discharge is strong presumptive evidence that the disease was contracted in the service. The evidence shows that claimant has no means for support; that he is eighty years old, and physically unable for the performance of any kind of labor.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: In line 6, after the word "of," insert "Lafayette."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. LETITIA STAENGLER.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I ask that the bill (H. R. 11534) to pension Mrs. Letitia Staenglen may be considered at this time, and I desire to say in connection with it that it has been favorably reported by the Committee on Pensions and appears on the Calendar. The printed report is not in the document-room. I ask for the consideration of the bill at the present time and that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that this bill has been reported by the committee?

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. The bill has been reported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Letitia Staenglen, widow of Gustav Adolph Staenglen, late a private in Company G, Ninth United States Infantry.

The report (by Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11534) granting a pension to Mrs. Letitia Staenglen, have considered the same and report as follows:

The claimant's late husband, Adolphus Staenglen, was a private in Company G, Ninth U. S. Infantry, and served from April 21, 1855, to May 14, 1858. He died of cancer of the stomach, December 17, 1857, and his widow filed an application for pension December 10, 1889, declaring that said disease was the result of his military service.

The records of the Surgeon-General, United States Army, show that the soldier was treated during his term of service for diarrhea, furunculus, intermittent fever, chronic ulcers, pulmonary catarrh, scorbatus, and rheumatism, but the attending physician's certificate of death stating that the cancer was of a year's duration at time of death, the Pension Bureau rejected the widow's claim on the ground that the fatal disease was not due to the soldier's military service.

Accompanying the bill is the testimony of Gustav Garrell to the effect that he was a member of the same company with the deceased soldier and knows that he was discharged the service on account of disability, which disability continued to the time of his death.

James L. Ridgely, of Baltimore, Md., certifies that the soldier, Adolph Staenglen, was in his employ much of the time during a period of twelve years, and that he (Staenglen) was often compelled to stop work on account of chronic disability, apparently of long standing, causing general weakness and principally affecting the spine; also that the soldier was a worthy, honest, and sober man.

William E. Clements, guardian of the claimant's and soldier's five children, swears that Mrs. Staenglen has no other means of support than her manual labor; also, that the children are in part now, and shortly will be wholly, dependent upon her.

In view of the hospital record and other evidence, your committee think it fair to presume that the disease which resulted in the soldier's death had its origin in his military service, and the bill is therefore returned with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH M. AYARS, FORMERLY ELIZABETH M. SUTTON.

Mr. BERGEN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11257) granting a pension to Elizabeth M. Ayars, formerly Elizabeth M. Sutton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to put upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth M. Ayars, widow, formerly Elizabeth M. Sutton, widow of James C. Sutton, of Company D, Tenth New Jersey Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11257) granting a pension to Elizabeth M. Ayars, submit the following report:

The claimant was the widow of James C. Sutton, Company D, Tenth New Jersey Infantry, and who died while in the service March 7, 1862, and she was pensioned as such widow until her remarriage with one William J. Ayars on the 3d day of September, 1865, at which time said pension ceased. She continued as the wife of the said William J. Ayars until his death, which occurred June 23, 1890. By the death of this second husband she is left in her old age in a dependent position, and as it has become customary to restore to the pension-roll applicants of this nature your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM W. CARTER.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10666) to remove the charge of desertion and grant an honorable discharge to William W. Carter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the rolls of Company A, Fourteenth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, the name of William W. Carter, heretofore dropped as a deserter, and grant to said William W. Carter an honorable discharge from said service.

The report (by Mr. CAREY) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10666) to relieve William W. Carter from the charge of desertion, would report—

That the military record of such soldier shows he deserted from Company A, Fourteenth Missouri State Militia Cavalry, July 10, 1864. At this time he had served two years and ten months. He almost immediately re-enlisted in Company G, Sixteenth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, and was mustered out with the same company July 1, 1865. The soldier states he had been arrested under a misapprehension of facts and deserted from the guard-house.

Your committee believe that, in view of the record evidence that this soldier served from January, 1863, to July, 1865 (excepting an interval of a few days), he should be granted the relief asked, and the single blot in a long service should be expunged, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

An abstract of the military record of said William W. Carter is submitted herewith.

Case of William W. Carter, private, Company A, Fourteenth Missouri State Militia Cavalry, subsequently Company L, Fourth Missouri State Militia Cavalry; also of Company G, Sixteenth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, in violation of twenty-second (now fiftieth) Article of War.

RECORD AND PENSION DIVISION, January 29, 1890.

The records show that Wallace C. Carter, private, Company A, Fourteenth Missouri State Militia Cavalry Volunteers, was enrolled and mustered in January 24, 1862, in Dallas County, Missouri, to serve during the war in Missouri. On all rolls subsequent to April 30, 1862, he is borne as William W. Carter.

The Fourteenth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry Volunteers was disbanded early in 1863, and the members transferred to the Fourth and Eighth Regiments Missouri State Militia Cavalry Volunteers, three years' organizations; Company A (and with it William W. Carter) was assigned to the Fourth Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and designated as Company L of that regiment February 4, 1863.

The record shows that he deserted July 24, 1862; returned (probably voluntarily) August 3, 1862, and was restored to duty by Major Sullivan. With this exception his record under this enlistment appears to be very good, until he finally deserted on July 10, 1864, and did not return. (At this time he had already served two years and nearly six months.)

On August 1, 1864, he again enlisted, as William W. Carter, in Company G, Sixteenth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, at Hartsville, to serve "twenty months from November 1, 1863." His record in this organization appears to be good. He was mustered out with his company July 1, 1865, at Springfield, Mo., but, as his enlistment in the Sixteenth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers was in violation of the twenty-second (now fiftieth) Article of War and as existing law affords no relief in this case, because his enlistment in the Sixteenth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers appears to have been made for the purpose of securing bounty or other gratuity to which he would not have been entitled under the terms of his original enlistment, the War Department has heretofore (in October, 1888) denied his application for removal of the charge of desertion from his record.

The provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, do not alter the status of this case.

In an affidavit dated August 27, 1889, this man stated that at the time he left the Fourteenth (Fourth Missouri State Militia Cavalry) he had been arrested under a misapprehension of facts on the part of an officer, was confined in the guard-house, and broke out of said guard-house at the time of his desertion, and at once enlisted in the Sixteenth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers.

No other pertinent testimony in this case is on file at the War Department. H. R. bill 1006, Fifty-first Congress, first session, has been introduced to remove the charge of desertion and issue an honorable discharge to him as of his first enlistment.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Captain and Assistant Surgeon, U. S. Army.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

MR. MORRILL. I now call for the regular order, and ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole may be discharged from the consideration of the bills which will be reached on the Calendar and that they be considered in the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SOLOMON SMITH.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8445) granting a pension to Solomon Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Solomon Smith, late a private in Company D, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8445) granting a pension to Solomon Smith, submit the following report:

Solomon Smith enlisted in Company D, Eleventh Kentucky Infantry, on the 14th day of September, 1861, and faithfully served with his command until April 30, 1862, when he was sent to hospital in Nashville for treatment for chronic diarrhea and piles.

On the 6th of November, 1862, he was discharged for disability, his certificate bearing the following indorsement:

I certify that I have carefully examined Solomon Smith, private of Captain Peay's company, and find him incapable of performing the duties of a soldier, because of chronic diarrhea of nine months' duration, and acites.

HUGH MULHOLLAND,

Surgeon in Charge of General Hospital No. 8, at Nashville.

In 1860 Mr. Smith moved to Bad Axe, Mich., from his home in Kentucky. In 1867 he applied for a pension, but can not secure an allowance of claim on account of his inability to secure the testimony of neighbors and friends in Kentucky as to continuance of disability after service. He has written many letters to ascertain the whereabouts of his former neighbors, but his efforts have proven fruitless.

He is unable to make a personal search for this testimony on account of his destitute circumstances, witnessed by the fact that he is in the poor-house. Ever since his arrival in Bad Axe he has been treated for chronic diarrhea and hemorrhage of the bowels by Dr. William H. Deady, who testifies that he is a complete wreck and almost helpless, and that his lower limbs are partially paralyzed, as a result of his rectal troubles.

The medical examination shows an extreme condition of disability arising from the causes for which Mr. Smith was discharged. The petitioner is now seventy-one years old.

Your committee have carefully examined this case and believe this soldier justly entitled to the relief sought. We therefore return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE R. WRIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6635) for the relief of George R. Wright.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6635) for the relief of George R. Wright, report that they have had the same under consideration, and find that at the time of his enlistment he was a resident of the city of Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, and, being but about eighteen years of age, duly enlisted and was enrolled in the service of the United States on or about the 23d day of December, 1862, at Milwaukee, in Company K, of the Thirty-fourth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry; was immediately transferred to Company F, and on September 14, 1863, was commissioned second lieutenant of the Fourth Wisconsin Battery of Light Artillery; on January 6, 1865, was commissioned second lieutenant of Company F, Forty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry; on February 16, 1865, was commissioned captain of said Company F, Forty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged at Nashville, Tenn., on September 4, 1865.

That said George R. Wright, while in the service of the United States, and while on a scouting expedition, marching from Tallahoma to Stevenson, Ala., in April, 1865, was, for a period of from ten to fifteen days, continually exposed to wet and cold, without proper blankets and food; that up to the time of enlisting, and during the war until the above-mentioned exposure, said Wright was strong and healthy, but during said exposure and thereafter he was afflicted with rheumatism and neuralgic pains in the head and limbs and severe pains in the back and hips, as is shown by the evidence of comrades and commanding officers; that since his said exposure he has ever been subject to periodical attacks of neuralgia and severe pains in back and head, ever increasing in frequency and severity and in their wasting effect on his nervous system, and that this baneful disease, finally culminating in spinal irritation and locomotor ataxia, resulted in loss of control of the muscles, incoherency of speech, severe and frequent convulsions, and an enfeeblement and breaking down of the mind, which resulted in insanity in about the year 1881, which has now become incurable.

That the examining board at Kalamazoo, Mich., on December 15, 1886, examined said claimant and certified that he was insane, wholly incapacitated from all manual or mental labor, and required a constant attendant.

That said Wright was declared insane and admitted to the asylum at Watouosa, Wis., and that he has ever since and still is an inmate of that asylum. In April, 1889, M. J. White, superintendent of said asylum, at the request of the Bureau of Pensions, made a minute description of said Wright's condition, stating in substance that his symptoms presented all the evidence of general paresis; that he had no lucid intervals; that he required the constant services of an attendant for a long time after his convulsive attacks; and, "cause of disease presumably mental strain and exposure in service."

That said George R. Wright was pensioned for disease of the nervous system from November 8, 1886, at $24 per month. In July, 1889, he was granted an increase to $30, dating from April 5, 1889. Declaration for further increase, on ground of total disability, filed January 23, 1889, rejected because "insanity not shown to be result of pensioned cause. The length of time of its occurrence after service—nearly twenty years—would militate its acceptance." (See opinion of Dr. M. T. White, superintendent of insane asylum.) But Dr. White says "that the present insanity was caused presumably by mental strain and exposure in the service."

That said George R. Wright has a wife and three children dependent upon him for support. That his mother, Jane Evelyn Wright, his guardian, although with scant means and well along in years, is called upon to almost wholly support said claimant's wife and children, as well as to contribute to his maintenance in the asylum, said pension of $30 a month not being sufficient to support and clothe him at said institution.

In view of these circumstances your committee are of the opinion that said George R. Wright ought to be granted an increase of pension, and therefore recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM L. HURST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9595) for the relief of William L. Hurst, of Wolfe County, Kentucky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed and authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William L. Hurst, of Wolfe County, Kentucky, at the rate of $50 per month.

The report (by Mr. WILSON, of Kentucky) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9595) granting a pension to William L. Hurst, submit the following report:

William L. Hurst, of Wolfe County, Kentucky, having been duly authorized to recruit a company for service in suppressing the rebellion, he had recruited twenty-three men who had been supplied with arms by Richard Apperson, Jr., then a United States commissioner by authority of the War Department. While encamped in Wolfe County, Hurst and his men, on the 5th day of May, 1862, engaged in a fight with a company of Confederates, in which, at the hands of the enemy, Hurst received a direct front shot in his right eye, destroying same, the bullet still remaining in his head, and at the same time was wounded in the shoulder. Wounded and suffering he, with his aged father, to whose house he had been taken, were captured and taken, night and day, horseback and afoot, 250 miles to Abingdon, Va., where they were handcuffed and confined in the jail for a month, and afterwards taken to Richmond and other points within the Confederacy, where they were confined, Hurst all this time suffering with his wound and receiving no medical treatment.

After remaining in Confederate prisons for about six months Hurst and his father were exchanged. Mr. Hurst says that during his capture and imprisonment he suffered for want of food and medical attention; that he had $100 taken from him; that he was cruelly treated, from all of which he has never recovered. He is a lawyer by profession, is well known in his section, and any statement he makes concerning this matter can be fully relied on. He makes the following statement:

"The bullet by which I lost my right eye is still in my head and must be near my brain, judging from the terrible giddy spells I from time to time have with my head. Whilst my health permitted to attend to my business regularly I did not and would not entertain the idea of seeking a pension. Recently my health has become so much impaired from the bullet in my head that I am unable any longer to regularly or safely transact my ordinary and necessary business, as exposure to the weather and travel greatly affects me, and from the giddiness of my head caused by said wound I can not often travel on the railroad or any fast conveyance."

Mr. Hurst and his company had never been mustered into United States service, although they had been furnished arms by order of the War Department.

Mr. Hurst is near sixty-one years of age. In view of all the facts and there being precedents for same, your committee report back said bill with the recommendation that same be passed, with an amendment, by striking out all after the word "Kentucky," in sixth line.

MR. KILGORE. What would be the effect of that amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would place him on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law.

Mr. KILGORE. How much would that give him?

Mr. MORRILL. That would depend upon the disability. He would be examined by the surgeons.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ISRAEL R. PIERCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9615) for the relief of Israel R. Pierce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Israel J. Pierce, late private Company H, Seventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. YODER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9615) for the relief of Israel R. Pierce, submit the following report:

Israel J. Pierce enlisted as a private soldier in Company H, Seventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, September 3, 1862, and was discharged June 29, 1865. He was a good soldier and served his country faithfully. He was enlisted at Marietta, Ohio, and was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., July 4, 1865. While he was on his way to Marietta, on or about the 6th of July, 1865, at or near Chillicothe, and while riding on the car which was transporting him home, and while the train was moving, he was struck in the eye with a piece of cinder, causing total blindness of the eye and greatly affecting the other eye.

This disability became permanent, and the soldier is suffering severely with it, and the only question that could have affected his right to a pension in the Pension Office long ago was the mere fact that he had been actually mustered out of the service before receiving the injury.

Your committee is of the opinion that it is drawing too fine a sight for the Government to say he is not in the line of duty when he is being transported home to the place of his enlistment. We therefore are of the opinion that he is entitled to a pension and recommend the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions if he is certain as to what the party's name is. There seems to be a difference between the caption and body of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. What is the difference?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the title the name is given as Israel R. Pierce; in the body of the bill it is given as Israel J., and in the report it is given as Israel J.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Michigan thinks "Israel R." is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the question is on amending the bill so as to agree with the title in the particular indicated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M. PORTER, ALIAS WILLIAM S. MACKAY, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4184) to amend the military record of William M. Porter, alias William S. Mackay.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the military record of William M. Porter, alias William S. Mackay, now deceased, so that the same shall show that he was involuntarily and unavoidably absent from his command and duties as a second lieutenant of the Twenty-ninth Regiment United States Infantry, by reason of insanity, instead of absent without leave, from July 18, 1868, to December 21, 1869.

The report (by Mr. OSBORNE) is as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4184) to amend the military record of William M. Porter, alias William S. Mackay, submit the following report:

The facts in this case are fully embraced in the report of the Adjutant-General submitted herewith, and from which it appears, to the satisfaction of your committee, that the records of the War Department should be so amended as to show that said William S. Mackay, alias William M. Porter, now deceased, was unavoidably absent from his command, which is the overt act for which his pay was suspended for a period of about eighteen months, it appearing to your committee beyond question that at the time he so absented himself he was laboring under mental derangement, and was therefore not responsible for his conduct. We would therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 12, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a communication from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, inclosing and requesting information, suggestions, etc., concerning a bill (H. R. 4184) to amend the military record of William M. Porter, alias William S. Mackay, deceased, late first lieutenant, Third Infantry, so as to show that he was involuntarily and unavoidably absent from his command while a second lieutenant in the Twenty-ninth Infantry from July 18, 1868, to December 21, 1869, instead of absent without leave, as now shown by the records.

William S. Mackay served as an enlisted man in the Third Massachusetts Cavalry from April 8, 1864, to September 29, 1865, and in the Eleventh United States Infantry from October 24, 1865, to September 11, 1866, when he accepted an appointment as second lieutenant, Eleventh Infantry. He was transferred to the Twenty-ninth Infantry September 21, 1866; became unassigned April 29, 1869; was assigned to the Third Infantry March 22, 1870; promoted first lieutenant November 4, 1872, and resigned February 15, 1873.

As a commissioned officer he served with his regiment in Virginia from September 11, 1865, to April 19, 1867; on registering duty at Marion, Va., to October 30, 1867; with his company at Lynchburg, Va., to December 23, 1867; as military commissioner at Hillsville, Va., to July 18, 1868, during which latter period he was also acting assistant adjutant-general subdistrict of Lynchburg, from May 30 to July 18, 1868; absent without leave to December 21, 1869; awaiting orders to March 22, 1870, when assigned to Third Infantry, which he joined April 12, 1870; served with that regiment in the Indian Territory to some time in October, 1871; at Fort Lyon, Colorado (being also acting assistant quartermaster and acting commissary of subsistence) to January 1, 1873; and on leave of absence until date of resignation.

The records simply show that, as a matter of fact, Lieutenant Mackay was technically "absent without leave" from July 18, 1868, to December 21, 1869, nearly eighteen months, but the circumstances of his absence indicate very plainly that when he left his post, and for quite a long period afterwards, he was mentally irresponsible for his actions. It was understood he was never able to draw any pay for the period of his absence on account of said record of absence without leave.

Annexed hereto is a copy of the report of this office, dated October 27, 1882, on the application of Lieutenant Mackay (Wm. M. Porter) for a change in his record, with the action of the Secretary of War thereon, which report sets forth the action taken on former applications of the same character. His claim was again presented in October, 1889, accompanied by additional evidence of his mental incompetency and irresponsibility at the time of his unauthorized absence, as well as evidence showing that he was insane at times after leaving the military service, and that he became insane early in the summer of 1889, and while in that condition left the United States, became involved in trouble in Belfast, Ireland, and finally died in a hospital at that place.

The Secretary of War decided, after considering this last application, that Congress is the only authority which can, under the facts set forth, properly provide for an amendment of the record or an allowance of the pay to which he would have been entitled in case the record of absence without leave had not been made.

Had Lieutenant Mackay been apprehended in 1868, before leaving the country, and been found to be insane, he would doubtless have been placed in a hospital or asylum and allowed pay the same as if on duty.

Copies of all the papers which appear to be necessary to a full understanding of the case in its present status are transmitted herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAUNCEY MCKEEVER,
Acting Adjutant-General.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Copy of report and action upon an application of William Mackay Porter, addressed to the Adjutant-General, October 20, 1882, for the removal of the charge of absence without leave against his record as an officer of the Army from July 18, 1868, to December 21, 1869.

[Report of Adjutant-General to the Secretary of War.—Case of William Mackay Porter, late William S. Mackay.]

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, October 27, 1882.

He served as an enlisted man in the Third Massachusetts Cavalry, from April 8, 1864, until September 29, 1865, when he was mustered out with the regiment as sergeant-major. He next enlisted in the regular Army October 24, 1865, and was assigned to Company D, Third Battalion, Eleventh Infantry, with which he served until September 11, 1866, when he was discharged as first sergeant by reason of appointment as second lieutenant, for which appointment he was recommended by many officers of his regiment. He was transferred to the Twenty-ninth Infantry September 21, 1866, and while an officer of this regiment he left his command at Lynchburg, Va., July 18, 1868, and remained absent therefrom without authority until December 21, 1869, when he reported in person to the Adjutant-General in this city and explained his absence as follows:

That on July 18, 1868, while laboring under temporary mental aberration, brought on by pecuniary difficulties, he left his post at Lynchburg, and after wandering purposelessly from city to city he found himself in New Bedford, Mass., where he shipped as cook on board a whaling vessel; that after being some time at sea he came to his senses, and, realizing what he had done, surrendered himself in February, 1869, to the United States consul at Port Louis, Mauritius, the vessel's first port of call; that being out of means and being unable to return to the United States he remained at Port Louis until October 22, 1869, when, with the assistance of the consul, he sailed for the United States, where he arrived December 18, 1869, and reported to the Adjutant-General December 21, 1869.

In view of the peculiar and mitigating circumstances under which he left his command, his explanation of which and of his subsequent wanderings being in part corroborated by the official records, a recommendation that Lieutenant Mackay be dropped from the rolls as a deserter was recalled by the Secretary of War and he was placed on waiting orders, without trial, from December 21, 1869, date he reported to the Adjutant-General. He remained on this status until March 22, 1870, when he was assigned to the Third Infantry; was promoted first lieutenant, Third Infantry, November 1, 1872, and his resignation as such was accepted to take effect February 15, 1873. In September, 1878, the Second Auditor asked for the military history of Lieutenant Mackay, stating that he claimed pay from July 18, 1868, to December 21, 1869, and was informed that he was borne on the records as absent without leave for the period in question, and the Second Auditor was again so informed in June, 1882.

Mr. Porter (formerly Lieutenant Mackay) now reports the circumstances of his leaving his command, etc., and requests that the charge of absence without leave be removed; that if it is not in the power of the Adjutant-General to change the record, this application be submitted for the action of the Secretary of War. Mr. Porter cites section 1265, Revised Statutes, which says that "officers when absent without leave shall forfeit all pay during such absence unless the absence is excused as unavoidable." He claims that his restoration to duty after his acquittal by the Department of intentional wrong, his subsequent promotion, and his being intrusted with responsible duties practically excused his absence as unavoidable.

Mr. Porter claims, and there is nothing of record to disprove the claim, that there was no reason why he should have willfully absented himself so long without leave, but every reason why he should not have done so. He raises the point that, as an officer who is insane can not legally resign, so, by analogy, an officer can not willfully absent himself from his post and duties when insane.

In February, 1872, on a question as to Lieutenant Mackay's status for longevity pay, it was decided by the then Secretary of War, through the Adjutant-General, that Lieutenant Mackay was not entitled to pay for the period while absent, but would be allowed credit therefor in computing length of service.

Respectfully,

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

The action of the Secretary of War in this case, which was communicated by letter to Mr. Porter November 1, 1882, was as follows:

This question having been determined by the Secretary of War in 1872, the present Secretary of War declines to take further action.

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, October 27, 1882.

AMERICAN BARK CLEONE,
Harbor of Port Louis, Mauritius, March 2, 1869.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before you, as the representative of the United States at this port, the following statement:

I am a lieutenant in the Twenty-ninth Regiment of regular infantry in the service of the United States of America, commissioned as such on the 16th day of August, 1866, while serving as an officer of volunteers during the late war. On the 18th day of last July, while serving as assistant adjutant-general on the staff of Bvt. Maj. Gen. O. B. Willcox, United States Army, commanding the district of Lynchburg, Va., I left Lynchburg, without leave, on the evening train for Bristol, Tenn., my accounts with the Government unsettled and without notice or a word of farewell to my family or friends. After a few weeks of purposeless wandering through the States and Canada, I found myself in New Bedford, when, destitute of money and too foolish to give myself up and apply to my friends, I was induced to ship on the bark Cleone for a whaling voyage as cook under the assumed name of William Porter. I have left my wife and child without any warning or provision, deserted the service of the United States, and am in addition a defaulter to a considerable amount until I can settle my accounts.

I can only account for my whole conduct by believing that I was temporarily insane. I had been to sea a little when a boy, and this, with the kind assistance of the steward, who knew my story, enabled me to do my work without detection, although I was utterly ignorant of cooking. The news of my flight and defection was published in all our papers of the 24th or 25th of July with orders for my arrest. My only hope now is to get back home as soon as possible and stand my trial, as my friends are willing and able to relieve me from my pecuniary responsibility. Captain Luce has treated me most kindly, and I would have confided in him, but from the menial position I occupy conversation with him is difficult.

I would not wish the owners of the vessel to lose a cent by me, and would give Captain Luce a draft of New York or England for the amount of my indebtedness to the ship, which draft would be promptly and cheerfully paid on presentation. I would therefore ask you to permit me to surrender myself to you and to send me home for trial. I would cheerfully accept any employment ashore which would support me until you could communicate with Washington if you considered it necessary. If you will grant me the favor of a personal interview at your office I think I can convince you of the entire truth of my representations. As an officer in the United States service I can not longer act as cook of a whaler. Anxiously awaiting an early answer to this communication.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM S. MACKAY,
Lieutenant, Twenty-ninth Infantry, U. S. Army.

UNITED STATES CONSUL, Mauritius.

UNITED STATES CONSULATE,
Port Louis, Mauritius, March 10, 1869.

SIR: On the 27th February last the whale-ship Cleone, of New Bedford, Mass., Capt. Hervey E. Luce, arrived at this port from cruising. On the day after her arrival I received a letter from the cook of the vessel, signed William G. Mackay, informing me that he had been a lieutenant in the United States Army, and attached to the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Infantry, and that while acting on the staff of Maj. Gen. O. B. Willcox he deserted the service, as he was a defaulter to the United States in many thousands of dollars, and wished me to arrest and send him home for trial.

On the receipt of this letter I ordered Mackay ashore and he confirmed the statement made in his letter. He also informed me that the account of his defection and desertion was published in the newspapers in July last, but on looking over a file of papers in this office I could find no account of it.

As I had nothing to prove his statement I concluded to let him proceed in the vessel to sea.

The ship will cruise between this and Madagascar for the next six months, and will probably at the expiration of that time enter this port again.

If Mackay's statement is true and the Government wish to have him arrested and sent home, I will, on receipt of advice from the Department, do everything in my power to further the ends of justice.

Please find the original letter of Mackay to me, a copy of which is on file in this office, marked Inclosure No. 1.

I have, etc.,

NICOLAS PIKE, United States Consul.

ANGEL ISLAND, CAL., June 29, 1869.

GENERAL: Having serious doubts of the sanity of Lieut. W. S. Mackay, who deserted from the Twenty-ninth Infantry at Lynchburg, I am constrained to recommend that his name be dropped from the rolls of the Army without further action. Your attention is invited to the opinion of Assistant Surgeon Rose, accompanying this letter.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. B. WILLCOX,
Brevet Major-General and Colonel,
Late Commanding Twenty-ninth Infantry.

General E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General of the Army, Washington.

RICHMOND, July 9, 1869.

GENERAL: I have the honor to inclose herewith a communication from General Willcox, late commanding Twenty-ninth Infantry, in the case of Lieut. W. S. Mackay.

In my opinion Lieutenant Mackay exhibited symptoms of derangement for at least three weeks previous to his desertion. Up to this time he had been very sociable and was esteemed and respected by all who knew him. His devotedness to his wife and family was a subject of comment by all.

During the three weeks prior to leaving he kept himself aloof from everybody and acted so entirely different as to give rise frequently to the remark that "Mackay was changed."

He had become to some extent, as I afterwards learned, involved in debt, and this, I believe, acting on a disordered brain, drove him to take the step he did. I agree entirely with the opinion of General Willcox, and would respectfully urge that his recommendation in the case be carried out.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE S. ROSE,
Assistant Surgeon, United States Army.

General E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General United States Army, Washington, D. C.

No. 1876.—Certificate of non-indebtedness. Issued to W. S. Mackay.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE, July 13, 1869.

It is hereby certified that the records of this office do not show any accounts or returns received or due from or chargeable against W. S. Mackay, Lieutenant Twenty-ninth Infantry.

This certificate is granted to satisfy the Pay Department that the above-named officer is not indebted to the United States on the books of this office at the date hereof.

Examined and entered:

R. M. CLARKE, Third Auditor.
A. M. GANGEWER, Chief Clerk.

PORT LOUIS, MAURITIUS, September 23, 1869.

GENERAL: I beg most respectfully to state, for the information of the honorable Secretary of War, that with the kind assistance of the United States consul at this port I propose sailing in a few days for New York, where I may hope to arrive about the end of December. The War Department will have been apprised some time ago through Colonel Pike, United States consul, of my having arrived at this place in March last, and of my having informed him that I had been absent from my command without leave since the 18th of July, 1868. This he communicated in due course to the State Department and received a reply to the effect that the Secretary of War would apply to Congress for authority to strike my name from the Army Register; but from private communications received by the last mail I am led to hope that, if I return to the United States and submit to trial by court-martial, it will be possible to avoid the odium attendant on a dismissal.

As I believe I will be able to prove that, at the time I abandoned my duty and left my wife and family without any preparation or warning, I was laboring under mental aberration, I would most earnestly beg that, taking into consideration my previous services and the feelings of my poor wife and family, no action may be taken with a view to my dismissal from the service until I can present myself for trial or report my arrival in the United States. I beg that any communication for me on this subject may be addressed to the care of H. H. Tenny, esq., Jay Cooke & Co., bank, Washington, D. C.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. S. MACKAY,
Lieutenant U. S. Army, late Twenty-ninth United States Infantry.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES CONSULATE,
Port Louis, Mauritius, October 23, 1869.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatches Nos. 45 and 46, with inclosure. Referring to No. 45 and its inclosure, I would respectfully inform you that Lieutenant Mackay, United States Army, left this port in the steamer Mozambique on the 22d instant.

In my despatch No. 99, I informed you that Lieutenant Mackay would sail from this port in the British ship Menden for New York, as I had made arrangements with the captain of that vessel for his passage. On the eve of his sailing the agents of the Menden refused to take passengers. As Lieutenant Mackay was without a home I took him to my own residence, and he has been under my personal observation from that time until his embarkation.

I believe that he requires medical care and attention. There being no direct means of communication from this place to the United States, I deemed it my duty, taking into consideration the peculiar circumstances of the case, to send him home by the steamer, giving him a letter to the consul at Alexandria, that he may be sent to his destination. I trust that under the circumstances I may be permitted to draw on the Department for the amount of his passage, etc. I have been assured by persons under whose observation Lieutenant Mackay has been that, while his conduct here has been uniformly good, yet he at times evinced symptoms of mental aberration, although I believe him to be now of sound mind. I may add that he states, in the event of his being exonerated from the charge of absence without leave, he will willingly refund the amount of his passage from any pay which he may become entitled to.

I have, etc.,

NICOLAS PIKE, United States Consul.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 21, 1869.

GENERAL: I have the honor to state for your information that on the 18th of July, 1868, I left my command at Lynchburg, Va., without permission, and have remained absent until this date. The circumstances attending my absence are such as I trust will warrant a merciful consideration of my case.

At the time I left and for some days previously I was, I firmly believe, laboring under a mental aberration, brought on by pecuniary difficulties, which, preying on my mind, induced me to leave my command and my family without the slightest desire or intention to desert the service. After a purposeless wandering from city to city, of which even now I can give no clear account, I found myself in the city of New Bedford, and there was shipped as cook on a vessel bound on a whaling voyage.

After some time at sea, I came to my proper senses, and the magnitude of the offense which I had committed in leaving my post was first clearly presented to my mind. There was no possibility of my communicating with my friends or surrendering myself until the arrival of the vessel at her first port of call, Mauritius, in February last, when I at once communicated my case to the United States consul, who at once reported my arrival to the Department of State. From that time to this I have been using every exertion to return to the United States, but from want of means I could not do so until the 22d of October last, when, with the assistance of the consul, I was at length enabled to leave Mauritius, arriving at New York on the 18th instant, and reporting to you in person at the War Department this day.

Such, general, is as nearly as I can state a true outline of my case, borne out, I believe, by the communications of the United States consul for Mauritius and by the opinions of the medical and other officers of the post of Lynchburg, at the time of my departure. As to my standing and efficiency as an officer and my personal character previous to my departure, I rely on the favorable report of the many officers under and with whom I have had the honor to serve, both as a regimental officer and while on detached service as a military commissioner, and a registering officer in Virginia, especially Bvt. Maj. Gen. O. B. Willcox, then colonel of the Twenty-ninth Infantry. I have, during my service, always endeavored to devote my whole time and attention to my duties, and up to this unfortunate occurrence I have never laid myself open to the slightest censure from my superior officers. I may add that my debts were mainly owing to the many expensive changes of station, which, with a delicate wife and little baby, I had to make in the course of one year, depending as I was solely on my pay.

I would, therefore, earnestly beg that, taking all these circumstances into consideration, with the fact that I was not mentally accountable for my actions at the time of my flight, the General of the Army will be pleased to restore me to duty, assigning me to some post where I may be able to prove, by unceasing application and correct performance of my duties, how much I desire to wipe out the sole blot on my military record, and how grateful I feel for the kind consideration thereby extended to me and mine.

I have the honor to be, general, your obedient servant,

W. S. MACKAY,

Second Lieutenant, United States Army.

THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
United States Army.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 17, 1869.

I hereby certify that I have been Mr. William M. Porter's family physician for about fifteen years, during which time I have noticed mental aberration, steadily increasing in degree and frequency. The first severe attack was in the year 1866, when he was in the Army, lasting seventeen months. The next in the years 1873, 1875, and 1878.

Each time his mental condition grew worse during the attacks and cleared up less and less between them. Now on account of a severe attack of pleurisy, both physical and mental power have been lost, and he wanders over the country doing the most insane things and often even threatens the lives of his wife and children when they refuse to oppose him in anything.

O. M. MUNCASTER, M. D.

Subscribed and sworn to before me on the 23d July, A. D. 1889, and I further certify that I have no interest in his pension or other claims against the Government.

T. S. HOPKINS,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

Statement of R. S. Lacey, late captain and assistant quartermaster volunteers, in re William M. Porter, alias Mackay, late lieutenant United States Army.

I was captain and assistant quartermaster volunteers in the late war. From July, 1865, till the spring of 1869, I was stationed at Lynchburg, Va., as superintendent of Freedmen's Bureau affairs. When General O. B. Willcox was assigned to duty at this post in 1866, I was placed by him at his headquarters and remained until 1869. One of the general's aids was said Lieut. W. S. Mackay. Under my quasi staff duty, I was at all times in constant daily association with said Mackay at headquarters. In the fall of 1868, without slightest warning or notice to myself or other officers at headquarters, said Mackay abandoned his duty and disappeared. No one could assign cause for his singular conduct. I contributed money with others to send his destitute and penniless wife to her parents.

Subsequently, however, I learned that he went directly from Lynchburg to some seaport in New England, where he shipped on a whaler under an assumed name as a galley cook for a three years' cruise. This confirmed my judgment that said Mackay's disappearance was due to some sudden uncontrollable impulse or mental aberration. Under such belief I subsequently assisted largely in securing his return to America from Australia. When afterwards he exhibited the same mental disturbance or loss of mental equilibrium at St. Louis, Mo., by abandoning business and family without intimation and without any known cause, and enlisting as a private soldier under an assumed name, his act was certainly in consonance with his insane disappearance in Lynchburg in 1868. His present chronic insanity I regard as merely the permanent exhibition of what has always existed since 1863 in ephemeral form.

R. S. LACEY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 20, 1889.

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, Soldiers' Home, D. C., July 23, 1889.

The within accords with my own opinion and belief. There was no earthly cause discovered for a sane man to quit a fine position in the service at Lynchburg, no trouble nor incentive known. I think he has been insane for many years with occasional lucid intervals of wild impulses.

O. B. WILLCOX,

Brigadier-General U. S. Army, Governor Soldiers' Home.

I, Henry A. Hambright, major United States Army, do certify that I first became acquainted with William Mackay Porter when he was first sergeant of Colonel Chipman's company, C, Third Battalion, Eleventh Infantry, in the fall of 1865; that in the summer of 1866 said William Mackay Porter, known to me as William Mackay, was commissioned as second lieutenant, United States Infantry, and assigned to my company, E; that he joined at Norfolk, Va., and with his wife formed a member of my family and was treated as such.

As an enlisted man and officer Lieutenant Mackay enjoyed the respect of his inferiors and confidence of his superiors; he was devoted to his duty, of temperate habits, and in a daily intercourse of many months I found him filling all the requirements of an officer and a gentleman. In July, 1868, he was serving on the staff of Bvt. Maj. Gen. O. B. Willcox, I believe, as acting assistant adjutant-general, as well as military commissioner of the twenty-eighth subdistrict of the first military district, Virginia. I learned about this time that he had left his post at Lynchburg, and shortly after that he was reported as absent without authority.

It was my impression then, when he left his station and duties, that he must have been temporarily insane, as I never learned of any cause or reason for his action. This opinion I also had from others better able to judge and given after the first heat of indignation at the apparently heartless abandonment of his wife had passed away.

HENRY A. HAMBRIGHT,
Major, United States Army, Retired.

LANCASTER, PA., July 25, 1889.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 29, 1889.

SIR: I have to inclose herewith authenticated copy of a letter from the attorney of Lieut. W. Mackay Porter, with original inclosures, also certified by the Department, and to request you to use your good offices in securing the release of Lieutenant Porter from prison, as these papers seem to establish the fact of his irresponsibility because of unsound mind.

I am, sir, your obedient servant.

ALVEY A. ADEE, Acting Secretary.

SAMUEL G. RUBY, Esq.,
Consul of the United States, Belfast.

UNITED STATES CONSULATE, Belfast, September 11, 1889.

SIR: Your dispatch No. 9, of August 29, in relation to W. Mackay Porter, is received with inclosures as stated. As I had already succeeded in securing Mr. Porter's discharge I suppose I can act no further in the matter.

He is now lying in the hospital too weak to rise from his bed, and it is highly probable that he will not live longer than a few weeks.

He has a small sum of money, not sufficient to pay his expenses to the United States. Should he so far recover as to be able to make the voyage, as I understand it I have no authority to return him at the expense of the Government.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

SAMUEL G. RUBY, Consul.

HON. WILLIAM F. WHARTON,
Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES CONSULATE, Belfast, September 20, 1889.

SIR: I beg to inform you that W. Mackay Porter, in relation to whom your dispatch No. 9 of August 29 was written, died in the hospital here on the 18th instant.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

SAMUEL G. RUBY, Consul.

HON. WILLIAM F. WHARTON,
Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

2011 I STREET, CITY OF WASHINGTON, October 29, 1889.

MY DEAR GENERAL: Mrs. Porter will hand you this. She is the widow of William Mackay Porter, who was once a clerk in the Adjutant-General's Office.

There is a singular history connected with this man, involving great suffering to his wife, and all growing out of fits of aberration of mind, to which he was subject. Mrs. Porter is perfectly truthful and can give you such points as you desire.

Her case, for pension and some pay, I believe, she tells me is to go before the Secretary to-morrow, and it is important she should have testimony about his strange actions while suffering from aberration of mind. He was an officer of the Twenty-ninth Infantry and left his post mysteriously in 1873 under the delusion that he was a defaulter. Investigation satisfied me that it was not so, and I caused him to be returned to duty. He afterwards resigned, went off and enlisted, and was reported absent without leave. He was relieved from the penalty, except loss of pay, on the same ground, and was detailed as a clerk in the office. When sane he was an excellent man and clerk.

General Breck may remember that he paid a voucher for sending Short, a messenger, after him once when he went away in the same singular manner. His end was really tragic. He wandered off, got a passage in some way to Ireland, was arrested there for some irregularities, was found to be insane, died in a hospital in his native city, attended by the clergyman who was his pastor in childhood, and was buried beside his father, far away from wife and children.

This is a genuine case, and if you can do anything to help Mrs. Porter (I mean in finding evidence) you will serve a most meritorious woman who has borne unusual trials with wonderful fortitude.

Sincerely yours,

E. D. TOWNSHEND.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, November 13, 1889.

SIR: Referring to the application filed by you for an amendment of the records of the War Department so that they shall show that William M. Porter, alias William S. Mackay, now deceased, was involuntarily and unavoidably absent from his command and duties as a second lieutenant of the Twenty-ninth United States Infantry, instead of absent without leave from July 13, 1868, to December 21, 1869, I have the honor to inform you that the Secretary of War, to whom the papers have been submitted, is of the opinion that Congress is the only authority which can, under the facts of record, properly allow or definitely decide the claim for change of record and allowance of pay.

The War Department will be prepared, in case any committee of Congress having this claim under consideration shall call for information, to furnish the committee with all the facts of record bearing upon the circumstances and cause of Mr. Porter's absence.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. KELTON, Adjutant-General.

D. I. MURPHY, Esq.,
Attorney, P. O. Box 534, Washington, D. C.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MALINDA LEMMON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8303) granting a pension to Malinda Lemmon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Malinda Lemmon, widow of Samuel Lemmon, deceased, a soldier in Captain Wilkins's company of Indiana militia, from September 18 to November 18, 1811, and pay her a pension from the passage of this act at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. PARRETT) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8303) granting a pension to Malinda Lemmon, have considered the same and report:

The claimant's late husband, Samuel Lemmon, was a private in Captain Wilkins's company, Indiana militia, from September 18 to November 18, 1811. The soldier died in March, 1846, and on May 6, 1878, she filed an application for pension, which was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the service was rendered against the Indians prior to the beginning of the war of 1812, and hence there is no provision of law granting a pension on account of same.

J. N. Land, of Carlisle, Ind., states that the claimant is eighty-four years old and entirely destitute.

There are many precedents for the allowance of pension on account of service in the old Indian wars, and the bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JANE FEE.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9431) granting a pension to Jane Fee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Jane Fee, widow of Michael Fee, late a member of Company G of the Second United States Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9431) granting a pension to Jane Fee, have considered the same and report:

The claimant's late husband, Michael Fee, was a private in Company G, Second United States Infantry, and served from October 20, 1841, to August 29, 1846. During the last three months of his service he was on recruiting duty at Binghamton, N. Y.

The soldier died April 11, 1885, and after the passage of the Mexican war service pension act in January, 1887, his widow (this claimant) filed an application for pension under that act, but the same was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the soldier was not at the seat of war, nor en route thereto, at any time during his term of service.

Mrs. Fee's identity as the widow of Michael Fee is fully established by the testimony of Michael McBride, Elijah Castle, and others. It is further shown by testimony submitted to your committee that the claimant is in bad health and very poor. She is now about fifty-seven years old and dependent almost entirely upon her friends and children for support.

Your committee have recognized the justice of applications of this character in a general bill reported to the House at this session, and the bill for the relief of Jane Fee is therefore reported back with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JAMES P. KIRBY.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8605) to amend the military record of James P. Kirby.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to amend the military record of James P. Kirby, late a private of Company D, Ninety-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, so as to show the said Kirby discharged by reason of an injury to the left side caused by an accidental fall received on the line of a railroad on the march from Piedmont to Front Royal about May —, 1862.

The report (by Mr. LANSING) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8605) to amend the military record of James P. Kirby, submit the following report: James P. Kirby enlisted in the Ninety-fourth New York Volunteers in 1861. In May, 1862, he received an injury to his side and stomach from a fall upon a railroad track. He was discharged for such injury, but the cause of discharge was stated to be cancer of the stomach. By a communication from the War Department it is stated the Department is of opinion that the record "showing him discharged by reason of cancer of stomach is erroneous."

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HOSEA STONE.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I find upon the Calendar a bill for the correction of the military record of Hosea Stone, which I did not know had been reported, and I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be considered at this time.

There was no objection.

The bill (H. R. 2593) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to correct the military record of Hosea Stone so as to show that he has been relieved from the charge of desertion against him as a member of Battery A, Fourth United States Artillery, and to issue to said Stone an honorable discharge, to date from the 21st day of July, 1865, from said battery.

The report (by Mr. CAREY) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2593) to correct the military record of Hosea Stone, having considered the same respectfully report:

That all the facts of this case are fully set out in the military record of this soldier, which is herewith printed as a part of this report. He was continuously in the military service of the United States from October 19, 1862, to July 21, 1865, when he is charged with desertion. This soldier's good service during nearly the entire period of the civil war, and the further fact that he did not desert until war was over, the committee think will justify Congress in granting the relief proposed by the bill.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, May 16, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith bill (H. R. 2593) for removal of charge of desertion from record of Private Hosea Stone, Battery A, Fourth United States Artillery, and in compliance with the request of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, to report that the records of this office show that Hosea Stone, private, Battery A, Fourth United States Artillery, enlisted October 19, 1862, for the balance of his volunteer service; was discharged February 1, 1864, by reason of re-enlistment; re-enlisted February 1, 1864, in Battery A, Fourth United States Artillery, for three years; deserted July 21, 1865, at Camp Bailey, Maryland, and is still a deserter at large.

The case of this man is not covered by the provisions of the act of March 2, 1869, the only law on the subject of removal of charge of desertion now in force, and in justice to other enlisted men of the regular Army, whose status is similar to that of this man, I can not recommend favorable action in this individual case.

Very respectfully,

C. McKEEVER,
Acting Adjutant-General.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, June 5, 1890.

Official copy.

ARTHUR MACARTHUR, JR.,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH DASCOMB.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3766) granting a pension to Joseph Dascomb.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Dascomb, dependent father of Charles B. Dascomb, late a private in Company D, Fourth New Hampshire Infantry.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3766) granting a pension to Joseph Dascomb, submit the following report:

The claimant is the father of Charles B. Dascomb, who enlisted in Company D, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, August 12, 1862, was mustered out of service August 24, 1863, and died May 19, 1874. The mother of the soldier applied for pension in 1883, and died in March, 1885. The father's application has been rejected because, in the opinion of the medical referee, the soldier's death-cause, scrofulous acres, is not satisfactorily connected with the service.

It is shown by the record that the soldier was under treatment for malarial fever from July 4, 1864, to December 2 of said year, for erythema in February, 1865, and for congestion of lungs from March 6 to July 24, 1865.

The case was specially examined to determine the general merits of the same, in particular with respect to the soldier's death-cause. Dependence has been clearly established by the evidence obtained. Lay evidence only is obtainable with reference to soldier's condition from discharge to death, and its immediate cause, by reason of the death of the attending physician. The special examination was very thorough, and in submitting his report the examiner says:

"The lay evidence would appear to establish the fact that the soldier returned from the service sick, and continued to grow worse until his death, in May, 1874. Witnesses are all reliable. I think the case is one of merit, and that, giving the claimant the benefit of any doubts that may exist, it should be admitted."

Notwithstanding the favorable recommendation of the special examiner, the medical referee objected to the allowance of the claim because of the absence of the medical evidence heretofore referred to.

Your committee, however, concur in the conclusion reached by the special examiner, and report favorably on the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

APHIA M. BROWN.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4707) granting a pension to Aphia M. Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Aphia M. Brown, mother of James F. Brown, late a private in Company D, Ninth New Hampshire Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4707) granting a pension to Aphia M. Brown, submit the following report:

Aphia M. Brown is the mother of James F. Brown, who, while serving as corporal in Company D, Ninth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, was killed in action near Petersburg, Va., in September, 1864. She applied for pension as a dependent mother, but her claim has been rejected by the Pension Office because the soldier left surviving him a widow, who is also dead. Another son of this aged woman was likewise killed in battle, but he also left a widow surviving him. James F. Brown aided very materially in the support of his mother, as is clearly established by the evidence on file.

The claimant is now eighty-nine years of age, and an inmate of the poor-house of the county in which she resides, as is certified to by the proper authorities. She can not long survive, and should no longer be permitted to be a charge upon the community.

Your committee therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ANNE MATTOCKS.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6800) granting a pension to Anne Mattocks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anne Mattocks, an applicant for a pension under claim numbered 334307 as dependent mother of Ichabod W. Mattocks, late a soldier of Company A, First Vermont Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6800) granting a pension to Anne Mattocks, submit the following report:

Anne Mattocks is the mother of Ichabod W. Mattocks, who enlisted in September, 1861, in Company A, First Vermont Cavalry, and died July 15, 1864, of wounds received in action.

It appears that while home on furlough, in the spring of 1864, he married a woman who was recognized by the Pension Office as his widow, and was paid a pension until her remarriage in May, 1865.

Having left a widow surviving him, the mother's claim had to be rejected by the Pension Office. The claimant was deserted by the father of the soldier as early as 1845. She obtained a divorce from him in 1852, and has remained single ever since. Another son died while in service, and a third son contracted disease in the Army and died from its effects after discharge.

Anne Mattocks was supported by her sons, the one on whose account she claimed pension being the principal contributor, as it appears from the evidence on file. She has by her own efforts managed to eke out an existence, but being now seventy-six years of age has become dependent upon her friends for support.

Your committee are of opinion that the case is meritorious, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ABBIE A. COLSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6217) granting a pension to Abbie A. Colson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abbie A. Colson, of Winterport, Me., non-compos sister of John L. Colson, late a private in the Third Regiment Mounted Artillery, Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $16 per month, and the said pension be paid to her legally constituted guardian.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6217) granting a pension to Abbie A. Colson, submit the following report:

Abbie A. Colson is the insane sister of John L. Colson, who enlisted December 30, 1861, in the Third Battery, Maine Artillery, was discharged therefrom June 17, 1865, and died of disease contracted in the service, October 31, 1868, leaving no wife or minor children surviving him. The mother of the soldier received a pension on account of his death and dependence upon him, which she drew until her death in April, 1885. The father of the soldier is also dead.

The proposed beneficiary applied for a pension, but her claim has been rejected by the Pension Office, because she had passed the pensionable age at the time of her mother's death. She is shown to have no property of any kind, and no income except $2 per month State pension, and is taken care of by a widowed sister, who is compelled to earn her own support by manual labor.

The case comes clearly within the well established rules of Congress, and your committee, therefore, report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "regiment," in line 7, and inserting therein instead the word "battery."

The amendment recommended by the committee in the report was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE McMANUS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3376) granting a pension to Catharine McMannus.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine McMannus, widow of John McMannus, late a sergeant in Company D, Third Regiment New Jersey Infantry, at the rate of $12 per month from his decease, and $2 additional per month for each minor child under sixteen years of age at his decease.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3376) granting a pension to Catharine McMannus, submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of John McMannus, sergeant Company D, Third New Jersey Infantry, who enlisted May 26, 1861, and was discharged June 23, 1864. He was wounded in the knee at the battle of North Anna, Va., May 28, 1864. The evidence of several persons shows that this wound never healed, but became a running sore and made necessary the use of a pair of crutches. The evidence of comrades and neighbors shows that he was a man of good habits before, during, and after his enlistment.

The evidence of Joseph W. Campbell, M. D., on file with the claim, is to this effect: He swears that he treated the soldier in 1870 for chronic diarrhea and for gunshot wound of knee, which was a bad running sore. E. A. Marsh, surgeon, swears that he treated the soldier for this wound, and, up to a short time before his death, that the wound never healed and was continuously discharging, which caused weakness and general debility of the entire system. This is also proven by the testimony of other physicians.

While in this weak and suffering condition the soldier went to a small brook near his home after dark; that this brook could be crossed by stepping upon small stones; he at the time used a pair of crutches to assist him in walking; his body was found the next morning in the brook, he having fallen into the water and been drowned. It is the opinion of all the people who knew him that his death in this manner was due to his condition caused by his wounds. The claim was rejected on account of the manner of the death. The evidence is that he was a good soldier, and there is no doubt his death was due to his wounds.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, there ought to be an amendment to that bill. Without an amendment it would carry arrears.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no amendment recommended by the committee, but a motion to amend is in order.

Mr. MORRILL. The committee really recommended the amendment, but they may have neglected to put it in. I move that the bill be amended by striking out, in line 8, the words "from his decease," so as to have the pension take effect on the passage of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SOLOMON R. RUCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4722) granting a pension to Solomon R. Ruch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations of the pension laws, the name of Solomon R. Ruch, late a private in Company A, Fourteenth United States Infantry.

The report (by Mr. CRAIG) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4722) granting a pension to Solomon R. Ruch, submit the following report:

That soldier enlisted February 1, 1862, and was discharged January 18, 1863. Filed a claim for pension December 2, 1881, alleging that he contracted chronic diarrhea in June, 1862, and that his eyesight began to fail and has continued to grow worse.

This claim was specially examined, and, after full investigation, was rejected February, 1886, on the ground that no chronic diarrhea has existed in a pensionable degree since enlistment, and that the record shows that the eyes were affected prior to enlistment. In the certificate of disability is recited:

"I certify that I have carefully examined the said Solomon R. Ruch . . . and find him incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of near-sightedness existing prior to enlistment."

The evidence on the special examination showed he had been near-sighted from infancy. The claimant could not and did not deny this disability. Near-sightedness existed before the war, but he contended he contracted disease of the eyes in the service. There is on question of origin in the service no record evidence or medical testimony. Two comrades testify to a recollection of watery or sore eyes. There is evidence of neighbors of complaints of sore eyes shortly after discharge.

Prior to rejection claimant had three examinations: March, 1862. Surgeon says impaired vision of both eyes; letters one-half inch in size can not be distinguished 2 feet distant; pupils large. October, 1862. Board doubt disability and origin of disease of eyes to any great extent. July 9, 1864. Another board, under instruction, report upon a test examination disease of eyes, and rate total third grade for what appears to be a case of hytitis with nerve changes and cataract capsular, result of inflammatory trouble; no signs of syphilis. The evidence was all twice reviewed on appeal to Secretary of the Interior and rejection confirmed, although the Secretary says he inclines to think there is some merit in the case.

Your committee, in view of the fact that claimant is now blind, believe it a proper case to grant some relief and recommend the passage of the bill, amended so as to place beneficiary on the rolls at $18 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee, adding at the end of the bill the words "at the rate of eighteen dollars per month," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

J. D. GOLDEN.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5133) for the relief of J. D. Golden, and that the bill be put upon its passage.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to amend the records of his office by placing the name of J. D. Golden upon the rolls of Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, three months' service, as a musician, as of the 22d day of April, 1861, and issue to him an honorable discharge as of the 24th day of July, 1861.

The report (by Mr. CAREY) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5133) for the relief of J. D. Golden, having considered the same, respectfully report:

That J. D. Golden enlisted in Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, three months' men, on the 21st day of April, 1861, and served in the said company as a musician until the 24th day of July, 1861, when said company was discharged by reason of expiration of service.

The name of J. D. Golden does not appear on the muster-rolls of the said company for the reason that Capt. William Sirwell, the captain of the company, enlisted a number of men in excess of the regulations, and at the expiration of the term of service was compelled to drop from the muster rolls such excess. Among these was the name of the claimant. That J. D. Golden performed the service during the term of his enlistment there can be no doubt. He should be paid for such service and the committee believe he is entitled to the military record which will be established by the passage of the bill.

All the facts bearing upon this case are fully shown by the accompanying affidavits of the officers of the company and petition of the claimant, which are printed herewith and made a part of this report. The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, County of Armstrong, ss:

In the matter of change of record, etc., case of J. D. Golden, late musician Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers (three months' service).

On this 3d day of May, A. D. 1884, personally appeared before me, a justice of the peace in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, William Sirwell, aged 65 years, a resident of Kittanning, in the county of Armstrong and State of Pennsylvania, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declared in relation to aforesaid case as follows: That he was late captain of Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers (three months' service).

This claimant enlisted in Company B, as musician, April 16, 1861. He did duty as musician of the company from date of his enlistment up to discharge of company. He never received pay for his services, nor was he mustered out with the company, for the reason that I had with me an excess of men and when muster-roll was made I dropped his name, with that of others, in order to make muster-roll conform with the regulations at that time. His post-office address is Kittanning, Armstrong County, Pennsylvania. He further declares that he has no interest in said case and is not concerned in its prosecution.

In the matter of correction, etc., in case of J. D. Golden, late musician Company B, Ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers (three months' service).

On this 30th day of April, A. D. 1884, personally appeared before me, a clerk of court of quarter sessions in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, N. G. Pinney, aged forty-five years, a resident of Brookville, in the county of Jefferson, and State of Pennsylvania, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declared in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

That he was late first lieutenant of Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers (three months' service). Was one of the original members of said company and served with it up to discharge. This applicant as above was enlisted in Kittanning, Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, as musician of the company, April 16, 1861, and was mustered with the company at Harrisburg, Pa., as musician, April 22, 1861.

The claimant does duty as musician of company from enlistment to muster out, both in company and regiment band of the regiment. The claimant never received his pay, nor was he mustered out with the company, although his service had been continuous and he was present at muster out of the company, for the reason that Captain Sirwell had an excess of men along with company during the term, and when we came to be mustered out he, the captain, dropped this claimant's name as musician and substituted the names of William W. Wallace and Thomas C. Wilson as musicians, although neither one of last named had ever done a day's duty as musicians of company, but instead had done duty as privates.

His post-office address is Brookville, Jefferson County, Pennsylvania. He further declares that he has no interest in said case and is not concerned in its prosecution.

That the captain, William Sirwell, took an excess of men with him into the service and kept the excess with him until the company was discharged as above. When we came to be discharged the captain dropped my name from the muster out roll as musician and substituted the name of William W. Wallace or Thomas C. Wilson in its stead, although neither of them had ever done a day's service as musician. As a consequence I never was mustered out and never received pay for my services, nor a credit for my services, which I value highly. The application is made with a view of having the record changed so as to show my service and to secure an honorable discharge for the same, and pay for said service.

SAMUEL N. LEE, Justice of the Peace.

I, H. J. Hays, clerk of the county court in and for aforesaid county and State, do certify that Samuel N. Lee, esq., who hath signed his name to the foregoing declaration and affidavit, was at the time of so doing an acting justice of the peace in and for said county and State, duly commissioned and sworn; that all his official acts are entitled to full faith and credit, and that his signature thereunto is genuine.

H. J. HAYS,

Clerk of the Orphans' Court of Armstrong County, Pennsylvania.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The petition of the subscriber, a citizen of Kittanning Borough, in the county of Armstrong, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, respectfully sheweth: That he enlisted in Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers (three months' service), as musician, at Kittanning, Pa., April 16, 1861, and was mustered with the company as musician at Harrisburg, Pa., April 22, 1861; that he did duty as musician of the company from date of enlistment up to and at discharge of company, July 24, 1861; that the captain, William Sirwell, in making out the muster in and out roll, dropped the name of your petitioner from the same in an unauthorized and unwarranted manner, so that now in the Adjutant-General's Office your petitioner is without record of said service, as also pay for the said service. Your petitioner therefore respectfully prays that your honorable Congress will pass an enabling act giving your petitioner a record and pay for said service rendered as above in the armies of the United States; and your petitioner will ever pray, etc.

J. D. GOLDEN.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN YOST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1863) granting a pension to John Yost.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Yost, late a member of Company I, Thirtieth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1863) granting a pension to John Yost, submit the following report:

The claimant enlisted August 13, 1863, and served in Company I, Thirtieth Wisconsin Volunteers, and was mustered out with his company September 20, 1865. While on duty in Montana he suffered from mountain fever, diarrhea, rheumatism, and scurvy, and was confined in hospital at Fort Union. Of this hospital there seems to be no record in the office of the Surgeon-General, but the treatment of claimant is fully established by officers and comrades of his company, some of the latter being confined with him in said hospital; also by nurse attending him, who testifies that he was being treated for mountain fever. The testimony shows that the regimental surgeon attending him has since died.

This sickness was in the spring of 1864, and is fully sustained by the records in the Adjutant-General's Office, which show him present with regiment until February 29, 1864; absent during March and April, 1864; left at Nebraska City with sick men, and sick until June 30, 1864; rejoined company July 26, 1864, from absence with sick. The records in the Surgeon-General's Office show that claimant was "admitted to post hospital, Louisville, Ky., September 8, 1865, with intermittent fever."

The sergeant of the company testifies to his sickness with mountain fever in Montana, and in hospital at Louisville, and says he was never well after his first sickness at Fort Union, and when with the company was only able for light duty.

Norman L. Burk, a comrade, swears that he knows of his sickness, and that he was in hospital in Montana, and that he believes he never fully recovered from the effects of the same during his term of service. He also testifies to his suffering from scurvy in March and April, 1865.

John McClosse attended him as a nurse in the hospital in Montana and knows he never fully recovered.

Elisha J. Horton, a comrade, was sick in same hospital and corroborates the other witnesses as to this and later sicknesses in service.

It is fully established that claimant was a sound man at the time of enlistment, and six reputable men of his neighborhood testify to the fact that he returned home immediately after his discharge sick with chronic diarrhea and that he has never recovered, and to his inability by reason of his physical condition to perform manual labor; the testimony is uncontradicted.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. BRIDGET HANDERHINE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R.

6297) granting a pension to Mrs. Bridget Handerhine, widow of Daniel Handerhine.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Bridget Handerhine, widow of Daniel Handerhine, late of Company B, First District of Columbia Infantry, and of Company B, Second District of Columbia Veterans.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6297) granting a pension to Mrs. Bridget Handerhine, have considered the same and respectfully submit the following report:

The claimant's late husband, Daniel Handerhine, was a private in Company A, First District of Columbia Volunteers, and Company B, same regiment, from October 20, 1861, until mustered out with his company September 12, 1865. He died at Windsor, N. Y., December 6, 1870, and on the 22d of August, 1879, his widow (this claimant) filed an application for pension, declaring that his death was caused by chronic diarrhea which originated in the service and line of duty.

The widow's claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau February 8, 1883, on the ground that there is no record of the soldier having incurred diarrhea in the service, and the claimant could not furnish the testimony required of her.

The evidence presented by the claimant is as follows:

Michael Handerhine and John Dillon swear that they were employed by the Government and saw the soldier at Alexandria, Va., in January and February, 1865, and he was at that time suffering severely from dumb ague and chronic diarrhea.

Willoughby Panley swears that he was a member of the same company with claimant's husband and personally knows that said Daniel Handerhine was taken sick with diarrhea while in line of duty, at Alexandria, Va., on or about February 15, 1865, and he was quite sick with said disease.

Dr. George A. Thayer testifies that at the time of enlistment the soldier was sound, robust, and healthy; that in the month of December, 1864, the soldier was at home on furlough and he (the doctor) was called upon to treat him for chronic diarrhea and fever; also that after the soldier's discharge, to wit, about December, 1865, he was again called to attend him on account of said disease. At that time the soldier was emaciated and suffering severely from diarrhea and its results, intermittent fever, etc. Witness treated the soldier until June, 1866.

John F. Sullivan swears that he was boarding in the house of Mr. Francis Ellis, at Windsor, N. Y., and personally knows the fact that Daniel Handerhine died there December 6, 1870, and it was the common report that he died of chronic diarrhea. John O. Sullivan testifies to the same effect as the last-named witness.

Upon showing that she is in very poor health and so needy as to be dependent upon charity for support, the claimant's application was made special by the Pension Bureau.

After a review of all the facts your committee are of the opinion that whatever doubts arise respecting the merits of the claim are not too great to be justly resolved in the claimant's favor, and the bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTIAN SCHAUB.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10106) granting an increase of pension to Christian Schaub.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Christian Schaub, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, to $50 a month, payable to his legally constituted guardian.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10106) granting an increase of pension to Christian Schaub, submit the following report:

Christian Schaub served as private in Company A, Sixteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, from July 15, 1863, to August 21, 1865. He applied for pension October 4, 1880, on account of rheumatism and effects of sunstroke. The claim for the former was allowed at $4 per month, but the latter was rejected on the ground that the evidence is not deemed sufficient to show origin in the service.

The claimant alleged that the sunstroke was incurred in July, 1864. There is no record of the incurrence of the sunstroke, but the hospital records do show that he was under treatment from June 13 to 28, and also in August, 1864; diagnosis not given for these periods except after August 16, 1864, when treated for icterus, and later for diarrhea and intermittent fever, also for rheumatism. He was also under treatment for some time before discharge.

The case has been specially examined, and after exhausting all sources of information the special examiner recommended the allowance of the claim. The most important evidence obtained is that of the assistant surgeon of the regiment, who is shown to be reputable. He testifies that he remembers that some time in August, 1864, claimant incurred sunstroke, for which he received treatment. Two comrades also testify that soldier was overcome by heat, but differ as to time of occurrence.

There is ample testimony showing that soldier after his return from service acted strangely. He complained much of dizziness and could not endure the sun's heat, did little work; in fact depended upon his wife for a support. His mind became more and more affected. Singing, dancing, and preaching to imaginary congregations became his principal occupation. When spoken to he flew into a passion, oftentimes assaulting members of his family, until finally, in 1868, he was declared insane and incurable.

While the evidence presented may not be entirely satisfactory for the purposes of the Pension Office, yet your committee are of opinion that it is sufficient to show that soldier incurred sunstroke in the service and that his present deplorable condition is the direct result thereof, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT C. KERR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1864) to place the name of Robert C. Kerr on the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert C. Kerr, late of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1864) granting a pension to Robert C. Kerr, submit the following report:

The claimant was a private in Company G, Eleventh Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged on the 26th day of June, 1865. About June 20, 1865, while on detail duty "on wood train guard" near Gallatin, Tenn., he was injured in the groin by the kick of a mule. He was never sent to the hospital, but was treated by the assistant surgeon of the regiment, who says in his testimony "that in the month of June, 1865, in camp at Gallatin, Tenn., the said soldier, R. C. Kerr, when on duty there was hurt by a mule. Deponent found a slight swelling in said soldier's left inguinal region, but could not state it was hernious. Said soldier, Kerr, received medical aid then and there in said camp by deponent. He also testifies to the soundness and good health of soldier at time of enlistment. The corporal of company testifies that claimant was off duty for several days in latter part of spring of 1865, by reason of sickness. The injury received seems at the time to have been considered by the assistant surgeon a bruise only, but to have developed into hernia.

H. Runke, a practicing physician, testifies that in the year 1865, in the month of November, at Stillwater, Mo., he made a medical examination of claimant and found that he was ruptured in the left side, and that the rupture was about as big as a goose-egg, and is about the same size yet (in January, 1889); that he ordered claimant a truss, which he continued to wear, and that he is incapacitated from obtaining subsistence by manual labor.

The testimony as to the injury is corroborated by comrades and neighbors who knew him immediately after his discharge, and who have had continued acquaintance with his disability since. The disability was incurred only a few days before the muster-out of the regiment, which fully accounts for the absence of record evidence. But the testimony of the assistant surgeon of the regiment and of comrades fully satisfies your committee that the injury was incurred in line of duty, and justice to the claimant requires that he should be placed on the pension-roll.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CATHERINE DOYLE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4894) increasing the pension of Catherine Doyle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Catherine Doyle, widow of Michael Doyle, late of Company B, First Regiment District of Columbia Volunteer Cavalry, to $20 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by her.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4894) increasing the pension of Catherine Doyle, submit the following report: The beneficiary is the widow of Michael Doyle, late a private in Company B, First District of Columbia Cavalry, who enlisted July 22, 1863, and was discharged October 26, 1865.

She is now drawing a pension at the rate of $12 per month. She appeared before your committee. She is now an old woman, totally blind, with no children or relatives, and her only means of support is the pension she is now receiving.

Your committee think it but just to give this poor, lonely, childless, blind, soldier's widow larger means of support, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out the word "thirty" in the sixth line and inserting in the place thereof the word "twenty."

The amendment reported by the committee was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

AUGUSTUS D. HUBBELL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5685) for the relief of Augustus D. Hubbell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the removal of the charge of desertion from the record of Augustus D. Hubbell, late Company C, Third New York Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. CAREY) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5685) for the relief of Augustus D. Hubbell, have considered the same, and submit the following report:

Augustus D. Hubbell was mustered into the volunteer service as a private in Company C, Third New York Cavalry, August 3, 1861, when about sixteen years of age. He served faithfully until January, 1864, when he re-enlisted as a veteran in the same organization, to serve three years or until the close of the war. He deserted in April, 1864.

It appears from the evidence submitted to the committee that this soldier, though a young boy, served faithfully for two years and eight months, and won the esteem of his officers and comrades for his bravery and good conduct; that subsequent to his enlistment his father and brother entered the military service in other organizations, leaving at home only his mother and a little brother ten years old. His father was killed in a charge at Fort Wagner. His mother's health failing after his father's death, she repeatedly wrote, begging him to come home to her. For a time the boy withstood the entreaties of his mother, but at last his affection for her and the memory of his filial obligation overcame every other consideration and he deserted and went home and remained with her until the war was over.

This country has condoned and forgiven much that occurred during the period of the war, and your committee believe that it may throw its mantle of charity over the one blot in this young soldier's career. If it was a disgrace to prefer the obligations conferred by a mother's love, in view of her distressing condition, to the fealty he owed to his country.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by adding to the end of the bill the words "and grant him an honorable discharge under date of April 4, 1864," and that the bill when so amended do pass. Your committee submit herewith for the information of the House the report of the Secretary of War and the statement of facts presented by the soldier's comrades and officers.

Case of Augustus (D.) Hubbell, late private Company C, Third New York Cavalry Volunteers.

RECORD AND PENSION DIVISION, May 7, 1890.

Augustus Hubbell, private Company C, Third New York Cavalry Volunteers, was enrolled on August 3, 1861, to serve three years. He was present with his company on December 31, 1863, and re-enlisted as Augustus D. Hubbell, a veteran volunteer, on January 5, 1864. The muster-roll of February 29, 1864, reports him

"Absent with leave since January 13, 1864;" the roll of April 30, 1864, shows him "Deserted April 4, 1864;" and the regimental return for March, 1864, reports him "Absent without leave since March 28, 1864." His name is not borne on any muster-rolls subsequent to April 30, 1864.

No testimony in the case is on file in the War Department, and no application for removal of the charge of desertion is pending, a former application having been returned to the authorized attorney in the case on March 30, 1887, with the information that the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, do not cover the case.

In the absence of any testimony it can not be determined whether the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, change the status of the case.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,

Captain and Assistant Surgeon, United States Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

To Hon. CHARLES BELKNAP:

DEAR SIR: This is to certify that we served with Augustus D. Hubbell in Company C, Third New York Cavalry; that we knew him to be a brave and obedient soldier, and one who never shirked his duty or exhibited the slightest fear in the face of the enemy.

He was but sixteen years of age when he enlisted the service, and served faithfully for nearly three years, when he re-enlisted. After his re-enlistment he served about three months. His father was a member of the One hundredth New York Volunteer Infantry and was killed in a charge on Fort Wagner, July 18, 1863. His brother was a member of the Forty-ninth New York Volunteer Infantry. He had but one other brother, and he was but ten years of age. After the death of his father his mother's health began to fail, and in her letters to him she begged him to come home to her. His love for his mother outweighed every other consideration, and he, taking advice from older comrades, deserted and went directly home, in the year 1864.

When we consider his age when he enlisted the service, his record as a soldier—a brave boy never lived—the death of his father in the Army, his mother's condition, and the advice of older comrades, we can but feel that his act should be condoned, and we most respectfully ask that the charge of desertion be removed and that he be granted an honorable discharge.

S. C. PIERCE,

Late Lieutenant-Colonel, Third New York Cavalry.

MAURICE LEYDEN,

Late Major, Third New York Cavalry.

MILTON H. SMITH,

Late Lieutenant, Company C, New Third New York Cavalry.

B. J. SCOTT,

PETER H. BREWER,

GEORGE KARE,

JOHN G. JENKINS.

The amendment recommended by the committee, to add to the bill the words "and to grant him an honorable discharge under date of April 4, 1864," was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JAMES A. MITCHELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5896) granting a pension to James A. Mitchell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls the name of James A. Mitchell, of Keokuk, Iowa, late a private of Company C, Sixtieth Regiment of United States Colored Troops, and pay him a pension according to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. FLICK) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5896) granting a pension to James A. Mitchell, submit the following report:

James A. Mitchell, alias James Alfred, served as private in Company C, Sixtieth Regiment United States Colored Troops, from August 15, 1863, to October 15, 1865. On February 17, 1879, he filed his claim for pension on account of injury of right knee, incurred about November, 1863, by falling in a ditch and on his musket while on skirmish drill. The claim has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the evidence tends to show that the present disability is due to a burn of the leg prior to enlistment, rather than to the alleged injury in the service.

The case has been specially examined, and claimant admits that when an infant the right leg was slightly burned, and that some years later his left leg was burned, but denies that there ever was anything wrong with his right knee or that he was in any way disabled at time of his enlistment. In this he is corroborated by the officers and enlisted men of the company, as well as neighbors who knew him at and prior to his entry into service.

Lieut. W. A. R. Tisdale, subsequently major and brevet lieutenant colonel of volunteers, testifies before the special examiner that while stationed at Keokuk, Iowa, in November, 1863, and while on drill, double quick, some of the members of the company fell, and one of them was badly hurt and had to be helped back to camp. Has no doubt claimant was the identical man; knows that he was lame thereafter and placed on duty as a teamster. Comrades Toema, Lewis, and George Thomas testify positively to the injury on drill and claimant's subsequent lameness, while Comrades George Rebo, William Stuart, and Peter Holmes testify to the condition of the leg subsequent to the injury, and while under treatment in regimental hospital.

The records of the War Department fail to furnish any information as to alleged injury or treatment thereof, but do show that on December 22, 1863, at Helena, Ark., he was detailed for service in the ambulance corps, and continued in such service until mustered out.

There is an abundance of testimony showing beyond a doubt that claimant was in no way disqualified for the performance of military duty at time of enlistment and until his injury in November following, and that upon his return home and ever since he has been lame and otherwise badly disabled in the limb.

Medical examinations locate the injury as extending from patella to outside of knee-joint, over a space of 4 to 5 inches, with constant discharge. Dr. P. J. Payne, under date of December 4, 1889, says: "The present sore is at the bend of the knee, causing severe pain whenever the leg is flexed or extended in the least, and prevents claimant from doing any labor whatever that requires much or any moving about on his feet."

In the opinion of your committee the evidence shows that the service, and not the injury prior to enlistment, is responsible for the claimant's present disability, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JAMES A. HULL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8856) for the relief of James A. Hull.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James A. Hull, father of Chauncey A. Hull, late a private in Company B, One hundred and ninth New York Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8856) granting a pension to James A. Hull, have considered the same and report as follows:

The claimant's son, Chauncey A. Hull, entered the service as a private in Company H, One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers, on the 13th of August, 1862, at Binghamton, N. Y., and he is borne on the rolls as present to April 30, 1863. He was discharged the service May 6, 1863, on surgeon's certificate of disability, which states that "he has suffered for the last four months with dyspepsia very severely and has proved himself incompetent for duty on account of idiosyncrasy."

He again enlisted December 25, 1863; this time in Company B, One hundred and ninth New York (the same regiment in which he served his first term), and died on or about October 14, 1864, in Fifth Army Corps field hospital, City Point, Va.; cause of death not noted in the records.

James A. Hull, the father of the soldier, filed an application for pension November 11, 1870, alleging partial dependence upon the soldier at the time of the latter's death. This claim was rejected March 7, 1887, on the ground that death cause is unknown and dependence not established.

The claim was subsequently reopened by the Pension Bureau and sent out for special examination, but on July 14, 1888, it was again rejected on the ground "that soldier did not recognize his obligation to support his father, and died by reason of his own mental incapacity to take care of himself."

It is not denied that the soldier was not "bright," but the testimony as to the extent of his mental deficiency is conflicting. It seems, however, that his mental incapacity was not such as to prevent the Government from twice accepting his services as a soldier in the same regiment.

As to death cause: The evidence adduced upon the special examination of the case shows that for some time prior to his going to hospital the soldier suffered severely from disease of the liver or bowels, and there is nothing to rebut the presumption that naturally arises that he died of said disease. He died while still in the service.

The testimony shows that at and for some time prior to the time of the soldier's death his father, James A. Hull, was in poor health, being incapacitated to a considerable extent for the performance of manual labor by reason of rheumatism. In addition to this, it is shown that he was then and has been ever since a very poor man. He is now seventy-eight years old and in destitute circumstances.

The claimant and other members of his family state under oath that the soldier contributed to his (the claimant's) support by sending him money from the Army and that he made other contributions to his father's support. Many of the witnesses testify that they have no knowledge that the soldier ever contributed anything to his father's support, and believe him to have been mentally incapable of doing any work by which he could be enabled to aid his father. It is shown, however, that the soldier did fatigue duty, such as wood-chopping and work around the cook-house while in the service, and your committee believe that if he could do work of that character he could also do such work as run a farm as would aid his father and family.

It also appears that the claimant lived in a thinly settled district, and the soldier could have done much in the way of farm work and other contributions to the support of the father and family without the fact becoming known to any one outside of the family.

It is apparent that if the relief contemplated by the bill is granted the claimant can not, in view of his great age and disabled condition, remain long upon the bounty of the Government.

After a review of all the facts, your committee return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET MALLOY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9772) for the relief of Margaret Malloy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Margaret Malloy, as dependent mother of James Malloy, late of Company D, Third Massachusetts Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. TURNER, of New York) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9772) granting a pension to Margaret Malloy, submit the following report:

Claimant is the dependent mother of James Malloy, who enlisted June 25, 1862, and was discharged October 23, 1864, and thereafter served in Captain Knowles's company of special scouts, and while on such duty as a special scout in advance of the command of General A. J. Smith, on the march from Mobile to Montgomery, was, on or about April 26, 1865, shot and killed. This claim was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that the death of the soldier was after his discharge from the regular service and while enrolled as special scout.

The testimony of General Canby, of Captain Knowles, and others shows the soldier to have been a man of remarkable daring and courage and that his services were of an exceptional order. He was the support of his mother, who is now old and poor, and cared for by the charity of the Little Sisters of the Poor.

In view of the foregoing your committee recommend the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA B. DORRANCE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1676) to pay to Eliza B. Dorrance, widow of the late George W. Dorrance, chaplain United States Navy, a pension.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act there be allowed and paid to Mrs. Eliza B. Dorrance, widow of the late George W. Dorrance, chaplain United States Navy, a pension at the rate of $40 per month during her widowhood, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1676) granting an increase of pension to Eliza B. Dorrance, widow of the late Chaplain George W. Dorrance, United States Navy, have considered the same, and report as follows:

George W. Dorrance was appointed chaplain, United States Navy, January 2, 1860, and was retired February 14, 1873. He died December 11, 1883, of disease contracted in the service and line of duty, and his widow was placed upon the pension-roll under the general law at $20 per month.

In support of the bill (which increases her pension to $40 per month) Admiral David D. Porter makes the following statement: "Mrs. Dorrance is almost totally blind, and she has an invalid daughter dependent upon her for support; she has almost no means of livelihood except her pension." The admiral concludes by expressing the hope that in view of the necessities of the widow the bill for her relief will be passed.

Rear-Admiral Jouett, United States Navy, certifies that the case is a most worthy and deserving one.

When the claimant's application was under consideration by the Pension Bureau it was made special because of her necessitous condition.

In view of the facts stated your committee think the relief prayed for should be granted, and the passage of the bill is therefore recommended.

NOTE.—Amend the title so as to read: "A bill increasing the pension of Eliza B. Dorrance," etc.

WINEMAH RIDDELL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1890) to pension Winemah Riddell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Winemah Riddell, and to pay her, from and after the passage of this act, during life, the sum of $25 a month.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1890) granting a pension to Winemah Riddell, have considered the same, and report:

A similar bill was reported to the House by your committee at the first session of the Fiftyeth Congress. The number of the report is 1413, and your committee adopt as their report so much of the same as is applicable to this bill, and return the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

[House Report No. 1413, Fiftyeth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2804) to pension Winemah Riddell, having considered the same, report as follows:

The report of Hon. A. B. Meacham, chairman special commission to the Modocs, upon the late Modoc war, and contained in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the year 1873, shows that the objects to be attained by the Modoc Peace Commission were: First, to ascertain the causes which have led to the difficulties and hostilities between the United States troops and the Modocs; and, secondly, to devise the most effective and judicious measures for preventing the continuance of these hostilities and for the restoration of peace.

"Messengers were employed to visit the Modocs and arrange for a meeting: First, Bob Whittle and wife, Matilda (an Indian woman), were sent February 19 with instructions to announce to them the presence of and desire the commission to arrange for a council meeting with a view of adjusting the difficulties that existed, and to prevent a reopening of hostilities; also to ascertain with whom the Modocs would prefer to arrange the contemplated council.

"Whittle and wife returned on the 20th, and reported the Modocs willing and anxious to 'meet Riddell and Fairchild to conclude details' for the proposed meeting. Fairchild was intrusted with the message, and, accompanied by Riddell and Artina (a Modoc woman), visited the Modoc camp, a distance of 20 miles from headquarters, with a 'message to Modocs,' as follows: 'Fairchild will talk for the commission; what he agrees to we will stand by. He can not tell you any terms, but will fix a time and place for a council talk, and that no act of war will be allowed while peace talks are being had; no movements of troops will be made. We come in good faith to make peace. Our hearts are all for peace.' This message was signed by Meacham, Applegate, and Case, with the approval of General Canby.

"Fairchild and party returned on the 23d, and reported the Modocs as willing and anxious for peace, but had not arranged for a meeting, because they were 'unwilling to come out of the lava-beds.'

"This proposition was not agreed to, but a request for Judge Steele, of Yreka, to visit them was made, and in compliance he was sent for, with the hope on our part that, from his intimate acquaintance with these people, he might secure the meeting. Judge Steele arrived at headquarters of commission on the 4th of March, and the board of commissioners were called together, now consisting of Applegate, Case, Meacham, and Judge Eschborough, who had been added at the request of General Canby. Steele, being present, accepted the mission as messenger to arrange for the meeting of commission and the Modocs, but unwisely was authorized to offer terms of peace, which was 'a general amnesty to all Modocs on condition of their full and complete surrender and consent to remove to a distant reservation within the limits of Oregon or California.'

"He was further instructed to say to them that 'General Canby would make peace and conclude terms.'

"On the 6th of March, in company with Riddell and Toby, Fairchild, and R. H. Atwell as reporter, Judge Steele visited the Modoc camp.

"Failing to secure a meeting of the commission and Modocs, made then, under instruction, the proposition above referred to, also stating that General Canby was authorized to conclude the arrangement for the surrender and removal. The propositions were not well understood, and created some discussion among the Modocs.

"Captain Jack, speaking for the people, accepted the terms offered, though protests and evidences of dissatisfaction were evidently made. Steele had not, however, seemed to aware of this fact, for on his return to headquarters he reported that 'peace was made; they accept.' A general feeling of relief followed, couriers were summoned to bear dispatches, when Fairchild, who had been with Steele, declared that 'there was some mistake; the Modocs have not agreed to surrender and removal.' The Modoc messengers who had accompanied Steele and party to headquarters were questioned, when it was discovered that some misunderstanding existed.

"Steele, however, confident that he was correct, proposed to return to the Modoc camp and settle the matter beyond question. On Steele's second visit Fairchild declined going, fearing, as he said, 'that the Modocs would feel outraged by Steele's report.' Atwell again accompanied Steele, who, on arrival, or soon thereafter, discovered that a great mistake had been made in reporting the first visit.

The demonstrations were almost of hostile character. He was accused of reporting them falsely and working against their interests. His long acquaintance with Captain Jack and Scar-Faced Charley, and consequent friendship, saved him and party from assassination; these two men, and one or two others, standing guard over him throughout the night.

"The following morning he averted the peril by proposing to return and bring the commission with him, and on this promise he was allowed to depart. On his return to headquarters he made a full report of the visit, stating the facts above referred to and warning the commission of the danger of meeting the Modocs except on equal terms and on neutral ground, and expressing the opinion 'that no meeting could be had, no peace could be made.'

"The substance of these reports and conclusions were forwarded to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, who replied as follows:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., March 5, 1873.

"I do not believe the Modocs mean treachery. The mission should not be a failure. I think I understand their unwillingness to confide in you. Continue negotiations. Will consult the President and have the War Department confer with General Canby to-morrow.

"C. DELANO.

"To A. B. MEACHAM,

"Fairchild's Ranch, via Yreka, Cal."

"On the day following Steele's return from the second visit a delegation of Indians from the Modoc camp arrived. Mary (sister of Captain Jack), acting as messenger, proposed that, if General Canby would send wagons to meet them, the Modocs would all come out and surrender on the terms proposed by Steele on the first visit. General Canby, then acting under the authority of the vote of the commissioners transferring the whole matter to his care, accepted the proposition and named a day on which the final surrender should be consummated. However, before the time appointed, messengers arrived from the lava beds, asking for further time to arrange for leaving camp, alleging that they were then burying their dead and could not come at the time appointed, but would comply at a subsequent period.

"General Canby appointed another day, and assured the messengers that unless they were faithful to the compact he would take steps to compel compliance. The day before the appointed time, Toby Riddell informed General Canby of intended treachery on the part of the Modocs, saying 'No Modocs come; maybe come to steal teams; they no give up.' Her warning was not accredited.

"The wagons were sent. Applegate, sanguine of the surrender, resigned and returned to his home, believing that 'peace was made.' Mr. Case, who had been relieved at his own request, had also left headquarters. Messengers had been sent to the Department at Washington announcing the anticipated result, and the whole country was rejoicing, when, late on the evening of the appointed day, the wagons sent out by General Canby returned without the Indians. All of which was made known to the Department. Further negotiations seemed to be hopeless; nevertheless, knowing the anxiety for the peaceable solution of the trouble, we continued to seek a meeting.

"Instructions were received from headquarters from the honorable Secretary of the Interior, 'to continue negotiations,' and further continuing the commission, General Canby moved headquarters to 'Van Buren,' and with him the commission moved. Soon after Dr. Thomas was added to the commission, also, L. S. Dyer, United States Indian agent, of Klamath. Meanwhile a herd of Indian horses had been captured by Major Riddell, notwithstanding the commission had informed the Modocs, through messengers, that no act of war would be permitted. Failing to arrange on satisfactory terms for a council meeting, the commission was notified by General Canby of the intended movement of troops nearer the Modoc camp.

"The movement was made and headquarters again changed, this time to the foot of the bluff, and within 2 miles of the Modoc stronghold. On the 2d of April the commission, including General Canby, met the Modocs for the first time, about midway between the Modoc camp and headquarters. No conclusions were arrived at, a severe storm coming up compelling adjournment, not, however, until an agreement had been made for the erection of a council-tent.

"Riddell and his wife, Toby, expressed the opinion, on our return to camp, that treachery was intended, but the warning was not respected. On the 4th of April a request was made by Captain Jack for me to meet him and a few men at the council-tent. After a consultation with the board I went, accompanied by Judge Roseborough and J. A. Fairchild, Riddell and his wife, Toby, as interpreters.

"The Modoc chief was accompanied by six warriors and the women of his own family. He (Jack) remarked that he felt afraid in presence of General Canby and Dr. Thomas, saying 'but now I can talk.' He reviewed the whole question from the beginning, mentioning the Ben Wright treachery; the insults of the Klamath Indians while his people were on the reservation; the failure of Captain Knapp, acting agent of Klamath, to protect him, and his several removals while there, but made no complaint of want of subsistence; denied ever killing horses for food, but insisting that Agent Knapp 'had no heart for him'; complained that Superintendent Odeneal had not visited him, and that Odeneal's messengers had promised to come again before bringing soldiers; that Major Jackson had attacked him before he was up in the morning of November 29, 1872; complained also of the citizens taking part in the battle at that time, declaring that had 'no citizens been in the fight, no Indian women and children would have been killed, no citizens would have been murdered,' saying his young men had done a great wrong while in hot blood, but that he could not control them any more than had white men were controlled by American law; and feeling that he could never live in peace with the Klamaths, but wanted a home, 'just the same as a white man on Lost River, the soldiers taken away and the war would stop.'

"On being assured that, since blood had been spilled on Lost River, he could never have it in peace unless the Lost River murderers were given up for trial, he abandoned the request as far as his old home was concerned, saying, 'I give up home; give me this lava-bed; no white man will ever want it.' Again assured that no peace could be made or soldiers removed while his people remained in the lava-bed, but was informed that a new home would be given him and provision made for clothing and subsistence.

"He was unwilling to surrender his men who killed the citizens, saying that the governor of Oregon had demanded their blood, and that the law of Jackson County would kill them; remarking that the 'law was all on one side, was made by the white man, for white men, leaving the Indian all out,' finally declaring that he could not control his people, and that he would die with them if no peace was made.

"No terms were agreed to or further meetings arranged for at that time.

"On the day following Toby Riddell was sent with a proposition to Captain Jack to surrender with such others as might elect to do so. He declined the terms. On her return the messenger was warned of the intended treachery, which she reported to the commissioners and General Canby. This warning was not treated with the respect due the informer. Dr. Thomas questioned a Modoc afterward as to the truth of the report, which being denied, and the name of the author demanded, he replied, 'Toby Riddell.' The same party, of whom Dr. Thomas had made inquiry, was informed by General Gillem 'that unless peace was made very soon the troops would be moved up nearer the Modoc stronghold, and that 160 Warm Spring Indians would be added to the army within a few days.' All of which was reported in the Modoc camp.

"On the 8th of April a messenger visited the commission, asking for a 'peace talk,' saying that six unarmed Modocs were at the council-tent in the lava bed, anxious to make peace, and asking the commission to meet them.

"The signal officer at the station overlooking the lava beds reported the 'six Indians, and, also, in the rocks behind them, twenty other Indians, all armed.' Treachery was evident, and no meeting was had; further negotiations appeared useless and unsafe.

"On the morning of the 10th of April a delegation from the Modoc camp arrived with renewed propositions for a meeting. The terms proposed were that, if the commission, including General Canby and General Gillem, would come next day to the council tent, unarmed, to meet a like number of unarmed Modocs, thus proving the confidence of the commission in the Modocs, 'that they (the Modocs) would all come to headquarters and surrender on the day following.' Dr. Thomas, who was then acting as (temporary) chairman, submitted the propositions to General Canby. After consultation they decided to accept.

"On the fatal morning of Friday, April 11, the commission held a meeting, and the propriety of keeping the appointment was discussed; Dr. Thomas insisting that it was a duty that must be performed; General Canby saying 'that the importance of the object in view justified taking some risk.' Commissioners Dyer and Meacham recounting the evidences of premeditated treachery, and giving opinions adverse to the meeting. The interpreter, Frank Riddle, appeared before the board and repeated the warning given by Toby, his wife, and saying further, 'that if the meeting must be had, he wanted to be free from responsibility; that he had lived with Toby for twelve years, and she had never deceived him; that if the commission went, it should be armed.' However, General Canby and Dr. Thomas insisted that the compact should be kept, the general remarking that from the signal station a strict watch had been kept, and 'only five Indians, unarmed, were at the council tent,' and further, that a 'watch would be kept on the council tent, and in the event of an attack the Army would come to the rescue.'

"Without following further the report, the result of the appointment above referred to is more comprehensively stated in a lecture prepared by Colonel Meacham, and which he delivered in Park Street Church, Boston, Mass., on the 24th of May, 1874, the substance of which is as follows:

"The preparations for keeping the appointment were being made when Winemah Riddell and her husband made a last protest against the fulfillment of the unwise compact. Dr. Thomas was unwilling to abandon the effort. Commissioner Dyer agreed with me (Colonel Meacham) that the meeting should not take place. General Canby maintained his views, and gave orders for a watch to be kept at the signal station; then, giving some private instructions to his secretary, he dressed in full uniform, without arms, and called for Dr. Thomas. Together they walked off, side by side, towards the peace tent, one mile away. Having failed to dissuade them from going, I had no honorable alternative but to follow.

"I prepared to go, and caught the halter of my horse, intending to mount, when Winemah, unable to suppress her fears, snatched the halter, and winding it around her waist, threw herself upon the ground and cried most earnestly, 'Do not go; you will be killed. The Modocs mad now. Meacham, you no go.' Her entreaty moved me, and I relaxed my grasp of the halter, and calling to General Canby and Dr. Thomas, went to them and renewed my protest against going unarmed.

"They were immovable. I then for the first and only time in my life made use of my fraternal relations to induce them to assent to a promise on my part, as chairman of the commission, to withdraw the army if we found satisfactory evidences of premeditated treachery. This proposition was emphatically rejected also.

"Seeing no alternative, I returned to the commissioners' tent, handed my valuables to Mr. Fairchild, and securing a promise from him that if my body should be badly mutilated it should be buried in the rocks of the lava-beds and not sent to my family, I sought again to mount my horse, when Winemah caught me by the coat and endeavored to detain me.

"Firmly refusing to remain in camp, I bade Winemah and her husband follow, and rode off to the council tent in the lava-beds, accompanied by Commissioner Dyer. Winemah parted with her boy, and with steady nerve mounted her horse and joined Mr. Dyer and myself. Mr. Riddell hastily arranged his business affairs, and also joined us on his danger-fraught ride.

"General Canby and Dr. Thomas were the first of our party to arrive. They were greeted by the Indians with extreme cordiality, General Canby giving to each a cigar. Instead of five unarmed men, including Scar-face Charley, as promised by Boston Charley in negotiating for the council, we found eight well-armed desperadoes, including the notorious cut-throats Hooker Jim and Black Jim. Captain Jack seemed anxious and ill at ease, and did not exhibit the friendship the others of his party pretended.

"General Canby was calm and thoroughly self-possessed. Dr. Thomas did not appear to note any suspicious circumstances, but was endeavoring to impress the Indians with his good intentions. I made my election to abide by the consequences. I knew that the horse beneath me was one of the fleetest in the Modoc country, and notwithstanding the rocky trail could carry me out of danger with a few bounds, which he seemed more than willing to make at the slightest invitation, I made up my mind that Canby and Thomas should not be endangered by cowardly flight on my part.

"Withdrawing my overcoat and hanging it upon the horn of the saddle, I dismounted, dropping the rope halter to the ground, leaving his horse free. Mr. Riddell secured Winemah's horse, and we all gathered round the council-fire.

"Before the talk began I sat down facing the chief and opened the council by referring to the proposition made the day before by Boston Charley, and continued by saying that we were ready to complete the arrangements for peace. Captain Jack asked if we were willing to remove the soldiers from the lava-beds and give his people a home in the country. I felt that if his demand was met we could escape, and although General Canby had refused to allow me to make this promise, I thought that, convinced as he must be of intended treachery, he would feel justified in assenting to the request. Cautiously turning to him I asked him to talk.

"After a moment's waiting he rose and stood erect. Every eye was upon him. All seemed to feel that if he assented to the withdrawal of the army the trouble would be passed over. Whether General Canby realized the situation with all its fearful possibilities and would not avert even then from his purpose, or if he still thought the Modocs had not the desperate courage to execute this plan, can never be known. If he said the soldiers can be removed, the phantom would pass as a dream. If he said they should not be withdrawn, the phantom must soon become a terrible reality.

"With dignity that was peculiar to that brave soldier, he firmly pronounced his own death sentence, as well as that of Dr. Thomas, by saying that the 'soldiers could not be withdrawn.'

"Again and again the Modoc chief repeated the demand for the removal of the soldiers. General Canby, having once refused, was mute. Turning to Dr. Thomas, who was sitting at my left, I asked him if he wished to talk. The doctor dropped forward on his knees, and made the last proclamation of peace. He assured the Modocs that he was a friend to them; that God had sent us to them as messengers of peace.

"The Modoc chief leaned forward and touched me on the arm. He once more declared that no peace could be made until the soldiers were taken away, as he rose and turned his back to General Canby. I believe that to this time Captain Jack had hoped it would be granted, and thereby bloodshed avoided. Schonchin sprang to the seat vacated by Captain Jack, and in loud, angry tones repeated the ultimatum. Winemah had thrown herself on the ground in front of Dr. Thomas and was interpreting Schonchin's speech at the moment when Captain Jack gave the signal, "Kau-Tux" (all ready). Almost at the same instant the Modoc yell broke from the rocks, and two braves sprang forward bearing rifles.

"Captain Jack drew a pistol and shot General Canby, the ball striking him in the face. 'Ellen's man' joined him in the attack. General Canby did not fall until he had run 40 or 50 yards, when a shot struck him in the back of the head. His assistants came upon him; and, shooting him again, stripped him of his clothing, turned his face downward, and then left him.

"Dr. Thomas received a shot from the hand of Boston Charley. He sank slowly, catching by his right hand. He was permitted to get upon his feet and stagger away a few rods, his murderers taunting him with not believing Winemah, fearing him, and ridiculing his religion and the failure of his prayers. Finally, pushing him down, they shot him through the head, stripped him, and turning him also upon his face, gathered up the dripping garments, and joined the other murderers at the council fire.

"Dr. Dyar, having his horse for a cover when the attack was begun, made good his escape, although pursued by Hooker Jim. Mr. Riddell escaped by running, covered by Scar-Face Charley's rifle, who declared that it was unworthy of a Modoc to kill unarmed men." Simultaneously with the attack on General Canby and Dr. Thomas, Schonchin sprang to his feet, and, drawing both a knife and a pistol, shouted "Chock-e-la" (blood), pointed at my head and discharged the pistol, the bullet tearing through the collar of my coat and vest. Before the next shot Winemah was between him and his victim, grasping his arms and pleading for my life.

"I walked backwards 40 yards while my heroic defender struggled to save me. Shacknasty Jim joined Schonchin in the attack, while Winemah, running from one to the other, continued to turn aside the pistols aimed at me until I went down. After I fell I raised my head above the rock over which I had fallen, and at the instant Schonchin aimed at me so correctly that this shot struck me between the eyes and glanced out over the left eye, which was blinded. A shot from Shacknasty Jim struck me on the right side of the head over the ear, which stunned me and I became unconscious.

"From Winemah and Scar-Face Charley I learned that Shacknasty Jim robbed me of my clothing in part, notwithstanding Winemah's expostulations; that while Jim was unbuttoning my shirt collar one of the other murderers came up with a gun and pointing at my head was just in the act of touching the trigger when Jim pushed the gun up and said, 'Don't shoot any more. Him dead; he not get up; I hit him high up; save the powder.' Having taken my coat, pants, and vest, they left me, saying to Winemah, 'Take care of your white brother.' Winemah wiped the blood from my face and straightened my limbs, believing me dead.

"Boston Charley drew a knife, which, however, was a dull one, and began the difficult task of scalping a bald-headed man, and what added to the difficulty was the strong arms of Winemah, grasping him and hurling him, as though he was but a boy, to the rocks beside me. But Boston had Modoc persistence, and springing to his feet, with his pistol he struck her a blow upon the head, at the same time threatening to shoot her should she again interfere, and resumed the delicate task.

"Winemah, dazed by the blow for a moment, in half-bewilderment, saw the dull blade cutting down to the bone, while Boston, enraged and impatient, set one foot upon the back of my neck, and muttering curses in broken English, succeeded in cutting a circle almost around the upper part of my head, and had already so far lifted the scalp that he had inserted the fingers of his left hand beneath it, preparatory to tearing it off, when Winemah, recovering her presence of mind, resorted to strategy, shouting exultingly, 'Kap-ko Bootee-na-soldier,' (soldiers coming), and Boston left his work unfinished."

From the foregoing statement of facts, it is evident that had the Modoc peace commissioners listened to the persistent persuasions of Winemah Riddle, reiterated by her over and over again, the families and friends of the lamented Dr. Thomas and General Canby would not have been called upon to mourn their atrocious death; and in view of the fact that Winemah Riddle saved the life of such a useful and noble man as Col. A. B. Meacham, and proved herself to be the friend of the white man at the risk of her own life, your committee feel constrained to report these facts for the consideration of the House.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. KLINE.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1367) to remove the charge of desertion against William J. Kline.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of William J. Kline, late a private soldier of Company E of the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, and remove the finding of court-martial sentencing him to hard labor and dishonorable discharge, with loss of all pay and bounty, and to pay him all pay, bounty, and allowances as may be due him, without reference to the decision of said court-martial, and to grant him an honorable discharge and all proper relief.

Mr. KILGORE. It would seem to me there ought to be some amendment to this bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. The facts in the case are these: This soldier, after serving three years and a half, committed some violation of military law, for which he was sentenced to imprisonment; and he escaped from prison. For this reason he could not secure from the War Department a correction of his military record, and it became necessary to come to Congress. The Committee on Military Affairs has reported in favor of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, there is a proposition to pay him everything that was due him. I do not know how much was due him, but I think it ought to be enough for the beneficiary that he should have the charge of desertion removed.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It has been the custom with the committee to strike out the back pay and allowances. I do not remember the circumstances of this particular case.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CAREY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1367) entitled "An act to remove the charge of desertion against William J. Kline, late a private soldier of Company E, of the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers," having had the same under consideration, after a careful investigation of the facts, submit the following report:

We find that the said Kline was enrolled September 21, 1861, to serve three years; that on the 16th day of December, 1863, he re-enlisted as a veteran volunteer, and served faithfully until on or about March 14, 1865, when he was arrested, court-martialed, and sentenced to be imprisoned for the remainder of his term of enlistment with forfeiture of pay, and that he be dishonorably discharged the service.

The proceedings, findings, and sentence were duly approved June 6, 1865. He was put in prison at Chattanooga, Tenn., June 6, 1865, and guarded until the 1st day of August, 1865, when he escaped from prison, and went to his home. His term of enlistment would not have expired until December 2, 1865. Prior to this date and while in prison he escaped. This escape is held to be a desertion, and Congress not having authorized the removal of charges of desertion when the desertion occurred after May 1, 1865, no relief can be granted the applicant by the War Department.

Your committee find that Kline served three and a half years faithfully prior to his arrest; and we further find that his captain was not on good terms with him, and prosecuted him with unusual malice. In view of this and the fact that Kline served until the end of the war, and was confined more than two months for the offense committed, we think he was sufficiently punished, and that justice demands that the charge be removed and that he be paid all amounts of pay and bounty due him. We therefore submit a favorable report and recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, if this had been an ordinary case of desertion after May 1, 1865, it would have been removable under the general statute at the War Department. But the fact is that this man escaped from imprisonment while undergoing a sentence of a court-martial, and therefore it presents a different question. I do not remember the facts of the case. I do not think I was present when it was considered.

Mr. CHEADLE. The evidence is that there was no more faithful soldier in the command.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HENRY W. BURLINGAME.

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 4728) for the relief of Henry W. Burlingame was considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry W. Burlingame.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4728) for the relief of Henry W. Burlingame, beg leave to report:

That it appears from the records of the War Department that Henry W. Burlingame was drafted into the service of the United States October 22, 1864, from South Haven, one hundred and tenth subdistrict, Second Congressional district of Michigan, and exempted by the board of enrollment of said district by reason of "loss of right hand."

It further appears from the evidence submitted to the committee that in obedience to said draft said Burlingame started to report at Kalamazoo, Mich., as directed, for examination and enrollment into the service of the United States, and that while on his way to that city, on or about the 1st day of November, A. D. 1864, the said Burlingame, in company with one Abram Johnson, who testifies in the case, went by train from Lawton to Kalamazoo, Mich., and while on said train, in the night-time, it being dark, rainy, and storming, the locomotive whistle gave the signal for a station and the train made a short stop at the village of Oshtemo, a railroad station near the said city of Kalamazoo, when said claimant, the said Henry W. Burlingame, and the said Abram Johnson mistook said station to be Kalamazoo and stepped off the train, but upon being informed of their mistake they immediately attempted to get aboard the train, and in so doing the said Henry W. Burlingame accidentally slipped and fell between the cars and injured his right hand to such an extent that upon his arrival at Kalamazoo the army surgeon, Dr. Hitchcock to whom he reported, advised the amputation of and did himself amputate said Burlingame's right hand above the wrist, and as a result of the loss of said hand he was afterwards exempted from enrollment.

Under the law said claimant can not obtain a pension, as he was never enrolled in the service of the United States, and therefore his only relief is by special act of Congress.

In view of the fact that the claimant in this case was thus severely maimed and crippled for life while responding to the orders of his Government, and that he is now in indigent circumstances and is dependent upon his own personal labor for the support of himself and his family, your committee are of the opinion that he should be placed on the pension-roll, and therefore report the bill back with a favorable recommendation.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, June 19, 1890.

SIR: Referring to your communication of the 16th instant, requesting a copy of the record of Henry W. Burlingame, who was drafted from Van Buren County, Michigan, in 1864, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that the records show that he was drafted October 22, 1864, from South Haven, one hundred and tenth subdistrict, Second Congressional district of Michigan, and exempted by the board of enrollment of said district by reason of "loss of right hand."

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,

Captain and Assistant Surgeon, United States Army.

Hon. J. C. BURROWS,
House of Representatives.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA A. FOSTER.

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 6356) for the relief of Martha A. Foster was considered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha A. Foster, widow of David A. Foster, late of Company I, Twelfth Michigan Infantry.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R.

656) for the relief of Martha A. Foster, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to make the following report:

It appears from the examination of the files in this case in the Pension Office that David A. Foster enlisted in Company I, Twelfth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, on the 14th of October, 1861, for three years or during the war, and that he was subsequently wounded at the battle of Pittsburgh Landing on the 6th of April, 1862, and died from the effects of such wound at the marine hospital at Allegheny, Pa., May 2, 1862.

His widow, the claimant named, was pensioned shortly after the death of her said husband and drew a pension as such widow until about the 1st of March, 1872. On the 12th of March, 1872, she contracted a second marriage with a man by the name of Isaac Wilson Chadwick, with whom she lived about one year and a half, when, by reason of his extreme cruelty, she was compelled to leave him, which she did.

Shortly after, the said Chadwick, by fraud and misrepresentations, procured a divorce and immediately after married another woman.

The claimant in this case was induced to contract this second marriage upon representations by the said Chadwick that he was a man of abundant means, and that he would secure to her during her natural life the pension she was then drawing. This he not only refused subsequently to do, but by his extreme cruelty forced her to sever her relations with him.

It further appears that the claimant is sixty-eight years of age and almost entirely destitute of means of support.

The committee, therefore, under the circumstances, report the bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. CHARITY P. HARRISON.

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 6359) for the relief of Mrs. Charity P. Harrison was considered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Charity P. Harrison, late a nurse in the Army of the United States, and that she be granted a pension at the rate of $25 a month.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6359) granting a pension to Charity P. Harrison, submit the following report, and recommend the passage of the bill, amended by striking out the words "twenty-five," in line 8, and inserting "twelve" in place thereof.

The report is as follows:

The petition of Charity P. Harrison, a resident of Cassopolis, Mich., of the age of fifty-seven years, respectfully shows that from January 15, 1863, till the close of the war of the rebellion she was with some military organization and acting in the capacity of a nurse, much of the time at her own expense, without pay from any source; that part of the time she was enrolled as a nurse at the Columbian Hospital, Washington, and performed the duties of a hospital nurse at that place and Fredericksburgh till the war closed; that after enrollment she was paid 40 cents a day and rations, the nurses being mustered for pay once in two months, and signing pay-rolls in the hospital office; that her name is registered as a regular nurse in the Surgeon-General's Office and in the office of the medical director, at Washington, D. C.

That at the time she left home she was a strong, vigorous woman; that the duty performed while acting as a nurse in the service of her country, and sunstroke received while on duty at Fredericksburgh, greatly injured her general health, which is aggravated by and increasing with her advancing years; that she is in limited circumstances, her husband an invalid, and that her relatives and friends are not in circumstances that would justify her in calling on them for pecuniary aid.

She therefore prays, in view of the very small sum paid her by the United States for services rendered during the best years of her life, that she may now be allowed a monthly pension for the remainder of her days, or such other just and reasonable remuneration as she may in equity and good conscience be found to be entitled to, and begs leave to refer to certain letters touching her services, herewith presented, from parties who had personal knowledge of her life while in the service of the nation. Also submit the letter of Dr. F. E. Marsh, and ask that it may be made a part of this report. This letter is as follows:

"I hereby certify that Mrs. C. P. Harrison was employed as a nurse in Columbian College Hospital, Washington, D. C., during my term of service of more than two years, 1863 to 1865, and that I was well acquainted with her during all of that time. She was capable, intelligent, and untiring in her labors to alleviate the distressed and suffering soldier, and in every way was counted among our best nurses, which embraced a corps of sixteen in number.

"I can not at this day particularize, but in attention to duty, correct deportment, modest demeanor, and Christian character count in the make-up of a hospital nurse, these all were a part of her possessions, and were all laid upon the altar of her country. I bespeak for her a corresponding recognition at the hands of the Government.

"Dr. F. E. MARSH,

"Late Acting Assistant Surgeon, U. S. A., and "Assistant Surgeon Ninth Regiment, Sixteenth Army Corps.

"QUINCY, MICH., December 20, 1889."

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment: Strike out, in line 8, "twenty-five" and insert "twelve."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES W. LAMBERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5063) for the relief of Charles W. Lambert.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the military record of Charles W. Lambert so as to show him honorably discharged from Company F, One hundred and fifty-second New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. CAREY) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5063) to amend the military record of Charles W. Lambert so as to show him honorably discharged from Company F, One hundred and fifty-second New York Volunteers, submit the following report:

The War Department records show that Charles W. Lambert was enrolled September 4, 1862, for three years in Company F, One hundred and fifty-second

New York Volunteers, and served until February 9, 1863, when he is alleged to have deserted and never returned. The War Department records further show that Charles W. Lambert was enrolled September 4, 1863, for three years in Company G, First Michigan Volunteer Sharpshooters, and served until June 24, 1865, when he was mustered out of the service.

The claimant states that when he absented himself from Company F, One hundred and fifty-second New York Volunteers, without leave, he was sick and unfit for duty, and went to his parents at Chicago, and was there sick and unfit for duty until September 7, 1863, when he enlisted in Company G, First Michigan Volunteer Sharpshooters, under his own name. He alleges that he did not return to his former regiment because he was afraid to do so after being absent so long without leave.

The claimant further deposes and says that it is impossible for him to get medical evidence as to his physical condition while absent from his command at Chicago, and that it is impossible for him to obtain other evidence of persons who knew him at Chicago at that time, his parents having since died.

Evidence is furnished, however, of a former comrade in the company and regiment from which the claimant is alleged to have deserted, that he was sick and unfit for duty when he left the Army, and that he had been sick a month previous to the time of his leaving; also of a neighbor, who is the present postmaster of the town in which he resides, who states that he has been intimately acquainted with the claimant for thirty years, that he is a worthy citizen and honorable man, and that his reputation for truth and veracity can not be questioned.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MARGARET D. MARCHAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10054) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret D. Marchand.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret D. Marchand, widow of Commodore J. B. Marchand, late of the United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month from the date of the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. CRAIG) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10054) granting an increase of pension to Margaret D. Marchand, submit the following report:

Margaret D. Marchand is the widow of Commodore John B. Marchand, who enlisted as a midshipman May 1, 1828, and was retired as a commodore in 1870, and died April 13, 1875. The length of his service was forty-two years. He appears to have held the rank of lieutenant, United States ships Ohio and St. Mary's, United States Navy. When captain of the Lackawanna he contributed by his skill and bravery to the naval victory at Mobile Bay, a full account of which is found in report on a similar bill to this in the Forty-ninth Congress. His widow was granted a Mexican war service pension at $8 per month in May, 1888.

The affidavits of Mrs. Marchand and Alice P. Thornton as to contraction of disease and cause of death originating in the service are as follows:

"On this 15th day of May, 1884, before me, Sprigg Harwood, clerk circuit court for Anne Arundel County, personally appeared Margaret D. Marchand, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says as follows, to wit:

"In the year 1861 my husband, the late Commodore John B. Marchand, then commander, was in command of the steamer James Adgar, off Charleston, S. C., engaged in the naval service of the United States Government in the late civil war. At that date he was in robust health and perfect physical condition. He had always been a man of unusually robust constitution, weighing over 200 pounds, and of perfectly regular habits, and from the day of our marriage, to wit, the 11th day of November, 1856, until the date of his taking command of the steamer James Adgar, in 1861, have never known him to have any sickness with the exception of some trivial derangement of perhaps a day's duration, and never requiring any medical attendance. His habits throughout his entire life were uniformly regular and temperate.

"To the best of my knowledge he went upon blockade duty in the year 1861 in his usual health, and came to our home in Baltimore in 1864 broken down in health and much reduced in flesh after protracted blockade duty and after the severe engagements while in command of the United States steamship Lackawanna in Mobile Bay. At the date of his promotion to the rank of commodore, in the year 1866, for distinguished services, the usual physical examination was waived. Soon after this date symptoms of defective circulation commenced, manifesting itself in the ends of his fingers, they becoming bloodless and livid in color.

"In 1871 he was a frequent sufferer from violent pains in his chest. In the winter of 1873 and 1874 Commodore Marchand was confined to the house, suffering extremely from the swelling of his feet. In the winter of 1874 and 1875 he had hemorrhages of the lungs; the last of these hemorrhages was the immediate cause of his death. Dr. Mahan, of Pennsylvania, our family physician, who attended Commodore Marchand during the early periods of his sickness, is now deceased. Drs. Dale and Zeigler, who attended him at his death, pronounced his complaint from which death resulted to be heart disease.

"My belief is further strengthened by the information of Dr. Ridout, of Annapolis, Md., that the defective circulation, pains in the chest, and swollen limbs were all symptoms of the heart disease, which resulted in Commodore Marchand's death; and that all these symptoms and the disease which resulted in the commodore's death were produced by exposure consequent upon the continuous and excessive duties that he was called upon to perform while in the service of the United States Navy as above stated.

"MARGARET D. MARCHAND.

"Sworn to and subscribed the day and year first above written before me,

[SEAL.]

"SPRIGG HARWOOD,

"Clerk Circuit Court for Anne Arundel County."

"On this 15th day of May, before me, Sprigg Harwood, clerk of circuit court for Anne Arundel County, personally appeared Alice P. Thornton, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

"That she is a sister of the within-named Margaret D. Marchand, and that she has read and carefully examined the affidavit of her said sister hereto appended; that she has personal knowledge of the condition of health and different stages of disease that finally resulted in the death of Commodore Marchand; and also personal knowledge of the statements contained in the annexed affidavit, and that she verily believes the same to be true.

"ALICE P. THORNTON.

"Sworn and subscribed this 15th day of May, 1884, before me,

[SEAL.]

"SPRIGG HARWOOD,

"Clerk of Circuit Court for Anne Arundel County."

Commodore Marchand was an aged man when he was retired, and there can be no doubt during his long and faithful service he contracted the disease which caused his death. His widow is now sixty-six years of age.

In view of all the circumstances the committee recommend the passage of the bill with amendment. Change word "fifty" to "thirty."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JAMES MORRISON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9370) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of James Morrison, alias James C. Mackintosh.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the charge of desertion in the case of James Morrison, alias James C. Mackintosh, an enlisted man in the Navy, who deserted from the United States ship Lexington at Monterey, Cal., October 22, 1848, be, and the same is hereby, removed from the record of his service.

SEC. 2. That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized to settle the accounts for back pay, bounty, and allowances that may be due to said James Morrison, alias James C. Mackintosh, at the date of his desertion from the United States ship Lexington, and to pay the same from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon satisfactory proof being furnished to them by the said Mackintosh of his identity with the said James Morrison.

The report (by Mr. LODGE) is as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9370) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of James Morrison, alias James C. Mackintosh, having duly considered the same, beg leave to report it back with the recommendation that the same do pass.

It appears from an examination of the facts in the case that James C. Mackintosh enlisted as a seaman in the United States naval service June 22, 1843, and served with credit on the United States steamships Ohio, Cumberland, and Franklin to the close of the Mexican war, when, his term of enlistment having nearly expired, he was transferred to the store-ship Lexington, and while attached to that vessel was doing shore duty at Monterey, Mexico.

In the mean time the gold excitement broke out in California, and he with seven other of his comrades were persuaded to leave for the "diggings." The mark of desertion was accordingly entered against his name on the rolls of the United States steamship Lexington, October 22, 1848. Returning to New York, in 1853, he again re-enlisted, under his right name of James C. Mackintosh, serving faithfully on the North Carolina, Constitution, and the Portsmouth (N. H.) navy-yard, until the outbreak of the war, when he enlisted on the Octorara. He was successively promoted as a petty officer, as a coxswain and gunner's mate, and at the battle of Mobile Bay was severely wounded in the head while at the wheel.

On recovering from his wound he successively re-enlisted again up to the year 1872, when he received an appointment as a watchman in the Boston navy-yard. The gallant Admiral C. R. P. Rogers, who was at that time the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, spoke of him as follows:

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS, December 5, 1872.

I have served with James Mackintosh during three cruises, one when he was a boy and twice as a petty officer. I beg leave to recommend him very strongly for employment at our navy-yard. Such faithful seamen well deserve the consideration of naval officers.

C. R. P. ROGERS, Chief of Bureau.

Mackintosh is still in the naval service, and was recently on duty on board the United States ship Galena. In view of his many years of faithful performance of duty, it seems to your committee that it will be but an act of simple justice to give him the relief asked for.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH S. HENDERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4250) granting a pension to Joseph S. Henderson.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he hereby is, empowered and directed to place the name of Joseph S. Henderson, late of Company H, Twenty-seventh Regiment Iowa Infantry, on the pension-roll, and that said pension be rated at $16 per month after the taking effect of this act.

The report (by Mr. FLICK) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4250) granting a pension to Joseph S. Henderson, submit the following report:

The applicant enlisted December 29, 1863, in Company H, Twenty-seventh Iowa Infantry, and was discharged November 15, 1865. He made application for pension on the ground that he contracted disease of the eyes in the service. The claim was rejected on the ground that he failed to prove, under the rules of the Department, that he contracted the disease while in the Army.

The proof abundantly establishes his soundness prior to enlistment and shows that he was for some months treated for a fever in hospital at Memphis, Tenn. Also that in 1863, and very soon after his discharge, he was suffering with inflammation of the eyes, from which he has never recovered, and that he is now almost totally blind.

Claimant testifies that disease of his eyes followed and was the result of the fever for which he was treated in hospital in 1864.

In view of the fact that claimant was a sound man at time of enlistment, and was suffering from disease of the eyes soon after discharge, and has been so afflicted ever since, and in view of his testimony, your committee believe the proof sufficient to justify the granting of a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to the fact that this bill provides that the Commissioner of Pensions shall grant this pension. The usual form is the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MORRILL. That is a mistake in draughting the bill. It should be the Secretary of the Interior, and I move that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. TERNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10166) for the relief of William J. Terney.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the charge of desertion standing against the name of William J. Terney, of Company H, Third Michigan Cavalry, be, and the same is hereby, removed, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to issue to him, the said William J. Terney, an honorable discharge.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM T. RHODES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8600) granting an increase of pension to William T. Rhodes.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay William T. Rhodes, late of Company K, Twelfth Regiment United States Infantry, in war with Mexico, a pension at the rate of $25 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. SMYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8600) granting an increase of pension to William T. Rhodes, have considered the same and report:

The claimant enlisted June 6, 1847, as a private in Company K, Twelfth United States Infantry, and served in the war with Mexico until January 12, 1848, when he was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability on account of pulmonary consumption.

He filed an application for a pension in the Pension Bureau March 22, 1879, alleging that he contracted lung disease in Mexico; but the examining surgeon reported no disability existing from said disease, and the claim was rejected. He was subsequently granted a pension at $9 per month under the Mexican war service act, and the bill proposes to increase the same to $25 per month.

In his petition for relief the claimant avers that he has never recovered from the disease contracted in Mexico and that he is now sixty-five years old and owns no property whatever. He further states that his only source of income is his small pension, and he is obliged to depend for a support largely upon his wife and two children.

The truthfulness of the claimant's statement is vouched for by thirty-five neighbors and acquaintances, who indorse his petition. His inability to perform any manual labor by reason of nervous exhaustion and general physical debility is shown by the testimony of Dr. A. R. Scruggs, of Hart County, Kentucky.

In view of the facts stated, your committee are of the opinion that the case is a proper one for the action of Congress, and the passage of the bill is therefore recommended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JONATHAN C. HUFFMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3501) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Jonathan C. Huffman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the records in his office so as to remove the charge of desertion against Jonathan C. Huffman, late of Company E, Ninth Kentucky Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge from the service of the United States, as of date September 29, 1862.

The report (by Mr. CAREY) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3501) removing charge of desertion against Jonathan C. Huffman, having considered the same, respectfully report:

That the bill proposes to relieve Jonathan C. Huffman of the charge of desertion, as shown by his military record, as a member of Company E, Ninth Kentucky Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge to date from September 29, 1862. This soldier was mustered into said company November 29, 1861, and on October 4, 1862, was dropped as a deserter as having been absent without leave since September 29, 1862. On the 17th day of October, 1863, he enlisted in Company E, Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers, and served in that organization as chief musician until mustered out on December 13, 1865.

From the affidavits presented to the committee it appears the soldier was left sick at a hospital in Louisville, Ky., and that about October 1, 1862, he was sent, with others, to find his company, which was supposed to be at Bowling Green, Ky., and that on reaching that point he was told that the regiment had been disbanded, and that its members had gone to their homes. He then visited his brother in Indiana, and after he had, as he supposed, enlisted in the One hundred and eighteenth Indiana Regiment, he was taken sick, and on his recovery he applied to the adjutant-general of Indiana to be forwarded to this regiment. He was told that his name did not appear on the rolls of the regiment. He then enlisted in the Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers. All the facts of this case are set out in accompanying report of the War Department and affidavits.

Considering the age of the soldier at the time of his enlistment and the fact of his service of more than three years in the Union Army, and that he did not enlist in the second organization to receive a bounty, the committee recommend that the bill pass, amended in line 6 by inserting after the word "Company" the letter "E."

Case of Jonathan C. Huffman, Company E, Ninth Kentucky Volunteers.

RECORD AND PENSION DIVISION, May 19, 1860.

A report in this case was furnished the House Committee on Military Affairs on House bill 3707, Fifty-third Congress, first session, on March 6, 1893, since which date the status of the soldier has not been changed either by the introduction of new testimony or by subsequent legislation.

The following is a copy of the report referred to, to wit:

"The official records show that Jonathan C. Huffman was enrolled September 24, 1861, and mustered in November 26, 1861, for three years as a private in Company E, Ninth Kentucky Volunteers; present with his company to the muster of February 29, 1862, and reported absent, sick in hospital at Louisville, Ky., on same rolls up to the muster of March and April, 1863. On the muster for May and June, 1863, he was reported absent without leave in Metcalf County, Kentucky, since September 29, 1862, and on the return for October, 1863, he was finally dropped as having deserted October 4, 1862.

"On October 17, 1863, he enlisted under the name of John H. Taylor, for three years, in Company E, Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers, and he served with that organization until mustered out on December 13, 1865, as chief musician of the regiment.

"In his sworn application of June 19, 1890, for removal of the charge of deser-

The Surgeon-General of the Army reports, under date of November 30, 1877, that this man was admitted to Union Hotel General Hospital, Georgetown, D. C., July 5, 1862, wounded, disposition not given; entered General Hospital, Davids Island, New York Harbor, September 4, 1862, with "gunshot of hip," and deserted December 13, 1862.

He was discharged by order of the court of common pleas of Crawford County, Pennsylvania, June 12, 1863, on the ground of minority at time of enlistment, and that he enlisted without his father's consent.

Claimant, in affidavit dated January 15, 1884, declares that he was wounded at Malvern Hill, Virginia, and sent to hospital at Georgetown, D. C., and thence to Davids Island, New York; that in the following November he went home on a pass, and was detained at home by his parents on account of his being a minor and because of his wounds; that he was arrested in 1863 as a deserter and released on writ of habeas corpus, and in 1864 enlisted in the Navy, but was rejected on account of his wounds; that he was wounded through both hips, and is now drawing a pension. He further states that he had no desire or intention of deserting, and that he believes himself entitled to an honorable discharge.

Under date of February 29, 1884, he states that he is unable to present his pass, as it was worn out by carrying it in his pocket, but says he can prove by all his neighbors that he had a pass, and that he showed it to them; claims to have gone to his home on transportation furnished by the Government through Col. Charles Burton, the head of the Relief Association of Pennsylvania at New York. (The records fail to show that this man was granted a pass as alleged.)

On February 4, 1886, Hon. J. D. CAMERON, United States Senate, was informed by letter from this Department that this soldier's case does not come within the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and his release from service by order of a civil court while a deserter at large can not be accepted as an extenuation of his crime of desertion. He was further informed that under these circumstances there is no provision of law under which the charge can be removed.

The status of the case has not been changed by the introduction of additional testimony, nor by subsequent legislation (acts of Congress approved May 17, 1886, and March 2, 1889, respectively).

Respectfully submitted,

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Captain and Assistant Surgeon, United States Army.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, as there does not appear to be any further business before the House, I ask unanimous consent to submit some views which have occurred to me as to the far-reaching effect of a law which would place all the machinery of Federal elections in the hands of the central Government. That it would destroy the beautiful equipoise which does so much to give stability to our Government and promises for its ever-enduring permanence there can be no doubt. I also wish in that connection to make some statements as to the experience of the people of Alabama during the period they were governed by officers holding their power by virtue of an election controlled by Federal officials.

I am impelled to address myself to this subject, as the remarkable speech delivered on September 3 by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] has confirmed our apprehensions as to the dire purpose of the more extreme Republican leaders regarding the Southern States. In that speech he denounced Republicans who hesitated in the support of the bill as traitors and Judas Iscariots. In referring to the action of the Senatorial caucus in postponing action on the bill, he says:

Every Democrat in the land is to-day applauding the action of the Republican Senatorial caucus.

He also speaks of—

The anxiety and interest manifested everywhere by Democrats for its defeat.

Mark, he unquestionably says that every Democrat in the land manifested anxiety for its defeat and applauded the action of the Senate. "Every Democrat" includes every one of the 4,000,000 Democrats from the States north of the Ohio and Potomac; and the fact that Mr. KENNEDY testifies that every one was opposed to the bill is abundant proof that the best men of the North understood the evil and fearful purposes of its advocates.

SPOILSMEN NOW CONTROL THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

It is becoming evident that there are two Republican parties in the North: one composed of men who believe in the principles which were advocated by those who claimed for it grand and noble purposes, who seek its preservation because they believe that under its principles perfect liberty, Christian precepts, progress, civilization, the happiness and welfare of mankind can be maintained; the other comprising those who care for nothing and seek for nothing but increase of power, their personal aggrandizement, and the opportunity given them for spoil and plunder.

It is the latter party that demands a bill which would give them a clutch on the Government and the Treasury which could never be loosed. It is this character of men who in 1888, by bribery and fraud, obtained control of the House of Representatives, and it is such men who seek by force and fraud and their own counting and certifying, to retain permanent control of the Government. This Republican party is now dominant in most of the Republican States of the North, and the better elements of all parties are alarmed at its audacity and disregard of the best interests of the people.

Two days ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] made another speech reiterating his demand for the passage of the force bill and denouncing any Republican who did not accede to the extreme views he expressed. The country had then had three weeks in which to read and contemplate his advocacy of imperial methods. In his anxiety to give proof that his demand that the force bill be put into execution was not approved by the Democratic press he said:

I hold in my hand clippings from various newspapers throughout all America, and I testify to you here to-day that in all of these lines there is not one single Democratic paper that has approved my speech on this floor.

If the statement is true, and I am confident that it is, I beg to ask if there could be much higher proof of the dangerous and evil character of the bill and the utter disregard of right and reason which actuates the Republican members of the present Congress. That the bill is opposed by every one of the great conservative papers throughout all America ought to be sufficient condemnation of the measure.

DECEPTION AND INSINCERITY OF REPUBLICANS.

In order to show that the Republican press and the Republican party sustain him in this position, Mr. KENNEDY said:

I hold in my hand here clippings from hundreds upon hundreds of Republican newspapers throughout all this country, and, with one or two exceptions, my words upon this floor have been approved by the Republican press and by the people of the country.

I hold in my hand here, Mr. Speaker, letters—and these are only a few of the great mass I have received from the country—from every section of the land, from Maine to California, and from the Lakes to the Gulf, indorsing word for word and letter for letter the language and spirit of the speech.

If the gentleman is only partly correct every right-thinking man is admonished that the men who now control the affairs of this country are of too low a moral standard and too devoid of principle and patriotism to be further intrusted with power.

The conduct of the Republican leaders and the partisan Republican press with reference to the force bill is an excellent illustration of their utter insincerity, and is proof that they will scruple at nothing in order to carry out their purposes. The discussions in their caucuses and conclaves showed that the only difficulty they expected to encounter was in the passage of the bill through the House. That being accomplished, they regarded the struggle as virtually terminated.

The Republican majority in the Senate being so large, they considered its favorable action upon the measure as beyond a question of doubt, and they anticipated no delay in the Senate, as according to their view, the bill did not affect the election of Senators nor of any one except members of the House, and they assumed that after the House had passed a bill affecting only the election of its own members it would be a discourtesy for the Senate to hesitate in concurring, even to the extent which would result from ordinary discussion.

Certainly, said these damagognes, the Senate would never venture to suggest an amendment to a bill which their co-ordinate body had arranged for the management of their own affairs.

As an element of proof that these were the views entertained by Republicans, I will read a sentence from Mr. KENNEDY's speech of September 3. In speaking of the bill, he says:

It made no effort to either abridge or deny the rights of the Senate, or in any manner to interfere with the powers, privileges, or duties of its members.

And following a subhead which was in these words, "The opinion of the House should govern," he proceeds:

It was reasonable under such a condition of affairs to presume that the Senate, acting as a co-ordinate branch of the Government, if such a measure was deemed necessary by the House for its own protection and for the welfare and safety of the people, would evidence its assent by the speedy passage of a measure which had been demanded, not only by the House itself, but by the people of the whole country.

Instead of such consideration as was demanded by so important and weighty a measure, the Republican caucus of the Senate of the United States determined to postpone its consideration "to a more convenient season."

These extracts from Mr. KENNEDY's speech certainly tend to confirm the truth of the statements that the conspirators felt that the necessity for concealing their wicked designs only lasted while the case was pending in the House.

Consequently, prior to the passage of the bill the advocates of the measure were loud and vociferous in their declaration that the bill could have no possible effect other than to insure absolute fairness in the election of "members of Congress," and could not possibly have the slightest influence or effect upon the election of any State officials or Presidential electors. This talk was drummed into the ears of the people in season and out of season until after the final vote had been taken, at near midnight, during the evening session of July 2.

SECRET PURPOSES UNCOVERED TOO EARLY.

The moment the Speaker announced that the bill had passed the House the conspirators thought that further deceptions and falsehoods were unnecessary, and immediately they commenced to uncover and boast of the real purposes intended to be attained. Their wicked and nefarious designs were partly unfolded in an editorial which appeared the next morning in the National Republican of July 3, the leading Republican organ of Washington City. It said:

With the Lodge national election law in full force over the South and various Democratic strongholds up North, we may confidently look for a different state of political affairs than now exists. New York City will then return several more Republican Congressmen than at present, while more than twenty negro Representatives from the South will render the Republican control of the future Congress absolutely secure and safe. As Mississippi, South Carolina, and Florida contain a large majority of negroes, and as there are enough white Republicans in Alabama, Arkansas, North Carolina, and Louisiana, acting in concert with the negroes, to put these States into the Republican line, we can confidently look in the future for seven Southern States to be reliably Republican.

This means a gain of fourteen Senators and at least twenty Representatives to the Republican party.

Here the leading organ of the Republican party in the national Capital admits that the assertion which had been so freely made that the law was not to be put in operation in the North was a mere pretense and fraud, resorted to for the purpose of deceiving members of their party who would not otherwise have given their support, and they unblushingly assert their intention of changing the political status of "various Democratic strongholds up North," thus admitting that they intend to avail themselves of the frauds which could be easily perpetrated under the bill, which it is evident they had specially framed for that purpose.

AN ATTEMPT TO NEGROIZE THE SOUTH.

They also admit that they were guilty of falsehood and sought only to deceive when they so lustily asserted that the bill would not affect State elections, for the day after the bill was passed this paper says:

As Mississippi, South Carolina, and Florida contain a large majority of negroes, and as there are enough white Republicans in Alabama, Arkansas, North Carolina, and Louisiana, acting in concert with the negroes, to put these States into the Republican line, we can confidently look in the future for seven Southern States to be reliably Republican.

INTENDED CONFISCATION OF PROPERTY OF WHITES.

The Republican organ then proceeds to explain how it is intended to confiscate the property of the white people of the South. It says:

When through the operation of the Lodge national election law, six or seven Southern States shall discard Democratic rule, we shall look confidently to see some measure of justice done the blacks, who have been so long defrauded of their rights. Heavy taxes should be laid upon the property of the whites to develop and extend the public-school system in those States.

This must mean that their determination is to tax the property of the whites to the point of confiscation, as the whites are already maintaining excellent schools, including universities of a high order, for the education of the blacks, and to do so are taxing their own property as heavily as it will bear. No Northern Republican has studied the condition of the negro schools of the South so closely as Senator BLAIR, and he stated—

That 95,000 black children are attending the public schools in the South, and that the burden of the expense is mainly defrayed by the white people of the South.

MISCEGENATION AND MIXED SCHOOLS.

The National Republican, in its joy and glee, then continues, and further develops the wicked and treasonable designs of these revolutionists, as follows:

Separate schools for the two races should be abolished, and the plan of bringing the youth of both colors into close and equal relations in schools and churches given a fair trial, as one of the most potent elements to break down the detestable Bourbonism of the South. The right of the black to bear arms should be guaranteed to him, as well as all the social rights intended to be secured him by the passage of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution. The State laws against the intermarriage of the races should be repealed, and any discriminations against the black in the matters of learning trades or obtaining employment should be made a criminal offense, while the colored man's right to hold office should be sacredly protected and recognized. A few years of this policy will solve the race problem satisfactorily.

It seems almost incredible that God could allow men to live who are actuated by feelings so low, vile, and vicious. Miscegenation is contrary to God's command. It has been proven over and over again that the negro and white man are of different species, and that when marriage takes place there can be no offspring beyond the third generation; and yet these people fly in the face of the ordinance of God in their frenzy to destroy the people of one-third of the country. I ask if any man endowed with a spark of honor or christian sentiment can aid such wicked, diabolic designs.

Let us give a more critical examination of some of these admitted and even avowed designs, purposes, and intentions:

First:

With the Lodge election law in full force over the South we can confidently look for a different state of political affairs. * * * There are enough white Republicans in Alabama, Arkansas, North Carolina, and Louisiana, acting in concert with the negroes, to put those States in the Republican line.

FRAUDS UNDER FORMER FEDERAL ELECTION LAWS.

There is no doubt but that the Federal election officers would certify the election of Republican candidates, and there is no question but that a Republican Congress would do any act necessary to Republicanize these States.

This is proven by the diabolic action of a Republican Congress with regard to the only election ever held in Alabama under Federal authority.

The act of March 23, 1867, made provision for a constitutional convention in Alabama, whose members were to be elected under and in virtue of a Federal election law, and section 5 of the act provided that in order to secure adoption or ratification of the said constitution there should be cast—

A majority of the votes of the registered voters.

It so happened that far less than the required number of votes were cast in the election, and Major-General Meade made his report certifying that—

The constitution falls of ratification by 8,114 votes.

And he also stated that prominent Republicans had asked him to make a false report, which of course he refused to do.

Notwithstanding the indisputable fact that the constitution was defeated according to the provisions of the law which authorized the election, this unscrupulous Republican Congress declared it ratified, and immediately admitted the Republican Senators and Representatives who claimed to be elected under said constitution.

There was no pretense that the election was not conducted with perfect fairness; as it was entirely under the control of the military officers of the United States they could not set up that plea. In fact the report of Major-General Meade insisted that it was a fair election in all respects.

If a Republican Congress would commit such an atrocity, could we expect that they would scruple a moment in declaring all Republicans elected without regard to the number of votes they received?

They would not have any difficulty in doing this, as we have seen that the election officers appointed by Davenport, the author of the election bill, were robbers, thieves, convicted felons, penitentiary convicts, and keepers of the lowest dens of depravity and wickedness.

CONFISCATION BY TAXATION.

The passage of the Lodge bill would be a signal to the unscrupulous scoundrels of the United States to gather in the South to repeat, if possible, their carnival of crime, theft, plunder, and robbery which they carried on while the Southern States were under Republican rule from 1867 to 1874.

After thus getting control of the State, what does the National Republican, the organ of the Republican party, further say it is their purpose to do?

Second:

Heavy taxes would be laid upon the property of the whites.

The history of the Republican party in the South leaves no doubt but that this would be done.

They increased State taxes to 1½ per cent. and county taxes in many instances to the same figure, while under good old Democratic days it was less than one-fourth that amount.

They collected and squandered some $2,000,000 a year, and in addition to this, during the six years of their control, they ran up our bonded debt from $5,270,000 to $25,503,593 and reduced the value of State bonds from 108 to 22 cents on a dollar.

They squandered the school fund, paying school officials other than teachers six times as much as is now paid the same officers under Democratic administration.

Third:

MIXED SCHOOLS FOR WHITE AND BLACK.

Serious as all these evils would be, they are as nothing when compared with other indignities and atrocities with which we are threatened. We will read further from this Republican organ:

Separate schools for the two races should be abolished, and the plan of bringing the youth of both colors into close and equal relations in schools and churches given a fair trial as one of the most potent elements to break down the detestable Bourbonism of the South.

That they would promptly commit this crime there need not be the slightest doubt. This was a leading and apparently favorite project in the convention of 1867, the members of which were elected under the Federal election law which Congress enacted for that purpose.

The convention, composed largely of negroes and adventurers from other States, debated in a most inflammatory manner in favor of intermarriage of blacks and whites, mixed schools, and the disfranchisement of large classes of white citizens.

A resolution providing against race amalgamation was tabled by the convention, and a small minority of thirteen members, who had become alarmed at the reckless disregard of the majority, issued an address on December 10, 1867, protesting against the proposed constitution, alleging as a cause that it authorized mixed schools, did not prohibit intermarriage of blacks and whites, and that—

It tended to the abasement and degradation of the white population of the State.

Afterwards, finding that in order to put these projects into operation legislative acts were necessary, bills for such purposes were introduced into the Legislature. I will read one which was voted for by every Republican member except three, and they were, I am glad to say, from the white counties of North Alabama:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That citizens of the State of Alabama, or of the United States of America within the State of Alabama, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, are entitled to the equal and impartial enjoyment of any accommodation, advantage, facility, or privilege furnished by common carriers whether on land or water, by licensed inn-keepers, by licensed owners, managers, or lessees of theaters, or other places of public amusement, by trustees, commissioners, superintendents, teachers, or other officers of common schools or other public institutions of learning, the same supported or authorized by law, by trustees or officers of cemetery associations or benevolent institutions incorporated by the laws of the State, and this right shall not be denied or abridged on any pretense of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That any person violating the foregoing provisions, or aiding in their violation, or inciting thereto, shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby.

Judge Bruce, now United States judge, and who would be a controlling factor in elections, should the force bill be enacted in law, was at that time a member of the Legislature. was one of the most earnest champions of the bill, and spoke in its advocacy for more than two hours.

Fourth:

PROPOSE TO ARM THE BLACKS.

Another design of the advocates of the force bill is expressed in these words:

The rights of the black to bear arms should be guaranteed to him.

It is quite certain that after Republicans had seized the State of Alabama this idea would be put into operation. When they obtained control by the Federal election laws of 1867 they organized and armed a negro militia, and unscrupulous white Republicans sought to have them put on duty.

The governor of the State, William H. Smith, was one of the few Southern white men who were elected in 1868. The demands made upon him by his party associates to order out negro militia under the pretense of enforcing the law were of a character to alarm him and he declined to accede to their demands. He knew that the State was at peace, the laws were obeyed, and that improper motives must prompt such requests. In his annual message to the Legislature, November 15, 1869, this Republican governor said:

Nowhere have the courts been interrupted. No resistance has been encountered by officers of courts in the efforts to discharge the duties imposed upon them by law.

This action upon the part of Governor Smith, together with his refusal to order out the negro militia, called upon him the bitter criticisms and denunciations of Senator George E. Spencer, I. D. Sibley, and others.

On July 25, 1870, in a letter to the Huntsville Advocate, he replied to these attacks and denounced these Republican officials "as systematically uttering every conceivable falsehood," and said:

During my entire administration of the State government but one officer has certified to me that he was unable, on account of lawlessness, to execute his official duties. That officer was the sheriff of Morgan County. I immediately made application to General Crawford for troops. They were sent, and the said sheriff refused their assistance. My candid opinion is that Sibley does not want the law executed, because that would put down crime, and crime is his life's blood. He would like very much to have a kuklux outrage every week to assist him in keeping up strife between the whites and the blacks, that he might be more certain of the votes of the latter. He would like to have a few colored men killed every week to furnish semblance of truth to Spencer's libels upon the people of the State generally. It is but proper in this connection that I should speak in strong terms of condemnation of the conduct of two white men in Tuskegee a few days ago in advising the colored men to resist the authority of the sheriff; and these are not kuklux, but are Republicans.

This is but a sample of the conduct of many Republican officials who were elected under the Federal election laws of that time. They sought to stir up strife. The killing of negroes was to their political advantage and these men and men like them were responsible for many disturbances, in which negroes were too often the worst sufferers. They now seek to again arm the negroes with a full knowledge that these poor creatures would be betrayed by pretended friends into aggression which would be very apt to terminate with disastrous results.

I desire to call special attention to the fact that the Republican governor of Alabama stated that Sibley, the sheriff of Morgan County, demanded that the negro militia be called out; that the governor sent Sibley United States troops in answer to his assertion that "he was unable, on account of lawlessness, to execute his official duties," but that Sibley refused their assistance.

I call attention also to the fact that Governor Smith said that Sibley did—not want the law executed, because that would put down crime, and crime is his life's blood.

Governor Smith also said that his party associate, Sibley—would like to have a few colored men killed every week.

It was such Republican scoundrels as these who were elected to office under the Federal election law of 1867.

Fifth:

ALABAMA REPUBLICANS SANCTION MISCEGENATION.

Let us look still further into the intentions of these men.

The advocates of the force bill also say:

The State laws against the intermarriage of the races should be repealed.

That this would be done there can be no question. We have seen that this idea of miscegenation was debated and favored by them in the convention of 1867, and also that that body voted down a proposition looking toward its prohibition; but, worse than that, the highest judiciary of that Republican government decreed that all laws prohibiting the marriage of white persons and negroes were null and void and in violation of the acts of Congress and the Constitution of the United States. I read from the decision in Burns vs. The State, 48 Alabama Supreme Court Reports, page 195:

Sections 3902, 3903 of the Revised Code, which prohibit the intermarriage of white persons and negroes, are in contravention of the act of Congress of April 9, 1868, known as the "civil rights bill," and repugnant to section 1 of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution.

The court quotes from section 1, Article XIV of the Constitution, namely:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States.

And says that negroes are citizens, and that—

One of the rights conferred by citizenship, therefore, is that of suing any other citizen. The civil rights bill now confers this right upon the negro in express terms, as also the right to make and enforce contracts, amongst which is that of marriage with any citizen capable of entering into that relation.

This unnatural, revolting, unchristian, and ungodly decision of the supreme court of Alabama illustrates the reckless disregard of right which actuated the persons who were given official position by virtue of a Federal election law.

In 1874 we elected a new supreme court, composed of Democrats, who reversed and overruled this decision in the case of Green vs. State (58 Ala., 190), which was followed by Hoover vs. State (59 Ala., 57).

The case of Pace vs. State (69 Ala., 231) involved the same principle. It was appealed by the defendant to the Supreme Court of the United States, which tribunal delivered an opinion affirming the decision of the Democratic supreme court of Alabama, and therefore reversing the case of Burns vs. State, which was rendered by the Republican supreme court of Alabama. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Pace vs. Alabama, decided that the statutes of Alabama against miscegenation were not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT REBUKES ALABAMA REPUBLICANS.

I read from volume 106, United States Supreme Court Reports, page 583:

Section 4189 of the Code declares that "if any white person and any negro, or the descendant of any negro to the third generation, inclusive, though one ancestor of each generation was a white person, intermarry with each other, each of them must, on conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary or sentenced to hard labor for the county for not less than two nor more than seven years."

The court after discussing the subject decrees that the law of Alabama, which I have read—

Is not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

This shows that the Supreme Court of the United States, although entirely composed of Republicans, revolted at the atrocious ruling of the Republican supreme judges of Alabama; but to more fully illustrate the low character of the officials, even including the judges of the supreme court, who were forced upon the people of Alabama by the Federal election law of 1868, I will call attention to opinions of the supreme courts of Indiana and Pennsylvania.

INDIANA REVOLTS AT MISCEGENATION.

I read the head-note in the case of State vs. Gibson (36 Indiana, page 389):

Neither the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States nor the civil rights bill passed by Congress has impaired or abrogated the laws of this State on the subject of the marriage of whites and negroes. Such a union between members of the different races is a criminal offense by the statutes of this State.

The decision also says (pages 403, 404):

The statute provides that the following marriages are void: When one of the parties is a white person and the other possessed of one-eighth or more of negro blood; and when either party is insane or idiotic at the time of the marriage. Under the police power possessed by the States they undoubtedly have the power to pass such laws.

The people of this State have declared that they are opposed to the intermixture of races and all amalgamation.

The court then adopts and incorporates in its decision the decree of the supreme court of Pennsylvania in the case of Westchester and Philadelphia Railroad vs. Miles (55 Pennsylvania State Reports, page 209), in which the learned judges, with great emphasis, declare that it is the duty of the law to protect society from the character of evils which the Alabama Republican judges sought to force upon the people of that State.

PENNSYLVANIA REVOLTS AT MISCEGENATION.

The question considered was the right of a railroad to provide separate localities on their trains for white and black passengers. I read from pages 213 and 214:

Why the Creator made one black and the other white, we know not; but the fact is apparent, and the races distinct, each producing its own kind and following the peculiar law of its constitution. Conceding equality, with natures as perfect and rights as sacred, yet God has made them dissimilar, with those natural instincts and feelings which He always imparts to His creatures when He intends that they shall not overstep the natural boundaries He has assigned to them. The natural law which forbids their intermarriage and that social amalgamation which leads to a corruption of races is as clearly divine as that which imparted to them different natures. The tendency of intimate social intermixture is to amalgamation contrary to the law of races.

From social amalgamation it is but a step to illicit intercourse, and but another to intermarriage. But to a sort of separateness is simply to say that following the order of Divine Providence, human authority ought not to compel these widely separated races to intermix. The right of such to be free from social contact is as clear as to be free from intermarriage. The former may be less repulsive as a condition, but not less entitled to protection as a right.

It is not prejudice, nor caste, nor injustice of any kind, but simply to suffer men to follow the law of races established by the Creator Himself, and not to compel them to intermix contrary to their instincts. * * * Never has there been an intermixture of the two races socially, religiously, civilly, or politically. By uninterrupted usage the blacks live apart, visit and entertain among themselves. In fact, there is not an institution of the State in which they have mingled indiscriminately with the whites. Even the common-school law provides for separate schools.

In the military service, also, they were not intermixed with the white soldiers, but were separated into companies and regiments of color, and this not by way of disparagement, but from motives of wisdom and prudence, to avoid the antagonisms of variant and immiscible races.

ALABAMA REPUBLICAN OFFICIALS DEGRADE WHITE MEN.

What a contrast between the words and moral sentiments uttered by the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the States of Indiana and Pennsylvania on the one hand, and the Republican judges of the supreme court of Alabama on the other. The former protecting and purifying society and morals; the latter exercising all their weight and force to destroy, degrade, and, if possible, drag down the highest type of man and womanhood to a level with the negro race. It is this degradation which the organ of the Republican party of this Capital city gleefully and joyfully proclaims is to be the dreadful fate of the people of the South—

When the Lodge election law is in full force.

The people who seek to carry out these ungodly purposes do not pretend that they do this for the purpose of or to be in any way beneficial to the negro race, but they plainly assert that their purpose is—

To break down the detestable Bourbonism of the South.

REPUBLICAN BAD FAITH REGARDING EDUCATIONAL BILL.

That the power of the Republican party has never been exercised in the interest of the colored man is quite apparent. There are few measures nearer to the colored man's heart than the education bill, and Republicans have solemnly promised to enact the law for his benefit.

In the Forty-seventh Congress, the Republican Senate refused to pass an educational bill.

The Southern Democrats of the House in that Congress expressed themselves emphatically for the bill. On January 16, 1883, the first vote on the question of considering the bill was 117 for and only 11 against it. The vote was then taken on the resolution to consider and the affirmative vote in favor of the bill was increased to 129, including, I believe, every Southern Democrat except those from Texas. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 15, 1883, page 1202.)

In the Forty-eighth, with a knowledge that Speaker CARLISLE and the House Committee on Education were opposed to the bill, they passed the measure, and it died in the House committee, just as these artful Republican Senators had expected.

In the Forty-ninth Congress the Senate passed the bill again after it had become reasonably certain that it would never be considered in the House, and these same tactics were repeated in the Fiftieth Congress.

In the Fifty-first Congress the House was known to be in favor of the bill and the Republican Senators were therefore unable to continue the tactics by which for six years they had deceived the colored people. They feared that if they passed the bill and sent it to the House, as now organized it would be acted on favorably by that body; and the bill to which the Senate gave but eleven adverse votes in the Forty-ninth and but twelve in the Fiftieth Congress was deliberated, voted down, and defeated by the Republican Senators, and this was done in a Senate whose Republican majority had just been increased by the addition of eight Republican Senators from the new States; and I will also state that on each of the votes by which it passed the Senate in the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses it was supported by three-fourths of the Democratic Senators from the Southern States. The platform upon which Mr. Cleveland was elected said:

We favor the diffusion of free education by common schools; and the Alabama Legislature, which was almost solidly Democratic, unanimously adopted the following memorial:

That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State be requested to secure the passage of a bill granting aid to education in the several States upon the basis of illiteracy, the amounts so appropriated to be applied by the several States through their superintendents of education.

It is perfectly clear that a large majority of Southern Democrats have unremittently urged the passage of an educational bill; and besides appropriating largely for the education of the whites, they have, as stated by Senator BLAIR, freely used their own means to educate the colored race; and the facts show that Republicans have taken precisely the contrary course.

Why they are guilty of this treachery towards the colored people of the South I can not say, except that, as you are quite aware, with education the colored men would no longer be their political slaves, but would vote with the party which advocated laws most promotive of their interests and material advancement.

EQUILIBRIUM ESSENTIAL TO OUR SYSTEM.

If there was no other reason for leaving this matter of election with the States, there is one which of itself is absolutely conclusive.

No one political party can continually control all the organizations and departments of a government without drawing to it bad and designing men, until it finally becomes so debased as to sink under the weight of its own depraved and vicious corruption.

Under our system this can not possibly occur. Under the Reed-Lodge-Davenport system it would be impossible to prevent such a result.

Under our system the popular branch of the law-making power can not remain for any long period under the control of one party. Its members are chosen by the people every two years and the elections are conducted through officers appointed by the governor and other State officials.

The States are nearly equally divided between the two great parties, thus producing a balance of power which must always tend to equalization.

If half the States are of the same political party as the one controlling the General Government, and they attempt to enact laws or administer laws so as to unduly aid in the election of Representatives of their own political faith, the States which are of the opposing faith would be expected to exert their efforts to counteract such proceedings, and the fact that retaliation would result from such legislation has, up to this period of our history, gone very far towards conserving the equilibrium which has maintained the stability of our Government. With this to balance it, it has stood many a shock and many a storm.

BALANCE, NOT FORCE, THE SECRET OF OUR SYSTEM.

While the world marvels at this wonderful structure, the wisest and most sagacious statesmen see the secret of our success in this one great safeguard which our constitutional fathers ingrafted into our system.

Now, Messrs. REED, LODGE, and Davenport say, root it out. If you do this, the historian of the fall of the American Republic may as well commence to prepare for his work.

The party in power would have the absolute control of elections. They have proven themselves utterly, and even criminally, unscrupulous in all matters controlling the elective franchise, and no one could for a moment doubt that the slight weight necessary to turn the balance in their favor would be exercised, and from the date of the passage of this bill every department of the Government would be permanently under their control.

Corruption would pile upon corruption, evil upon evil, usurpation upon usurpation, crime upon crime, tyranny upon tyranny, Reedism upon Reedism, until the weight would become too heavy to be borne, and then the crash would come.

The REED-LODGE-Davenport conspirators do not question but that such a result would be inevitable unless greatly increased power was given to the central Government; and to meet that exigency the regular Army with bayonets and cannon are provided, and the beautiful structure perfected and balanced by Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, and their compeers, so that for more than a century of triumphant progress no shock or attack in the slightest degree affected its proud and stately counterpoise, is now threatened with utter destruction.

Is there a man in Alabama who prefers a government supported by bayonets to one upheld by the love and confidence of the people?

Men who have no thought or desire for the welfare of mankind, who take no pride in the growth, progress, and extended influence of our country among the nations of the earth, care but little whether our land is endowed with God's best blessing or cursed with the worst evils which are threatened by the law to which I have referred. But men who believe the great American Republic has a mission to perform, and that its mission under the guidance of the hand of our Almighty Father is to spread the glad tidings of civil liberty and free christian government, and by its example as far as may be to extend these blessings to the millions of oppressed of other lands who look up to it with reverence, love, and hope, will join us in upholding the principles of government to which we owe our freedom, our progress, and our unexampled prosperity.

To the christian, to the good, and to the patriot who loves the glory of his country better than his own glory, the happiness of the vast concourse of his fellow-men better than his own happiness, we appeal to defend the land of Jefferson, Franklin, and Washington against the treasonable designs of selfish men who, for their own aggrandizement, would risk the life of this beautiful organization whose symbol, floating over land and sea, is loved by loyal hearts, feared by imperial and monarchical tyrants, and respected by all, whether the ruler or the ruled, sovereign or subject, prince or prelate.

During the delivery of the remarks by Mr. WHEELER the following occurred:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama will permit the suggestion that under the rule which governs our action here on Friday evening sessions we have no authority to permit anything to be published in the RECORD except that which pertains to pension legislation.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. It has been decided on two or three occasions that we have, and since those decisions our jurisdiction has been enlarged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In open session that may be done, but in our Friday evening sessions we are limited to the consideration of pension bills. Permission was given to print to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] upon a certain subject, but it was a subject of which we had jurisdiction at the Friday evening session.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. But the Chair will recall that our jurisdiction has been extended so as to include considering bills to correct the records of soldiers, and this gives us a wide range which certainly brings the remarks I have made within the rule.

Mr. BAKER. Was not general leave given to print on the election law?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. There is no question about that, and if the Chair desires it the remarks I have made may go in the RECORD under that general permission; but I think the Chair will agree that the remarks I have made would be pertinent to the bill now before the House affecting, as it does, the status of a soldier in the Army. [Laughter.]

In order that the enormity of its expressions may be more fully comprehended I append the article intact precisely as it appeared on the editorial page of the National Republican of July 3, 1890:

With the Lodge national election law in full force over the South and various Democratic strongholds up North, we may confidently look for a different state of political affairs than now exists. New York City will then return several more Republican Congressmen than at present, while more than twenty negro Representatives from the South will render the Republican control of the future Congress absolutely secure and safe. As Mississippi, South Carolina, and Florida contain a large majority of negroes, and as there are enough white Republicans in Alabama, Arkansas, North Carolina, and Louisiana, acting in concert with the negroes, to put these States into the Republican line, we can confidently look in the future for seven Southern States to be reliably Republican. This means a gain of fourteen Senators and at least twenty Representatives to the Republican party.

When through the operation of the Lodge national election law six or seven Southern States shall discard Democratic rule, we shall look confidently to see some measure of justice done the blacks, who have been so long defrauded of their rights. Heavy taxes should be laid upon the property of the whites to develop and extend the public school system in those States.

Separate schools for the two races should be abolished, and the plan of bringing the youth of both colors into close and equal relations in schools and churches given a fair trial, as one of the most potent elements to break down the detestable Bourbonism of the South. The rights of the black to bear arms should be guaranteed to him, as well as all the social rights intended to be secured him by the passage of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution. The State laws against the intermarriage of the races should be repealed, and any discriminations against the black in the matter of learning trades or obtaining employment should be made a criminal offense, while the colored man's right to hold office should be sacredly protected and recognized. A few years of this policy will solve the race problem satisfactorily.

CAROLINE A. FAIRFAX.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9506) for the relief of Caroline A. Fairfax.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to restore pensions in certain cases," approved June 9, 1890, shall be construed so as to include within its provisions Caroline A. Fairfax, Washington, D. C.

The report (by Mr. HILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9506) for the purpose of construing the act entitled "An act to restore pensions in certain cases," approved June 9, 1890, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The committee believe that the act of June 9, 1890, was intended to include the widows of officers of the Army as well as those of the Navy.

Mrs. Fairfax is the widow of Henry Fairfax, captain of Virginia Volunteers in the war with Mexico. Her case is similar to that of Jane M. McCrabb and others, which have already received the favorable action of the House.

The bill is returned with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN NELSON PAGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9531) to restore the pension of Susan Nelson Page.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to restore pensions in certain cases," approved June 9, 1890, shall be construed so as to include within its provisions Susan N. Page, widow of Capt. Francis Nelson Page, United States Army.

The report (by Mr. HILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9531) for the purpose of construing the act entitled "An act to restore pensions in certain cases," approved June 9, 1890, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The claimant, Mrs. Susan Nelson Page, is the widow of Francis N. Page, late captain and assistant adjutant-general, United States Army. He died March 25, 1860, and his widow received a pension of $30 per month, which was reduced, in accordance with subsequent legislation, to $25 per month, and still later to $20 per month, the amount she now receives.

Your committee believe that the act of June 9, 1890, was intended to include the widows of officers of the Army as well as those of the Navy, and the bill is therefore returned with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The hour of 10:30 o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House adjourned.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 1530) for the relief of the estate of John Ericsson—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2623) to authorize the acquisition of lands for coke ovens and other improvements and for right of way for wagon roads, railroads, and tramways in connection with coal mines—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 3441) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 4155) to provide for the inspection of live cattle, hogs, and the carcasses and products thereof which are the subjects of interstate commerce, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 4161) concerning agricultural entries of land on which mineral deposits are subsequently found—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 4308) to create a subport of entry and delivery at Neche, in the State of North Dakota—to the Committee on Commerce.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolutions were introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLOWER:

Whereas this body has been petitioned by the Grand Harbor of American Brotherhood of Steam-boat Pilots of the United States, composed exclusively of licensed masters and pilots, for the appointment of a committee from the House of Representatives to examine into, and, where necessary, revise the laws, rules, and regulations governing the steam-boat inspection service, for the reason that it is claimed by them that many of the said laws, rules, and regulations are arbitrary, unreasonable, ineffectual, and not in keeping with our present exigencies and progress, to the great detriment of the public service; and

Whereas said service, its licensed masters, pilots, and engineers are mainly governed by rules and regulations adopted by the boards of supervising inspectors at their annual meetings and enforced by the Treasury Department, many of which, it is claimed, are capricious, oppressive, and ridiculous, and none of which are clothed with the sanction of statute law; and

Whereas it is further claimed that the management of the service should be rendered more efficient, and that serious complaints and charges have been and are being made against several of its principal executive officers of incompetence, mismanagement, and official misconduct: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved, That a committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker for the purpose of making a thorough investigation of the management of the said service and the present laws, rules, and regulations governing the same, and investigate all charges that have been or may be preferred against any officer thereof, and make recommendations thereupon to this body with all convenient speed; and

Be it further resolved, That said committee shall have full power to summon witnesses, books, and papers, to incur all necessary expense, to employ clerks and counsel, to select times and places for holding its sessions, and to do all such further acts and things as may be requisite in the furtherance of this object; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BLISS:

Resolved, That the Clerk be authorized to continue in employment after the adjournment of the present session, for such period as he may deem necessary, the assistant journal clerk, and pay him out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of compensation now paid him; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. MCKINLEY:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned without day on Tuesday, the 30th day of September, at 2 o'clock p. m.;

to the Committee on Ways and Means.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

Mr. DOLLIVER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 17) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Michael Muskell, accompanied by a report (No. 3196)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2866) for the restoration of William C. Spencer to the Army, reported, as a substitute therefor, a bill (H. R. 12148) providing for a board to examine and report as to the physical condition of William C. Spencer at the time of his resignation from the Army; which was read twice, and, accompanied by a report (No. 3197), referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Library, reported favorably the bill of the Senate (S. 4057) to authorize the purchase of certain manuscript papers and correspondence of Thomas Jefferson, accompanied by a report (No. 3198)—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE, in behalf of the minority of the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11158) to authorize the New Orleans Terminal Railway and Bridge Company to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge, and all the necessary approaches thereto, over the Mississippi River above the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, on the left bank of the Mississippi River, to the opposite bank in said State, submitted their views in writing thereon; which were ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 3131—to the House Calendar.

Mr. PIERCE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 9622) to confirm certain land to Mrs. Zenon Boutte, in the State of Louisiana, accompanied by a report (No. 3199)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CASWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the bill of the Senate (S. 4047) supplemental to the act of Congress passed in March, 1887, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes,'" approved March 22, 1882, accompanied by a report (No. 3200)—to the House Calendar.

Mr. DUNPHY, from the Committee on Claims, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 21) for the relief of Thomas C. Ellison, accompanied by a report (No. 3201)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GEST, from the Committee on War Claims, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 10778) for the relief of Lester Noble, accompanied by a report (No. 3202)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 11766) to correct the military record of Marcellus Pettitt, accompanied by a report (No. 3203)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. YODER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. Res. 164) expressing the sense of Congress as to the meaning of existing laws providing pensions for those soldiers and sailors who have sustained the greater loss of an arm and a leg, or who have sustained the lesser loss of one hand and one foot, reported, as a substitute therefor, a bill (H. R. 12149) construing the act of February 28, 1877, increasing the pensions in certain cases; which was read twice, and, accompanied by a report (No. 3204), referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. OSBORNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 3568) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to revoke the order dismissing Second Lieut. Edwin F. Nixon, accompanied by a report (No. 3205)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on the Library, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 422) to authorize the purchase of the manuscript of William Vans Murray, accompanied by a report (No. 3206)—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 2121) for the relief of W. W. Beck, accompanied by a report (No. 3207)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles were introduced, severally read twice, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HOPKINS: A bill (H. R. 12150) to prevent national banks from acting as agents of lottery companies and forfeiting the charters of said banks for violations of the postal laws—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: A joint resolution (H. Res. 230) to authorize the Secretary of War to loan two light field guns to the Michigan Military Academy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BROOKSHIRE: A bill (H. R. 12151) granting a pension to John W. Ramsey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDWELL: A bill (H. R. 12152) for the relief of Henry L. Morey—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PERKINS: A bill (H. R. 12153) for the relief of Thomas F. Richardson—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ROCKWELL: A bill (H. R. 12154) granting a pension to Sheldon Norton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STIVERS: A bill (H. R. 12155) authorizing the donation of certain condemned cannon to the New York Military Academy, a chartered school of the State of New York, situated at Cornwall, near West Point, New York—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petition was laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLOWER: Petition of American Brotherhood of Steam-Boat Pilots of the United States, asking for certain legislation—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, September 27, 1890.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of 58 citizens of Lynden, in the State of Washington, praying that the Police Gazette and similar publications may be excluded from the mails; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Clear Lake Alliance, No. 1, of Spokane County, Washington, praying for the passage by the Senate of the Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a petition of 31 residents of Scott's Bluff County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of Senate bill 3991, known as the pure-food bill, to prevent adulteration and misbranding of food and drugs; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of the retail grocers of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of House bill 283, commonly known as the Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BLAIR presented a memorial of the Labor Alliance of New Orleans, La.; a memorial of colored Republicans of the Fourth district of New Orleans, La.; a memorial of the Seventh Ward Central Club, composed of colored citizens of New Orleans, La., and a memorial of the Teamsters and Loaders' Union Benevolent Association of New Orleans, La., remonstrating against the passage of the Conger lard bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the keeper and surfmen of the Cleveland life-saving station, praying for larger compensation to employes of the Life-Saving Service; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the council of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for an increase in the pay of employes of the Life-Saving Service; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MANDERSON presented two petitions of citizens of Colfax County, Nebraska; petition of citizens of Nuckolls County, Nebraska, and a petition of citizens of Seward County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of Senate bill 3991, known as the Paddock pure-food bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10811) granting a pension to Asa Joiner, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10810) granting a pension to Samuel S. Humphreys, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

COURTS IN IOWA.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11154) to repeal part of section 6 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts," approved July 20, 1882, to report it favorably without amendment; and, as it relates to the convenience of the United States court in the northern district of Iowa and the safety of the records, I ask that it may be considered now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It repeals so much of section 6 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts," approved July 20, 1882, as requires courts held under the provisions of the act to be held in buildings provided for that purpose without expense to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WINES'S REPORT ON DEFECTIVE CLASSES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report the following resolution, and I ask for its consideration and passage:

Resolved, That the order of the Senate of August 3, 1890, first session Forty-ninth Congress, to print Wines's Report on Defective Classes is hereby repealed, the same having been printed as a miscellaneous document of the Forty-seventh Congress.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. What document is that?

Mr. MANDERSON. This document is a volume of the Census of 1890. It was ordered printed at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress. Because of the imperfect copy received at the Printing Office it has not yet been printed, and we think it best, as it has become very stale matter, that it should not be printed. A part of the material, perhaps all that is essential, was printed as a miscellaneous document in the Forty-seventh Congress. The Public Printer reports this condition of facts, and upon inquiry we are satisfied that there is no necessity for the printing of this volume.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that in regard to vital statistics?

Mr. MANDERSON. It is in regard to the defective classes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Defective dependent classes?

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is only part of that which was ever published in the final reports of the Tenth Census, as I understand.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes; that is true.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not remember seeing the separate report to which the Senator refers. Was that an octavo volume or a quarto?

Mr. MANDERSON. I presume it was a quarto volume, as nearly all those publications were in that form. In fact I know it was in that form. I have seen the matter that was printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not recall it in quarto form.

Mr. MANDERSON. It seems to have become out of date, and it is really useless to go into this expenditure at this time.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. The Senator, I believe, states that the Public Printer reports that he thinks it is not necessary to print this volume. It seems to me he is not the man to judge whether a public document ought to be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I submit to the Senator from Illinois that that is the judgment of the Committee on Printing, and we merely submit it to the judgment of the Senate. If the Senate thinks it should be printed, we certainly have no objection.

Mr. CULLOM. I merely desired to inquire whether it would not be wise, in view of the amount of matter that was gathered together by that officer, to submit it to the inspection of the present Superintendent of the Census.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have consulted in this matter, I will say, with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who has exercised supervision and is fully acquainted with the facts, and the recommendation of the committee has been made only after such consultation and suggestion.

Mr. HALE. We considered it in the Forty-seventh Congress, and it was thought that all that was of any essential importance was covered in the publication made then, and since then it was not deemed by the committee advisable, in fact it has not been requested by the office, to print it.

Mr. CULLOM. It was on a resolution, I think, that I introduced myself in the Senate that whatever was printed finally was printed in the document to which the Senator refers. I never did know exactly what proportion of the amount of the matter that had been gathered was printed, or whether a sufficient number of volumes was printed for the use of the country.

Mr. MANDERSON. This was in addition to the usual number of the census report. The same number of this volume on the defective classes was printed under the general law governing the printing of the volumes of the census. This was an extra number of copies, I think as many as $500 would print, as it was a Senate resolution. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably the House concurrent resolution for printing the sixth annual Civil Service Commission report, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That of the sixth annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission, for the year ending June 30, 1889, there be printed 31,000 extra copies; of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the House of Representatives, and 25,000 for the United States Civil Service Commission.

Mr. COCKRELL. The fifth report has already been published, I presume.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes, it has been published. This provides for extra copies.

Mr. BLAIR. I inquire of the Senator what is the occasion for the commission having so large a proportion of these reports?

Mr. MANDERSON. Because, as we are informed by the president of the commission, the report contains the instructions and the rules of the Civil Service Commission governing examinations, and the habit of the commission is to use this report to answer inquiries from all over the country with reference to that subject-matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

Mr. MANDERSON. I report back adversely the concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing the printing of 50,000 copies of the sixth annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission, for the year ending June 30, 1889, and move that it be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. MANDERSON. From the Committee on Printing I report adversely the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] authorizing the printing of hearings on the alcoholic liquor traffic, and I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. BLAIR September 24, 1890, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 10,000 copies of the Report No. 1884, Fifty-first Congress, first session, and of Miscellaneous Document No. 317, Fifty-first Congress, first session, being the report and hearing under the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution in relation to alcoholic liquors, to be in pamphlet form.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 4437) to forfeit to the United States the lands claimed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company as having been granted to said company between Bismarck, in North Dakota, and Wallula, in Washington; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to say that I hope the Committee on Public Lands, to whom I asked that the bill be referred, will take early and prompt action upon it, because a bill has passed both Houses forfeiting part of that domain, and the friends of the measure in both Houses have admitted that that bill does not affect in any way the land between Wallula and Bismarck. Inasmuch as I think that our action may be misunderstood about it, I desire to have prompt action upon this bill, and I also desire that those lobbyists who have been here in favor of the Northern Pacific Railroad may be suspended, if I can effect that purpose, in getting their fees for the work they have been doing about Congress. I think the best way to do it is for the Senate and House to take up this subject of the forfeiture of that land grant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 4438) granting an increase of pension to James R. Lewis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4439) granting a right of way across the Scarborough Hill military reservation to the Ilwaco Railway and Navigation Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 4440) granting a pension to Lockie W. Reeves; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 4441) relating to junk dealers, dealers in second-hand personal property, and pawnbrokers in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, introduced a bill (S. 4442) providing for a board to examine and report as to the physical condition of William C. Spencer at the time of his resignation from the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NICKEL ORE OR MATTE FOR THE NAVY.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed.

Mr. HALE. I move to take up the joint resolution that went over yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 228) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to purchase nickel ore or nickel matte for use in the manufacture of nickel-steel armor, and for other naval purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. CAMERON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment I submitted was agreed to yesterday.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered yesterday by the Senator from Pennsylvania. It will be considered as disagreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. CAMERON. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire what the necessity is for appropriating a million dollars when Congress will be in session again in two months. I simply desire to say that if it is necessary for the purposes of the Government, that is all right.

Mr. HALE. That is just it.

Mr. PLATT. But it is going to be a continual menace hanging over the head of everybody who is engaged in making articles out of nickel in the United States; that is to say, the probability that a million dollars' worth of it may be required will immediately advance the price to all consumers of nickel and interfere with all the contracts that they have made. If there is not to be a million dollars' worth purchased, it seems to me the appropriation ought not to be for a million dollars.

Mr. HALE. The Senator himself has suggested what is the real need; and it is necessary that it be done now, and not be put off until the next session, in order that the Government may get the control of this valuable ingredient and not lose the chance of purchasing it. It will go elsewhere unless it is purchased now. I do not wish to consume any of the time of the Senate, Mr. President.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I objected yesterday to the consideration of the joint resolution for the reasons which I then gave, and which it is not necessary to repeat now. I know, as a matter of course, from official sources nothing whatever of the proposition. It was entirely new to me, and all the information that I had was gathered from the public prints and from communications from persons who are not connected with the Government. While I dislike at this time of the session to take up a matter of this sort, and thought then, and do now, that possibly it would have been better to have it go over, at the same time I am assured by those who have the responsibility of the Government that after a thorough examination this becomes an absolute necessity in the interest of the public service; I am bound to accept that statement. Having, as I said yesterday, perfect confidence in the very able gentleman who presides over the Navy Department, I shall content myself with allowing the joint resolution to pass without another word.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What action shall be taken with the Senate joint resolution upon the same subject?

Mr. HALE. Let it be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senate joint resolution No. 129 will be postponed indefinitely.

REBECCA A. GREEN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar under Rule VIII is now in order for one hour. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 11578) granting a pension to Rebecca A. Green was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Rebecca A. Green, formerly widow of George W. Barker, late of Company F, Ninth Iowa Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 17) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Michael Meskill;

A bill (H. R. 2375) to correct the military record of Lieut. Cornelius McLean;

A bill (H. R. 3174) granting a pension to Mrs. Frederika B. Jones;

A bill (H. R. 4238) pensioning Maria T. Lee;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 231) to correct an error in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved September 19, 1890.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 435) granting a pension to Malinda Collins;

A bill (S. 573) granting an increase of pension to Mark F. Carter;

A bill (S. 792) granting a pension to Martha J. Dodge;

A bill (S. 957) granting a pension to Mary L. Miller;

A bill (S. 1040) granting a pension to Thomas H. Wilkerson;

A bill (S. 1812) granting an increase of pension to Emily F. Warren;

A bill (S. 1971) for the relief of William Clawson;

A bill (S. 2531) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin T. Baker;

A bill (S. 2574) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Brown;

A bill (S. 2575) granting a pension to Margaret Flaherty;

A bill (S. 3159) granting an increase of pension to Albert P. Davis;

A bill (S. 3234) granting a pension to Harriet B. Hamilton;

A bill (S. 3275) granting a pension to John William Cable;

A bill (S. 3431) granting a pension to Martha N. Hudson;

A bill (S. 3543) granting a pension to Salina B. Merrick;

A bill (S. 3649) granting increase of pension to Katherine W. Howell;

A bill (S. 3760) granting a pension to J. Seaton Kelso;

A bill (S. 3952) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Alabama River at or near Selma, Ala., by the Selma and Cahawba Valley Railroad Company;

A bill (S. 4046) granting a pension to William Norwood; and

A bill (S. 4011) to authorize the Canaveral and South Florida Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Indian River and one across the Banana River, both in the State of Florida, and to establish the same in each case as a post-road.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 3196) granting an increase of pension to Michael McGarvey;

A bill (S. 3532) granting a pension to Georgiana W. Vogdes;

A bill (S. 4370) granting a pension to John M. Dunn;

A bill (S. 4081) to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 4309) granting the right of way to the Sherman and Northwestern Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

ALIEN LABOR CONTRACTS.

Mr. BLAIR. Is the Calendar in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar is in order and is being proceeded with.

Mr. BLAIR. Calendar number 1998, House bill 9682, was under consideration yesterday morning, and I suppose should be resumed at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator can call it up.

Mr. BLAIR. I do.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9632) to amend "An act to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, page 5, line 16, after the word "singers," it is proposed to insert "nor to any organization of musicians or orchestra."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is it that is being agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. By whom was that amendment offered?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let it be reported in the line in which it comes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, at the end of line 16, after the word "singers," it is proposed to insert "nor to any organization of musicians or orchestra."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to move to amend, after the word "professors," by inserting the words "or teachers."

Mr. PLUMB. Let us have one amendment at a time.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to know whether it is in order now.

Mr. PLUMB. Let the amendment I have offered be disposed of, and then we can go back and the Senator can offer the amendment he desires.

Mr. HOAR. I was not sure whether what I want to move is applicable to the present amendment or whether it should be a separate amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. Let it be moved as a separate amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I do object to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the question is on the amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to amend the bill by inserting after the word "professors" the words "or teachers," where it says "professors for colleges and seminaries."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, line 16, after the word "professors," it is proposed to insert "or teachers," so as to read:

Ministers of religion, learned professors or teachers for colleges and seminaries.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I object, Mr. President. We might as well let the bill go as to pick it all to pieces in this way.

Mr. HOAR. The university in the city in which I live and of which I happen to be a trustee engaged Professor Klein, the most famous living mathematician in the world, to come to this country and spend three years as a teacher in the service of that institution; and when the engagement was made it turned out that the contract-labor bill, as interpreted by the Treasury Department of the United States, prevented that eminent scholar from coming to this country for that purpose. Now I am endeavoring to amend the bill so that it will reach that case, and that it will not bring the cause in which it is moved into absolute contempt by covering such a case. I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire is quite justified in treating that amendment as a motion to pick his bill to pieces.

Mr. BLAIR. Where does the Senator desire to insert the words "or teachers?"

Mr. HOAR. After the word "professors," in line 16 of section 5. This gentleman is not coming to take a professorship, but he is coming for three years as an instructor or lecturer, if he comes.

Mr. BLAIR. The amendment may be agreed to so far as I am concerned.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a bill in regard to immigration which I had the honor to report to the Senate on the 18th of February, 1864, has frequently been made the subject of criticism in the Senate, especially a year or two ago and also yesterday, I desire to call attention to the fact that when that bill was reported it was accompanied by a very full report and I think a very complete statement of the whole case with respect to immigration, consisting of some eight printed pages. I did not recall the fact that I had ever made a report upon the subject of immigration; I had forgotten it until an extract was read from it yesterday. It was twenty-six years ago, and therefore I never mentioned the fact that there was a report about it, although I recalled the bill and the reasons why it was passed. That report is on record, and it shows clearly the special reasons why the bill was passed. It is a report which I feel more proud of now than I did then, I am quite sure, because I see that it covers the whole ground; and I ask, therefore, not only in my own justification, but in justification of that act as a wise act under all the circumstances, that a few paragraphs may be read from it which show the reasons and the motives that influenced the passage of the act in the midst of the civil war.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The special wants for labor in this country at the present time are very great. The war has depleted our workshops, and materially lessened our supply of labor in every department of industry and mechanism. In their noble response to the call of their country, our workmen in every branch of the useful arts have left vacancies which must be filled, or the material interest of the country must suffer. The immense amount of native labor occupied by the war calls for a large increase of foreign immigration to make up the deficiency at home. The demand for labor never was greater than at present, and the fields of usefulness were never so varied and promising.

The South, having torn down the fabric of its labor system by its own hands, will, when the war shall have ceased, present a wide field for voluntary white labor, and it must look to immigration for its supply.

The following may be mentioned as the special inducements to immigration:

First. High price of labor and low price of food compared with other countries. Second. Our land policy, giving to every immigrant, after he shall have declared his intentions to become a citizen, a home and a farm substantially as a free gift, charging him less for 100 acres in fee-simple than is paid as the annual rent of a single acre in England.

Third. The political rights conferred upon persons of foreign birth.

Fourth. Our system of free schools, melting in a common crucible all differences of religion, language, and race, and giving to the child of the day laborer and the son of the millionaire equal opportunities to excel in the pursuit and acquirement of knowledge. This is an advantage and a blessing which the poor man enjoys in no other country.

The mutual interest of the United States and the immigrant being established, the next inquiry is, what facilities have been extended by the United States to promote immigration? And when we come to examine this subject we find that very little is done by the Government to promote this most desirable end. The movement so far has been purely voluntary on the part of the immigrants, or induced by letters from their friends in this country advising them to join them here. No bounties are offered or pecuniary aid extended, and it is but recently that immigrants have been protected by passenger laws.

As most of the emigrants are landed at the port of New York, and many of them were landed sick or in a state of utter destitution, the authorities of that city were compelled to provide for them, though the great body were merely transient passengers, seeking a home in the West. This led to the incorporation, in 1847, by the State of New York of the board of commissioners of emigration, an organization which has bestowed upon the poor and comparatively helpless emigrant, the sick and the needy arriving on our shores, benefits and charities which can not be estimated by figures and statistics.

It only remains to inquire what measures, if any, it is expedient for Congress to adopt to encourage legislation. In the opinion of your committee the plan submitted by Mr. Froisarth with his petition involves too great an expenditure. It provides for the establishment of a bureau of foreign immigration and the appointment of a large number of salaried officers and asks for an appropriation of $125,000.

Your committee have considered the bill entitled "A bill to incorporate the North American Land and Emigration Company," but perceive this radical objection to a private corporation: Such a body will necessarily look to their own pecuniary interests, and in the effort to advance these will neglect or sacrifice the interests of the immigrants.

It has been proposed to offer a direct bounty to immigrants, or to pay their passage-money. The objections to this system are numerous, of which these are obvious: First, the bounty must be paid to all immigrants, whether it was the inducement to immigrate or not; and though the bounty was small, it would involve an annual expenditure of millions. Second, those who would be induced to immigrate would be only the idle, very poor, or vicious of foreign populations, while the thrifty would not be influenced by so trifling a consideration. Third, foreign Governments would unquestionably object to their populations being induced by bounties to immigrate, and might justly prevent the great depletion of labor that would result from it.

Your committee are of the opinion that the only aid to immigration the United States can now render would be, first, to disseminate in Europe authentic information of the inducements to immigrate to this country; second, to protect the immigrant from the impositions now so generally practiced upon him by immigrant runners and the like, and, third, to facilitate his transportation from New York to the place of his destination, or to the place where his labor and skill will be most productive. These objects may be accomplished without great expenditure, and without changing the relation heretofore held by the United States to the emigrant.

With this view your committee report the following bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will thus be seen that the report gives the reasons very fully which justified the bill that was passed in 1864; but I do say that since that time the class of immigration coming from some foreign countries has been such as it would make it proper to exclude a portion of, and therefore I am in favor of this bill or any other bill that will prevent the poisoning of the blood of our people in any way whatever by the introduction of either disease, crime, or vice into our midst, and all paupers or persons who are unable to earn an honest livelihood by honest labor. That is the correct principle. I think we did during the war go to the extreme in one direct on to invite people to come among us to share our benefits and advantages, and we gave the reasons why we did so; but now the period of time has arrived when men of all parties, all conditions of life, all creeds, ought to be willing to limit and regulate immigration, so that only those who are able to labor and toil in the ordinary occupations of life and to earn a livelihood should be allowed to come. It is a high privilege to enter into American citizenship. Neither a pauper, in the strict legal sense of the word, nor any man unable to make his living, or an imbecile, or one who has a defect or imperfection of body or mind which lowers him below the standard of American citizenship, should be allowed to immigrate to this country.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask attention to section 3 of the bill, which deals with the subject of transportation and exposes the masters of ships bringing hither immigrants to considerable severity of punishment and on, as I think, very vague protections against injustice and injury.

The first amendment that I will ask to be made to this section is in line 2, to strike out the words "or who" and insert "and;" and the point there is that, under this inhibition and the penalty that follows, it is a complete crime to bring one of these proscribed immigrants. By the use of the word "or" it is complete to bring him here although the master should have ascertained the fact and should not land the proscribed immigrant. The crime ought to be complete only when the master brings and lands such a person. I hope there will be no objection to that amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator propose to strike out the word "bring?"

Mr. EVARTS. No; I propose to strike out the words "or who," in the second line, and insert the word "and," so that coupling together the bringing and the landing shall be the criminality.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 2, after the word "vessel," it is proposed to strike out "or who" and insert "and;" so as to read:

That the master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within the United States on any vessel and shall land or permit to be landed from his vessel, etc.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know whether the Senator is occupying the floor so that the question can not be put, or whether the Chair will put the question while the Senator occupies the floor so that there can be no reply to what he has stated.

Mr. EVARTS. I have no desire to occupy the floor further on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the Treasury Department has been most anxious to have the law amended so as to read as it does in this section. This is not as stringent as it was desired to be, but some modifications were effected in the other House before the bill came here, lessening its stringency. One point where difficulty has been experienced, as I understand, is this: That the law has been evaded by the master bringing the immigrant or the laborer who has been contracted for in the vicinity of the landing wharves and then covertly allowing the immigrant to be taken off the ship and taken ashore in some other direction, and so it was thought that in order to hold the master to his liabilities—for it is only through the master who is in the management of the vessel in which the immigrant is conveyed that the evil can be reached—he should be held responsible for the passengers he carried.

Therefore it was deemed desirable to have the law so framed that the act of landing could be fixed upon the master, and that being evaded he should be held liable for the act of bringing. Of course no master brings a man here unless he lands, and no immigrant is brought unless he is landed. If the master is held liable and does not perform the specific act of landing or is not supervising that act of landing, or if the landing is held to be technically at the wharves and that act is done with due legal formality, and the act of landing is held to be the offensive act and the immigrant is quietly taken off by a boat outside the harbor or away down the harbor and put ashore, then the master is not reached at all by the law as it has hitherto been, and the purpose of the law is evaded. It was the object of this section to hold the master for either the act of bringing or of landing, or both combined, as the case might be; and although it may appear to operate with some hardship at times upon an innocent master, if you can suppose that the master is ignorant of the character of the cargo which he is bringing, nevertheless the public policy seems to require that the evil shall be eradicated, and if the evil is eradicated it can be reached only by stringent regulations which take hold of the master of the ship. This section is designated to accomplish that.

These words "who shall bring or land" the Senator proposes to change by striking out the disjunctive expression "or who" and inserting instead of that the word "and;" so that it shall read:

That the master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within the United States on any vessel and shall land, or permit to be landed, from his vessel from any foreign port or place, etc.

The master has got to be held to liability and shown to be in actual control throughout the accomplishment of the entire series of acts from the taking on board and bringing to the actual landing, wherever that may be held to be, or he is not liable at all. I would object to this amendment but that I do not believe it will do any good.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to have enforced against myself and others the five-minute rule.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would suggest that all of the difficulty stated by the Senator from New Hampshire might be obviated in this way: by striking out the words "or who" and inserting "and," and then, in the third line, after the word "landed," inserting the words "or to leave his vessel to be landed." That language would cover the case which the Senator suggests.

Mr. BLAIR. The words "or permit to be landed" would be exactly the same as the words already in the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it is all covered by the word "permit;" but the Senator says there is trouble there; that they can be taken off the vessel down the harbor, or something of that kind, and that the word "permit" would not cover it. It seems to me it would; but if it will not, if that is the trouble, it can be remedied by inserting something else—another provision.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 3, after the word "landed," it is proposed to insert "or to leave his vessel to be landed;" so as to read:

That the master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within the United States on any vessel, and shall land or permit to be landed, or to leave his vessel to be landed from his vessel, from any foreign port or place, any alien laborer, mechanic, or artisan, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. The question was put upon which amendment—the one suggested by my colleague, or that by myself?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The one read by the Chief Clerk. They were both read together. Both amendments will be considered as agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. Let the amendment which was adopted be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are two amendments. The language of the section will be read as it will stand with the amendments.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within the United States on any vessel, and shall land or permit to be landed or to leave his vessel to be landed from his vessel, from any foreign port or place, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This is in the form of one amendment which has been agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. What is the other?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That includes both the amendments.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to offer an amendment to section 5.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to understand whether the amendment striking out the words "or who" and inserting the word "and" has been agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS. In reference to the same section I wish to insert in the first line the word "willfully" instead of "knowingly," and I wish also to strike out the last two lines of the section, and I shall find it convenient to express my views on these two amendments. I should like to learn whether I am under any restriction as to debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is limited to five minutes by each Senator.

Mr. EVARTS. I did not hear of any such restriction yesterday, but now I am told that one can speak but once and one can speak for five minutes only.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. But once, and for five minutes on any given question. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3, section 1, after the word "shall," it is proposed to strike out "knowingly" and insert "willfully;" so as to read:

That the master of any vessel who shall willfully bring within the United States on any vessel, etc.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I have called attention to the last two lines of this section, which must be considered in reference to the penal arrangements of the section, those last two lines providing that the mere act of bringing such a proscribed immigrant hither and landing him shall be deemed prima facie evidence of the master having known it. We have now something of this kind of legislation, that while a criminal shall be protected under our general system, yet for certain purposes when the ingredient of guilt is intent and knowledge, yet if a certain fact occurs, that shall be considered as evidence to convict.

Now, without enlarging generally upon these propositions, look at the attitude of the master of one of the great ships which ply between Europe and New York. He takes on board at Liverpool or at Bremen 1,200 passengers. What is there for him to ascertain whether any proscribed immigrant is among them? What possible evidence is there? But the fact that he has brought one that afterwards is found over here under proof to have been one of that kind, he is to be punished.

Mr. President, there is no criminality in bringing immigrants hither, and we have not proscribed immigrants. We have undertaken to say that persons who by contracts are to come here and work after they have got here are to be sent back, and those who intermeddle in the transaction knowingly and improperly are to be punished. Now, where is this question of knowledge to be placed? After a master has taken one of these proscribed immigrants on board he must bring him here, although afterward he may find out that he is within proscription, and he is punishable, although he has found it out for the first time after the immigrant is on board and the ship has sailed, and then knowledge is to be imputed to him unless he can prove innocence. Therefore we are entitled to every proper protection under these very stringent penalties, and hence I have thought that it was not undue to the proper protection of navigation and of the transportation of immigrants who are lawfully brought here that this word "knowingly," which may be considered as ambiguous as to any ingredient of willful purpose as I pointed out, shall be substituted by the word "willfully," which will show that when he sails from a port he has with purpose brought one of the proscribed immigrants. The proscription is of laborers, mechanics, artisans. I think those are the only ones that are subjected to the treatment of this section. How can a master know whether a person is a mechanic, an artisan, or a laborer? And if the proscription is limited to those classes, immigrants who wish to evade it will always report themselves as being of some other pursuit.

I do not think, unless we are willing to stop immigration and are to treat transportation according to the necessary rules of transportation of great multitudes of people themselves as a dangerous thing, it is too much to say in the third section that the word "willfully" shall be substituted for "knowingly."

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, in regard to the last point that the Senator makes, that the master should not be bound to know whether those on board are mechanics, laborers, or artisans, it ought to be sufficient I think to say that he should be chargeable, and may as well be made chargeable with such knowledge as the common carrier or the owner of a vessel, whether an individual, a corporation, or a company. Somebody is chargeable with the knowledge of this law. This traffic exists in the laborer, the mechanic, and the artisan, and the law undertakes to prohibit the traffic. Those engaged in it must take notice and find out whether they are violating the law in some way, and the master of the vessel who comes in close contact with the individuals must be able to ascertain, if anybody can.

In regard to the substitution of the word "willfully" for the word "knowingly," I have to say that that word "knowingly" has been in the statutes from the beginning. If the word "willfully" be substituted for it, it must be done with the design of restricting the operation of the statute to a master who has in his mind a willful and affirmative purpose to violate the law. It is not sufficient that he have knowledge of the nature of the traffic in which he is engaged. The vessel of which he is the master under others is engaged continuously, and he can always say that he did not do this willfully, because he was a mere servant of the superior power under whom he was simply a wage-worker himself. But the law does not, at least it has been thought it was sufficient in order to attain success in the restriction of this traffic that the master should be allowed to be engaged in this nefarious traffic, as the law looks upon it, with knowledge of the nature of the business he is engaged in; and if he has knowledge he must get out of the business or otherwise he becomes a part of it. He is not at liberty to know that he is commanding a vessel engaged in violation of the law and be excused simply by saying that his employer hires him to do it and he is merely the servant, and therefore is not willfully engaged in the violation of the law. It is sufficient that he be knowingly engaged. So I think that the word "willfully" should not be substituted for "knowingly," which has been in the statute from the beginning.

With regard to the second of the suggested amendments striking out the words "the fact of such bringing or landing shall be prima facie evidence of such knowledge;" that can be repelled by the master himself testifying to the contrary. If he is charged with this crime, under the general laws of the country the accused can testify, and he knows better than anybody else what his knowledge was, and he can break up this prima facie case by his own testimony if he sees fit to give it under the pains and penalties of perjury; but if he is not willing to testify that he has not such knowledge, certainly he ought to be held to be in possession of it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I think neither the real reason nor the best reason has yet been given why this bill should become a law. It can not be because the people to be brought in are foreigners, for a large majority of the federations which are pressing the passage of the bill are themselves foreigners, and this legislation, if it passes, does not affect more than 3 or 4 per cent. of the immigration which comes to this country.

It can not be, as has been suggested, because these people are poor, for 99 per cent. of all foreign immigration is poor, and this bill offers no protection whatever to those who come by contract labor and yet have money in their pockets.

The real reason why this bill is pressed for passage is because labor all over the country is very properly seeking organization, and the way they can enforce their claims is by drawing all labor into their organizations and thereby compelling employers to meet their just demands; and they have found that employers, driven to the wall, go abroad and employ labor in quantities to come over here. These new laborers in time invariably join their organizations, but until they get acclimated, until they learn what these labor organizations mean, they make some trouble to these organizations, and therefore it is sought to keep them out.

Each political party desires the vote of these labor organizations, and therefore we cheerfully and unanimously pass all these measures which they present. This may be a perfectly good reason, and I by no means mean to intimate that it is not, but to my mind it is not the best reason. The best reason is that a measure of this kind serves even in some small way to limit and to scrutinize the importation of foreign labor. It is true we are commencing in a curious fashion. We are saying to the people who come over here with employment already at their hands, who are to scatter all over the country and find work at once, "You can not come;" and we are saying to the hundreds of thousands of other people who come here with hardly money enough to keep them a week and with no immediate prospect of work, "You are welcome and you can come;" and while into this country there come every year without contract many men of the best possible material for good citizenship, it is nevertheless true that there also come thousands who are aliens in race, in language, in thought, and in habit, who seek the slums of the great cities, and swell our criminal list, always taking the first steps towards citizenship in order that they may receive certain police and political protection.

But this bill is yet a step towards limiting the importation of these laborers; slight, indeed, but yet a step, and therefore should become a law. If the ballot is to have value and is to have intelligence back of it, it seems to me that the time has come when we should say to all foreigners who come here, "If you come loving liberty and because you want to live under a free Republic and obey its laws and help build up its institutions, you are welcome to our shores; you may come here, and you shall have the protection of our flag, and your children born upon the soil may cast their votes, but otherwise you are not wanted." And we should give notice to foreign nations that the vicious, the degraded, the ignorant, the fugitives from justice are not welcome to these shores, and that we offer no haven and no refuge to the anarchist and the socialist. I would, if I could, like to amend this bill by including not only the parson and the fiddler and the singer and the teacher and the skilled laborer in new industries; I should like to see also included every intelligent and right-minded man who came here because he loved our institutions and wanted to grow up under them whether he had a contract before he came or not, and to keep all others out. The test is by no means impossible. Every intelligent and upright judge, before he bestows the final token and badge of citizenship on men of foreign birth, first exacts from them some knowledge of our institutions, some evidences of patriotic motive in asking to share with us the privileges of American citizenship.

But, Mr. President, because this bill is a slight move in the way of discrimination in citizenship, I am in favor of its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS. I now move to strike out the last two lines of section 3. Those lines provide that the criminality created in this section shall be considered proved prima facie by subsequent proof that the proscribed immigrant has in fact been introduced. Now what is that fact? It is that there has been a free contract; and instead of the ordinary principle that the accused shall be regarded as innocent until he is proved guilty, and that until evil intent and evil knowledge have been shown they shall not be presumed, this is turned into a prima facie conviction of every ship-master when on any degree of evidence it may be apparent that there is no ingredient of conviction of him in knowledge or purpose.

The Senator from New Hampshire has spoken of certain rules that regard criminality in smuggling and in violation of the revenue system on the part of masters and subjecting the master and the ship itself to penalties, and, if you please, severe penalties, but those are all on facts which demonstrate themselves. The articles are on board; the articles are sealed; the articles are smuggled or attempted to be smuggled, or there has been a suppression of the venality, and that is an act of the master, and then as a presumption it must be inferred that there was a guilty knowledge. That is of the same nature in which there may be a presumption that one has stolen goods by finding the goods in his pocket, or something of that kind. But this is a vague and open question, whether there has been a free contract, and it was not made manifest because it was intended to be kept secret.

But besides, in all revenue forfeitures of a ship or the master's penalties in reference to violations of restrictions, there is in all such statutes a reserved right on the part of the Treasury Department to remit the penalties upon evidence that there was no actual guilt.

The Senator stated that all our criminals now and all accused parties are able to testify in their own behalf. I do not know how that is, but if he states that, I must take it as his view at least; but without it, what right is there when there may be an inquisition taking proof in Europe and taking proof here to find whether the corpus delicti has occurred, and then when it has occurred this master who takes on board twelve hundred passengers to bring them across is to be held guilty unless he can prove what? Innocence. He may not know one man from another. Why should he? How can he? He has other things to do. Therefore I say at least this protection must be given, that if these very stringent penalties which affect a ship, denying a clearance and everything of that kind, are to be supplemented by a provision that if there is on board a proscribed immigrant on this kind of proscription that I speak of, therefore the master must purge himself.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from New York before he takes his seat, unless he has already alluded to it—for I was out of the Chamber when he commenced to speak upon this amendment—how the captain of a ship, under the provisions of this act, is to pass upon the various exemptions which are contained in this bill? For instance, if this provision should become a law he must know whether the professor is a learned professor—that is the phrase, a "learned professor"—that he is an artist, a musical artist, etc.

Mr. EVARTS. In this section we are now talking about, in this proscription, the penalty is limited to laborers, mechanics, and artisans.

Mr. GRAY. Yes, but that is limited to contract labor, and he commits an offense if he brings over any of the proscribed people; but out of that proscription are excepted certain classes, parsons, ministers of religion, rabbis, musical artists, "learned professors," in the phrase, and if we were disposed to be captious about words we should have to institute a sort of civil-service examination to test the knowledge of the professor, whether he be really learned or only a charlatan; but, not dwelling upon anything so captious as that, there are various exceptions which in reality impose upon a captain of a ship, if this bill becomes a law, an inquisition in all these particulars to know whether the party accused came under the exceptions or not.

Mr. BLAIR. It is sufficient, I think, to say to the Senator from Delaware that the Senator who has made this objection to the section admits that it does not constitute an offense to bring any of these excepted persons whatever. The person brought contrary to the law must be a laborer, a mechanic, or an artisan; and the master does not trouble himself with any of the exceptions that are mentioned later on of learned professors, etc. With reference to the last amendment and the remarks of the Senator from New York let me read the provision:

The fact of such bringing or landing shall be prima facie evidence of such knowledge.

That is, knowledge that the law has been violated in the transportation upon this particular ship under the control of this master, of laborers, mechanics, or artisans under contract. The fact that the thing has been done, that the law has been violated, must first be established precisely the same as the corpus delicti in a charge of murder. The unlawful taking of human life must first be established before the question of the liability of any particular individual for the commission of the crime arises at all. So here it must be proved that the law has been violated by the transportation in the vessel and the landing from it of a laborer, an artisan, or a mechanic under contract. Now, that being done, who did it? It was done by the master of the vessel, done in this vessel under the control of this master. It is then his specific act, his physical act. The question is whether he has knowledge, and if so he is liable to punishment.

It is a universal rule of the criminal law that a man is held to have designed the natural consequences of his own act; and from the bringing of these people in this way, the natural and inevitable consequence is the commission of this crime, and so here this man is held liable only to the natural common-law presumption of having intended to do what he did do. That makes a prima facie case against him. This is a very liberal provision, because under our general laws this man may testify himself as to his knowledge.

Mr. PLATT. Is that so?

Mr. BLAIR. That is as I understand the law of the country in all criminal cases and civil cases also. I so understand it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I can understand that it is quite proper to hold the master of a vessel responsible for all cases of dynamite or other explosives or dangerous materials, because everything brought to him as freight is examined by the agents of the vessel or of the company, and it is all put upon the manifest with great care, so many cases of this, that, and the other. But here 1,200 or 1,500 immigrants come upon a vessel at Bremen or Liverpool or Queenstown, and whatever the boards of health of those places require probably has been furnished them. But how under the sun is the captain to be held responsible for an oral agreement that one or ten of those passengers may have made with some American traveler or some American correspondent, an agreement that when these persons get over here they shall have work with such a firm, or shall be employed as coachmen or anything of that sort? You may say it is right and proper and just to hold the captain responsible for that class of persons, as it is to hold him responsible for dangerous freight; but it is not true.

It is cruel, in my judgment, to impose that responsibility upon the owners or captains of vessels, unless we supplement it by an examination of all proposed immigrants by our consuls or by some authority appointed for that purpose. It would be humane, simply humane—I do not speak of the business aspect of it—but it would be just and humane if this bill contained a section providing that none should be received except coming from certain ports and that at each of those ports there should be a representative of the United States appointed to give an examination to these people and to give them a sort of passport for immigration, because that would free the masters of vessels and we should be responsible for the character of the immigration ourselves rather. I am sure there is not a common carrier who would not be glad to have that done, and I am sure it would be a fair thing. But, as it is now, there is liable to be very great injustice under this section in asking the masters of vessels to perform that which is almost impossible.

Mr. ALLEN. The question arose as to the right of a defendant in a Federal court charged with crime to testify in his own behalf. I will send this statute to the desk and ask that the section be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the trial of all indictments, informations, complaints, and other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crimes, offenses, and misdemeanors, in the United States courts, Territorial courts, and courts-martial, and courts of inquiry, in any State or Territory, including the District of Columbia, the person so charged shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness.

And his failure to make such request shall not create any presumption against him.

Approved March 16, 1878.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. INGALLS. Let the amendment be again reported.

The SECRETARY. In section 3 it is proposed to strike out lines 16 and 17, as follows:

The fact of such bringing or landing shall be prima facie evidence of such knowledge.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. If this section is to be retained at all and this law is to be retained at all, I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York should not prevail. The penalty which is proposed is a penalty on the master of a vessel for willfully, which is now the phrase, bringing into this country persons who have made certain contracts. If that is a reasonable provision, as I suppose the Senate think it is, it can not be enforced except by the method proposed; that is, that the ship-master who brings them in shall be prima facie held to know the character of the persons he brings in. That does not work any injustice on him or anybody, because, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. ALLEN] has shown, he has been made by the statute a competent witness. So the substance of this thing is that the master shall be held responsible at the discretion of the court in proportion to the character of the offense, that he shall be held responsible unless he comes into the United States court and makes oath that he did not know anything about it and satisfies the court on cross-examination, so that it seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from New York ought not to be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. WOLCOTT (when Mr. TELLER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. TELLER] is necessarily absent from the Chamber. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. I desire to give that notice for the day.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PAD-

DOCK], if it will be agreeable to him, that he and I transfer our pairs and vote.

Mr. PADDOCK. That will be agreeable to me.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK. I vote "nay."

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I make the announcement for the day.

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], but I am confident if he were here he would vote in the negative, and I vote in the negative.

Mr. GIBSON. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], but as this is not a party question I will not withdraw my vote.

Mr. PUGH. I am at liberty to vote to make a quorum. I inquire if a quorum has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A quorum has voted.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Barbour,	Dixon,	Harris,	Reagan,
Bate,	Dolph,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Blackburn,	Everts,	Ingalls,	Stockbridge,
Butler,	Bryce,	Manderson,	West,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Voorhees,
Carlisle,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Casey,	Gray,	Pasco,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Hale,	Power,	Wolcott,
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Ransom,

NAYS—10.

Allen,	Hoar,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa,
Blair,	Paddock,	Spooner,
Cockrell,	Pierce,	Stewart,

ABSENT—39.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Sanders,
Berry,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	McPherson,	Squire,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Moody,	Stanford,
Call,	George,	Morrill,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hearst,	Payne,	Tarple,
Cullom,	Higgins,	Perdrew,	Vance,
Daniel,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Washburn,
Davis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour for the consideration of bills on the Calendar has expired.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that this bill go over without prejudice, as I do not care to press it further upon the attention of the Senate now.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to offer an amendment and to have it pending if the bill is to go over.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection to that, but I give notice that I will not call the bill up again this session.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to move after the word "act," in section 5, line 1, to insert "or the act to which this is an addition."

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire also to give notice of an amendment, in line 11, on page 5, section 5, to strike out the words "at present" and insert the words "at the time;" so as to read:

Nor shall this act be so construed as to prevent any person.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection to the amendment being offered.

Mr. CARLISLE. Instead of allowing them to import hereafter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will first be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, line 1, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert "or the act to which this is an addition."

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senator from New Hampshire will accept that amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I am indifferent as to what further amendments are made to the bill. I do not design to ask further attention to the subject upon the part of the Senate. I wish the bill may go over without prejudice, but it is useless to pass a law which is inferior in its efficiency and usefulness upon this subject-matter to that which now exists.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] will now be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, line 11, after the word "at," it is proposed to strike out "present" and insert "the time;" so as to read: Upon any new industry not at the time established in the United States.

Mr. PIERCE. Did I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to give notice that he would not call the bill up again?

Mr. BLAIR. I shall not call the bill up again at the present session.

Mr. HAWLEY. I submit that the Senator ought not to take that course because he is dissatisfied with an amendment or two made here. That is to claim that the responsibility of defeating this bill, which he declares is a good bill and called for, lies upon some who, in the exercise of their best discretion, voted for two slight amendments. There has been no serious or vital amendment, in my judgment, made to this bill.

Mr. PIERCE. I desire to submit an amendment to come in on line 32, on page 6, in section 6, which I will send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 6, in line 32, after the word "vessel," it is proposed to add the following:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the same power to remit fines and penalties incurred under this act, or which have been or may be incurred under the act of February 26, 1885, as he now has in the case of violations of the customs or revenue laws.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, and the unfinished business taken up.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to inquire if the unfinished business is before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether he has substantial reasons to expect an early decision or an early close of the debate and vote upon the bill. If not, I feel, notwithstanding any obligations or former arrangements which may have been made, that I shall be justified in submitting once again to the Senate the question of substituting the labor bill which I moved the other day in place of this private land court bill. I should like to make that inquiry.

Mr. RANSOM. I suppose I may be considered as partially in charge of the bill, as the chairman of the committee. It is impossible for me to determine whether we can have an early vote upon the bill. I must in candor say to the Senator from New Hampshire that my impression is that at this day's session of the Senate we shall not be able to succeed in having a prompt or early vote. I should resist the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to the utmost if I thought it was possible or probable that the Senate could now give to this bill that deliberate consideration which in the judgment of the Senate it should have. The Senate has shown, I must say, very commendable patience with it, and I wish I could express the hope that we could get through with it to-day, but I do not feel at liberty to say that.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, we are within a short distance of the end of the Calendar and I notice on the Calendar a large number of pension bills coming from the House of Representatives, House bills that need our concurrence.

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from Indiana hear me for one second?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes.

Mr. RANSOM. I shall ask the Senator from New Hampshire to change his motion.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am going to make a motion, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me—

Mr. VOORHEES. I rose for the purpose of making a motion, but I will hear the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me, I will say that it has been the intention of the Committee on Pensions later in the day to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the pension bills on the Calendar. The chairman of the committee is not present now, but will be here after a little while.

Mr. VOORHEES. I was sure the business would not be neglected, but I ventured in the absence of my colleague [Mr. TURPIE], who is an active member of the Pension Committee and looks after these things, to risk the suggestion that we spend half or three-quarters of an hour more on the Calendar and dispose of business, not merely pension business, but two or three other cases also. Three-quarters of an hour will dispose of the Calendar, and I move that the regular order be laid aside for the purpose of taking up the Calendar and disposing of what is on it.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am as anxious as the Senator from Indiana is to have these bills passed, but, as I said to him a moment ago, the chairman of the committee is not present for the moment; he will be here after a little while, and the intention of the committee is to take them up later.

Mr. VOORHEES. They are House bills that have been reported from the Committee on Pensions, and I was taking it for granted that they needed no explanation. They have been reported here; they have been examined by the Pension Committee of this body and reported, and are on the Calendar. I think it would be very safe to go on and consider them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. FRYE. I wish the Senator to yield to me for one moment—

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. And allow me to make a motion touching the bill that is before the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. I withdraw my motion for the present.

UNITED STATES LAND COURT.

Mr. FRYE. I do not understand that any conference of Republicans has determined that a bill shall be disposed of, but that it shall be taken up for consideration; and I do not see the slightest prospect of disposing of this land court bill. Therefore I move that the further consideration of the bill (S. 1042) to establish a United States land court and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories be postponed until the next session of Congress.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope the Senator will allow me to amend the motion by saying the second Tuesday in December, so as to bring it up for consideration as early in the next session as possible.

Mr. FRYE. No; I do not accept that amendment. I object to making it a special order. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until the next session of Congress.

Mr. HOAR. Why not recommit it?

Mr. WOLCOTT. There are a number of amendments to be proposed to this bill, some of which will require a good deal of discussion. Some of us who are very much interested in making a good bill out of it, thinking this is not the bill to apply to the lands in question, are anxious to take it up in committee and thereby save the time of the Senate, and I hope the Senator will so amend his motion as to recommit the bill to the committee. In that way we can save the time of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I would just as lief make a motion to recommit the bill to the committee.

Mr. RANSOM. A motion to recommit would lead to a long debate.

Mr. HOAR. Why not consent to that? It is a better course for the Senate to pursue.

Mr. RANSOM. I do not think, in justice to the committee, that I could consent to that motion.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me, I have expected to vote for his bill and I suggest to him that there are some exceedingly delicate and difficult questions, constitutional and other, which have been started in this debate, and started by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is, I believe, upon the committee; another by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], who has stated fully to the Senate a very formidable objection. Now, if the bill goes back to the committee and comes back with their judgment upon these matters which have been proposed, it will have ten times the strength, the opportunity for consideration, at the next session that it will have on a mere motion to postpone, when the committee will have passed on all these things. If it comes up in the Senate at the next session with two members of the Committee on Public Land Claims desiring a recommitment the recommitment will be moved then, and it will be very sure to pass then, in my judgment. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will see that it is the interest of the strength of his bill to let it be recommitment. He can get it back within three days of the assembling of the Senate next winter.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I happen to be a member of the Private Land Claims Committee, although my duties during the greater part of the session were such that I was unable to attend its meetings, and I did not therefore participate in the consideration after which this bill was reported to the Senate. I am ingenuous enough to say that there are several provisions in the bill that would not have been approved by me if I had had the opportunity of their consideration in the committee. I believe that the subject is one of transcendent importance to many of the States in the West, and that the bill deals with a question that has been too long neglected, to the reproach and the dishonor of the nation. I am friendly to the general scheme, and I should regret to have the motion of the Senator from Maine prevail for one or two reasons. In the first place, it would seem to be an unfriendly motion, and, in the next place, it is certainly a superfluous motion, because if the bill is left alone it will go over anyway without any action of the Senate, and remain on the Calendar.

The suggestions which have been made by the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York are of vital consequence. They are entitled to consideration; and I therefore venture to suggest with diffidence to the chairman of the committee, to whom I wish to defer, that in my judgment much would be gained by permitting the bill to be committed, in order that it might have further consideration, in view of what has been developed during the debate, and I am confident that it can be reported at an early day after Congress meets in December.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I am satisfied that it will be impossible at this session to give the bill and the amendments the consideration which the importance of the subject-matter deserves. It is certainly a subject that can not be too early attended to by Congress. I want to say that I have three amendments which I propose to offer to the bill, which are, I think, somewhat important in their character. One of them is to allow private parties to intervene in these cases where their interests are involved. Another is to protect persons who have settled on the public lands without any notice, actual or constructive, of the existence of outstanding titles. Another one is to enlarge a provision in the sixteenth section of the bill, which I will enumerate now.

These amendments which I propose to offer look to a line that does not seem to have been very much discussed in connection with this bill. It would seem from the discussion that the great point aimed at is simply to give an opportunity to the holders of large grants to establish their rights or have them rejected. In this connection, if we limit our action to that extent, we are in danger of doing a great and fatal injury to a very large number of people. The bill, it seems to me, ought to embrace provisions which will protect innocent purchasers and settlers in good faith without actual or constructive notice of the existence of an outstanding title. It is to that end that I propose when the bill comes to be acted upon to offer these amendments.

I will add that if the motion to recommit, with the privilege of reporting at any time at the pleasure of the committee, is made, I should think it would be well that it might be adopted, and I should regret to see the bill placed at a disadvantage on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the committee have authority to sit during the recess if they desire to do so.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I recognize the embarrassment that exists in arriving at a satisfactory conclusion on this bill from the division of the committee, and I suggest to the chairman that he had better consent to have it referred back to the committee with an express understanding that the members of the committee are to attend at all times until this matter is disposed of, and at an early day in the next session, so that we can have the concurrence or dissent of every member of the committee and have the benefit of the views of all the members.

I am satisfied that the committee being divided there will be a long discussion if we attempt to conclude it now, and if we should pass the bill it would be unsatisfactory. It is a kind of discussion that can better take place in committee, where the interchange of views can be free, than in the Senate.

I therefore suggest to the chairman that I believe we shall advance this bill more rapidly by letting it go to the committee, with the request that any Senator having amendments shall prepare them and have them printed and referred to the committee, so that we can have the whole subject under consideration at an early day, and report it back in the first week of the next session.

It has been before the Senate sufficiently now that no one will object at the proper time to giving it consideration. The Senate will be willing to consider it after the committee can agree upon the bill. There will be no difficulty in getting an early consideration. It has not passed the other House and it will be more likely to get through this Congress after such consideration and on the unanimous report of the committee. If the committee can come to an agreement, it will be much more likely to pass the other House during this Congress than if we go on and leave it with a divided committee and involve a long discussion at the commencement of the next session.

I hope the chairman will consent to a recommitment of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I voted the other day against the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to displace this bill, upon the ground that it was upon the schedule of measures practically agreed upon by both sides of the Chamber, and was reached in its order. I agree entirely with the Senator from Maine that the schedule fixed by that conference did not involve that this bill should be for the remainder of the session pressed upon the consideration of the Senate. I shall vote to remove it from the consideration of the Senate, either by voting for the motion submitted by the Senator from Maine to postpone it until the next session, or by voting for a motion to recommit. I hope the Senator from Maine will modify his motion so that it will be a motion to recommit the bill to the committee.

I want to say, Mr. President, and I know every Senator here will agree with me, that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], who was unexpectedly perhappened upon by reason of the illness of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to take a larger part in pressing this measure and in defending it than he had expected, has with great ability and pertinacity defended it and urged it upon the consideration of this body; but no one will dispute the proposition that it is a bill involving interests of great magnitude and of great complexity. Many suggestions have been made of amendments to it and of objection to it which are entitled to great weight, not only because of the source from which they come, but because of the palpable necessity for amendment to cover the objections which have been made.

It is absolutely impossible, I submit to the Senator from North Carolina, on a bill of this character, involving so great rights, involving complicated amendments which are to be proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to protect beyond any question the rights of innocent purchasers and small holders, that we can in the last hours of the session perfect this legislation. It is not fair to the Senate, it is not fair to other measures which are pending before the Senate, that our attention should be given further to this measure. It has never passed the House of Representatives. It is absolutely impossible, if we should pass it, that it can become a law at this session of Congress.

Several members of the committee have expressed their dissent from it. It is not a unanimous report of the committee, and it ought, it seems to me, to go back to the committee, not only in justice to the committee and in order that it may further consider it and the amendments which have been and are to be proposed to it and the objections which have been urged against it, but it is due to the Senate, in order that when this matter comes before us again it shall come carefully matured and in a form obviously better adapted to secure the great purposes intended by it than it is now. The Senator from North Carolina has done everything that it is possible for him to do, and I hope he will consent under the circumstances to a motion to recommit the bill to his committee, especially as it is requested by at least two of its members.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I made the motion to postpone rather than to recommit for the reason that I did not wish to appear in the slightest degree to show any disrespect to the committee nor that any should be implied in my motion, and especially to the chairman of the committee, who has so ably managed this matter before the Senate. So far as I am concerned, I should prefer and believe it better, that the bill should be recommitted; and therefore I move, instead of the motion to postpone, that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Private Land Claims with authority, if they wish, to sit during the recess.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, it would not be right for me after what has been said on the floor of the Senate to resist for a moment longer the recommitment of this bill. Three members of the committee have advised it, and they are no doubt as conscientious and as sincere and as wise in it as I can be in the opposite course. Other Senators who are friendly to the bill have advised me to agree to it. Gentlemen who are as well acquainted with the matter as I am have advised me to it, and I will not resist the motion of the Senator from Maine. I will make this request, though, that all Senators who have prepared amendments will have them printed and let them go before the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. RANSOM. I also ask permission of the Senate, upon the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], that the committee may sit in the vacation, if they desire.

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. All proposed amendments will be printed.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that my amendment be read and printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, amend by adding at the end of section 8:

And on the trial of any cause under the provisions of this act, any private citizen or citizens, or corporation, having a title or claim adverse to that of the plaintiff, may intervene in the case and have his title or claim adjudicated and determined according to its merits.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FAYE] that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair should have stated in submitting the motion that he understands the Senator from Maine accepted the suggestion made by the Senator from North Carolina that the committee should be authorized to sit during the recess.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Maine did add it to his motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the understanding of the Chair. It is so ordered.

ILLINOIS RIVER APPROPRIATION.

Mr. CULLOM and Mr. BLAIR addressed the Chair.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to call up a joint resolution from the other House.

Mr. BLAIR. I desired the floor to move, under the caucus arrangement, the consideration of the bill which is next in order.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement? There was a mistake in the river and harbor bill leaving out nearly all of one item of appropriation. There is a joint resolution which has passed the House of Representatives correcting the error, and I desire that the Senate shall simply concur in it. It is a mistake in the appropriation for the Illinois River. The original appropriation was $200,000, and in enrolling the bill in the House of Representatives it was enrolled as $2,000.

Mr. BLAIR. It will not lead to debate?

Mr. CULLOM. None at all.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not object if it takes no time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will lay before the Senate the joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 231) to correct an error in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved September 19, 1890, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved September 19, 1890, be, and the same is hereby amended so that the clause making appropriation for the improvement of Illinois River, Illinois, shall read: "Improving Illinois River, Illinois: Continuing improvement, $200,000."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to state in relation to this joint resolution that that item was properly engrossed in the Senate; that it passed the Senate in proper form, and appears in the print ordered by the Senate after the passage of the bill; and that it is entirely clear that the mistake was made in the enrolling of the bill in the other House, as it was not an item that was in conference at all.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT ELLIS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. PLUMB. There is on the table House bill 8049 which was amended in the Senate and passed as amended, and after it had been sent to the House of Representatives was recalled by the order of the Senate so that it might be amended. I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was passed and by which it was ordered to a third reading may be reconsidered in order that I may move an amendment which is acceptable to the friends of the bill, and in accordance with the original action of the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas moves to reconsider the votes by which the Senate passed and ordered to a third reading the bill (H. R. 8049) to provide for the disposal of the abandoned Fort Ellis military reservation in Montana under the homestead law, and for other purposes.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 4 of section 3, after the word "section," I move to insert the words "in square form and according to legal subdivisions."

Mr. COCKRELL. What is that bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. PLUMB. I am just moving to amend, in section 3 of the Fort Ellis military reservation bill, that in sections to be made by the State of Montana the tract selected shall be in square form and according to legal subdivisions. That is in accordance with the original bill as reported from the Committee on Public Lands, but it was left out by mistake.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House concerning the same.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. PASCO were appointed.

DISTRICT TRUSTS AND LOAN CORPORATIONS.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. BLAIR. What does the Senator desire?

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to call up a bill which passed the Senate some days ago and has passed the other House with two or three amendments, for the purpose of asking concurrence.

Mr. BLAIR. If it does not lead to debate, I shall yield.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think it will elicit any discussion. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 4081.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4081) to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia; which were read, as follows:

On page 1, line 5, after the word "persons," insert "citizens of the United States."

On page 1, line 7, after the word "on," insert "in the District of Columbia."

On page 6, line 24, after the word "kind," insert:

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments made to the bill by the House of Representatives.

Mr. INGALLS. This bill came from the Committee on the District of Columbia. I have had no opportunity of examining the amendments yet and I prefer that they should not be concurred in until they have been examined. I should like to have an opportunity of looking at them.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, in view of that statement by the chairman of the committee, I shall not press the motion.

Mr. INGALLS. I have not been consulted about the matter and did not know the message had been brought from the other House. Before the amendments are concurred in, I think they should be examined.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator desire that they be referred to the committee?

Mr. INGALLS. No; let them lie on the table for the present.

Mr. SPOONER. I feel constrained to withdraw the request for immediate action upon the amendments, in view of the suggestion of the chairman of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will lie on the table.

Mr. SPOONER. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that all the amendments are restrictive.

NATIONAL MILITARY CEMETERY NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7066) making an appropriation to construct a road and approaches from the city of Alexandria, Va., to the national military cemetery near that city, and asking a conference with the Senate thereon.

Mr. WALTHALL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. MANDESON, and Mr. WALTHALL were appointed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 4) authorizing the establishing of a public park in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 573) for the establishing of a light-station and fog-signal in the vicinity of Braddock's Point, Lake Ontario, New York;

A bill (H. R. 1268) to perfect the military record of James T. Hughes;

A bill (H. R. 1358) to remove the charge of desertion against John Milroy, and authorizing his honorable discharge;

A bill (H. R. 2106) to remove the charge of desertion against Daniel W. Selleck;

A bill (H. R. 4367) for the relief of D. H. Mitchell;

A bill (H. R. 8210) granting an increase of pension to Maria L. Caraher;

A bill (H. R. 8394) to amend chapter 67, volume 23, of the Statutes at Large of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 8713) granting a pension to Rhoda Buck;

A bill (H. R. 10083) for the relief of George Murray;

A bill (H. R. 11773) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary B. Cushing; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 152) providing for the printing of eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late James Laird.

ADJUSTMENT OF ACCOUNTS UNDER EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11120) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with an amendment, in section 2, line 46, after the word "attorney," to strike out the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That this act shall not be operative whenever the court shall find that such laborer, workman, or mechanic performed such labor or service under any contract, express or implied, and has been paid therefor the amount agreed upon.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the bill which the Senate has, at a former session, passed on the same subject. After consultation and agreement with both sides of the Chamber, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the amendment of the committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not ask that that amendment be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is simply to perfect the text of the bill. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 46, after the word "attorney," the committee report to strike out the additional proviso, in the following words:

Provided further, That this act shall not be operative whenever the court shall find that such laborer, workman, or mechanic performed such labor or service under any contract, express or implied, and has been paid therefor the amount agreed upon.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. BLAIR. Perhaps the Senator does not understand that I desire to move to strike out all after the enacting clause, whether the amendment is agreed to or rejected, and to insert the Senate bill we formerly passed.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that; but before the question is taken on striking out the proviso I desire to say a few words on the proviso and its effect. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire what the effect of the proviso is. The Senate Committee on Education and Labor report to strike out the proviso, I understand, in the bill as it came here, and which reads as follows:

Provided further, That this act shall not be operative whenever the court shall find that such laborer, workman, or mechanic performed such labor or service under any contract, express or implied, and has been paid therefor the amount agreed upon.

As I understand, after the passage of the original eight-hour law the mechanics in the navy-yards and in other Government employment were compelled, I think during the Administration of General Grant, to sign a contract to work ten hours a day at a fixed salary at that time, and their claim has been always that they were compelled to work those two additional hours without compensation.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is correct. A very large amount of this extra service has been rendered under contracts formal in their character, but which were entered into by the men under the compulsion of deprivation of employment unless they assented to work ten hours, contrary to the spirit of the law and in manifest evasion and practical nullification of the law.

This proviso, coming to us in the House bill, would deprive those men thus wronged of the just operation of the eight-hour law to compensation for those two extra hours of service rendered. If the bill is to pass that the other House sent us, the committee were of opinion that that which really is a nullification of the bill itself should be stricken out, but thought that it would be much better to substitute for the whole House bill, which is tentative and uncertain in other respects, what represented the matured judgment of the Senate upon both sides of the Chamber in the committee and in the Senate at a former session of Congress.

Mr. GORMAN. We shall get to that in a moment, but I understand the Senator to hold that, if this proviso is stricken out and we should finally adopt the House bill, then the claim of all that class of operatives, mechanics, and workmen who signed these contracts would come before the court and they could recover.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not undertake to say that; I understand the rest of the House bill very well. I do not know just what could or could not be done under it, just how far an unfavorable court could go even under the remainder of the House bill in affirming or denying practically the benefits of the eight-hour law in giving these people a remedy.

Mr. GORMAN. But I understand the chairman of the committee to say that as this bill came from the other House, with the proviso which has just been read, those persons are unquestionably excluded.

Mr. BLAIR. Under that concluding proviso I should so consider, and as a member of the committee favored its being struck out, for the reason that the proviso was a practical nullification of the pretended remedy to a very large proportion of those to whom we design to furnish a remedy.

Mr. GORMAN. That was my understanding of the bill, and I wanted to get the construction placed upon it by the chairman of the committee, that so far as that feature is concerned the bill as it comes here would be worse than useless to these men who have claimed always, and with great justice, that they were compelled to work two extra hours in violation of the law, or otherwise submit to removal from their positions.

I have nothing further to say about the provision, except that I hope it will be stricken out at all events, and then we shall hear the suggested substitute of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to strike out the proviso.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read. The Secretary read the amendment of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that an amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. In other words, it is to declare that a contract shall not be binding. It is to declare that a laborer making a contract to work six hours a day, or eight hours, or ten hours, or any other given number of hours, or from sunrise until sundown, at a certain price, and who has received the price, can still come in and sue for an additional compensation for the same rate of wages for all the time and above eight hours.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator ask me a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. I say that is your proposition, as I understand it. You propose to strike out this clause, and that would leave it in that condition.

Mr. BLAIR. The Government passed the eight-hour law for the benefit of those who were employed principally in its workshops of the Army and in the Navy and the Departments. These men were dependent upon that employment for their own livelihood and the support of their wives and children. The men they came in contact with as the executive officers of the Government demanded of them the ten hours' labor as a condition of being employed. They had to elect whether they would enter into this employment and work ten hours or be deprived of the means of livelihood.

Under that compulsion they were thus employed, most of them protesting at the time they performed this work, claiming then, claiming ever since, that they were under obligation under the law to work only eight hours for the same amount of compensation which they actually received for their ten hours a day's work, and they have been constant in their application to the Government for compensation for the extra two hours ever since.

An unfavorable court or perhaps a favorable court would be obliged to hold that there was no legal compulsion on the part of these men to enter into this arrangement to perform the ten hours' work. They could have gone abroad; they could have gone without the work; they could have taken their chances in the community at large, and possibly could have survived and possibly could not have survived. There was no legal compulsion that they should assent to the performance of ten hours' labor for the amount that the executive officer was willing to give, and it might be held that those were contracts, express contracts or implied contracts, yet attended by this hardship which was in addition to that a nullification and an evasion of the law on the part of the executive authorities.

It would not be wise, it seems to me, and certainly not just, to send these men to the Court of Claims subject to the defeat of their entire claim by its being found by the court that there was after all a contract in these cases, and it would be hardly worth while to send them at all, for a nominal contract would undoubtedly cover a very large proportion of the claims.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I voted for the Senate bill when it was at a former session before the Senate. One merit in the bill, to my mind, was that by it Congress adjudicated the question of liability and left it to no court to determine upon technical grounds, such as the existence of a written contract, that there was no liability upon the part of the Government. Congress saw fit, I have always thought in the exercise of a wise policy, to fix, so far as it could, eight hours as a lawful day's work. It was done upon high grounds of public policy. It was thought that eight hours was long enough for a man to labor, as a rule, and that it was in the interest of society, in the interest of labor, and really in the interest of the Government, the employer, that after eight hours' labor the laborer should be free to think, free to study, free to invent, free to "become acquainted" with his family and to take the interest of a father in his children, and free to rest.

Under that law it has always seemed to me to have been utterly indefensible for any agent or officer of the Government to require of a laboring man who tendered his services or who sought for employment that as a condition of receiving it he should enter into a contract to work ten hours. No man who entered into such a contract can be said to have done it voluntarily, can be said to have acted without duress. Men with families to support, with sick wives perhaps to take care of, with children to educate, were not free to accept the proposition or to reject it. Clothing and shelter for their families, bread for the wife and little ones, medical attendance for those who required it, every impulse of affection, every obligation of duty of the husband and the father required that they should labor and put them under constraint, and the alternative that they must labor ten hours a day for the Government or be turned into the streets to seek employment or to beg was not an honest or fair alternative to tender to any laboring man after Congress had passed the eight-hour law.

It is my conviction, Mr. President, that in every case where one of these men was compelled by the officers of the Government as a condition of having employment and of being able to support his family to work one hour or one half-hour over the eight-hour day which Congress had declared for, and which President Grant had sought to enforce, he ought to be paid for that overtime. Not to do it seems to me to put the Government of the United States in an attitude of allowing its executive officers to violate in essence and in spirit the law which Congress had enacted upon the ground of public policy, and which public sentiment has approved, and attempting to filch from these men hours of unrequited toil.

I am altogether willing to take the responsibility of adjudicating the question of liability, sending these men to the Court of Claims for that tribunal only to ascertain and declare how many hours in each case these men worked beyond the lawful day. I shall vote with great pleasure for the substitute which I understand the Senator from New Hampshire will offer to this bill, which is the Senate bill as it passed this body at a previous session. In so doing I vote only for the payment of debts honestly due and too long left unpaid.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I only desire to say a word. The act of Congress under which these claims are made is as follows:

Eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics who may be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States.

That was passed in 1868 and re-enacted, I believe, subsequent to that. Yet for some reason or other we have continually had these claims coming to Congress for extra work or for wages claimed by persons working for the Government over and above eight hours per day. It seems to me that there ought to be something done that would stop this continual appeal to Congress for services which seem to have been demanded of the employes of the Government contrary to law.

As has been stated by the Senator from Wisconsin, in 1869 when President Grant was President and this law had been enacted, he issued a proclamation that from and after that date no reduction should be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of such reduction in the hours of labor.

Mr. GORMAN. What is the date of that?

Mr. CULLOM. The proclamation was issued May 19, 1869, referring to the act of Congress, and an appropriation of money was made to pay for this extra work, and the President was making the effort apparently to secure the enforcement of the law by Government officers. But he did not seem to succeed in doing it fully, so that on May 11, 1872, President Grant issued another proclamation wherein attention was called to the above act of Congress and the Executive proclamation, and he stated that by reason of representations made to him—this is substantially the language of the proclamation—the act of Congress and the proclamation aforesaid had not been strictly observed by all the officers having charge of said laborers, workmen, and mechanics, and he proceeded to declare:

Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby again call attention to the act of Congress aforesaid, and direct all officers of the Executive Departments of the Government having charge of the employment of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, to make no reduction in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

Notwithstanding all the effort that appears to have been made by President Grant especially, it seems, from claims that come before Congress from time to time, that the act was practically disregarded, or at least in a large degree, and I know myself since I have had the honor of a seat in the Senate employes of the Government have been worked two or three hours a day in some cases over and above the eight hours a day that the law fixed as a day's work.

All that I have to say is that it does seem to me that this law which has been so long upon the statute-book ought to be enforced, and if it is not enforced, certainly the men who are called upon to work more hours a day than a legal day's work ought to have some way of securing the pay for their extra labor. My own judgment is that the law ought to be lived up to by every Government officer to the very letter.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I was in Congress when the bill establishing the eight-hour law was enacted. I recorded my vote in favor of it, and have watched its operations with great interest ever since. I do not think that anything is so much a reproach to this Government as the attempts and devices of its executive officers to avoid its own engagements in this regard. Congress promised all the employes of the Government that it would give them for their services an expressed sum, and I can not understand why the Government or its officials have felt justified in resorting to the devices they have to avoid that obligation incurred to those whom they employed.

But nevertheless in different Departments of the Government, in different places where the Government had need to employ men, for three or four years it was utterly disregarded until, as has been said by the Senator from Illinois, the President interfered with a proclamation commanding that the law of the land in this respect should be obeyed. Still the ingenuity of men who did not like this law was sufficient to find in some parts of the country means to evade it, when Congress took up the question and in an appropriation bill in 1872 directed that every employe of the Government should be paid for the hours he had worked at the rate of eight hours for each day's work, and appropriated a sufficient sum for that purpose. I should like to read the enactment which up to that date squared accounts between the Government and these employes. It is the second section of the deficiency appropriation act of 1872:

That the proper accounting officers be, and hereby are, authorized and required, in the settlement of all accounts for the services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, between the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work for all such laborers, workmen, and mechanics, and the 19th day of May, 1869, the date of the proclamation of the President concerning such pay, to settle and pay for the same, without reduction on account of reduction of hours of labor by said act, when it shall be made to appear that such was the sole cause of the reduction of wages, and a sufficient sum for said purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Since then these devices have still continued, and up to to-day there are outstanding claims upon the Government of honest laborers and mechanics who have worked more than eight hours a day for the Government, that it should keep its promise and obligation. I am not quite satisfied with the form of its remedy. I shall vote for it because it is all that can be got, but what does it amount to? After all these years of accumulated unpaid wages of these laborers and mechanics, we come forward and all that we give them is the privilege of suing the Government and getting what they can. I introduced a bill in the last Congress and again in this, which I will read, which first set forth that the Government was liable to pay all these men at the rate of eight hours a day, and then directed the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay them. The bill is in the following words:

That whoever, as a laborer, workman, or mechanic, has been employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States since the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work, whether engaged at a price per day or upon piece-work or task-work, without any reduction of pay on account of the reduction of the hours of labor, any agreement between the United States and any such laborer, workman, or mechanic touching such compensation to the contrary notwithstanding. And the proper accounting officers are hereby directed to readjust the accounts of all such laborers, workmen, and mechanics, and pay the same in conformity with the provisions of this act; and a sufficient sum of money for that purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Under that bill, if it should have become a law, every person on the pay-rolls of the Government who has been paid at all has but to appear and ask that his account with the Government shall be adjusted by allowing him for each of the eight hours he has worked the full price of the day's labor, and then the money is paid him. That, as I have said, squared accounts in 1872, and that to-day, in my opinion, would square the accounts of these laborers and mechanics, and they would go away with the money in their hands.

But this bill authorizes them to commence a suit against the Government of the United States in the Court of Claims and get what they can in a judgment, and then after the judgment get an appropriation to pay the judgment. I say I shall vote for this measure because I find that I can not get the other, but I want to express my regret that the committee has not found itself able to direct the officers of the Government with an accompanying appropriation to pay according to the hours these men have worked.

I know that the great body of these men are for the bill that is reported, and are not in favor of the bill which I have read, but there are a great many of them who understand the difference. All that body of men who have worked in the armory at Springfield since 1872 under this order of things understand it, and they have besought me to try to get something real; something more than putting them to the task of prosecuting their claims before the Court of Claims, and after a judgment some year or two years hence, to have to come here again and get an appropriation to pay it.

Sir, I have been besought to withdraw this objection, but the truth of it is that the letters which come to me asking me to go for the measure reported by the Senator from New Hampshire come from operatives and mechanics and laborers in the eastern part of Massachusetts and in different States, and they come to me upon the letter-heads of claim agents written here in Washington. Letters are written to me from the Boston navy-yard, but upon the letter-heads of claim agents here in Washington, begging of me not to press this direct order upon the accounting officers to pay out of the Treasury at the rate of a full day's work for eight hours, and to go for this proposition which proposes to give them the great privilege of prosecuting a claim in the Court of Claims and get what they can and then afterwards to get an appropriation to pay it. I express, I repeat the regret—

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator have any suspicion where those letters originate?

Mr. DAWES. No; the names of the claim agents are at the heads of the letters, but I have not the letters here and I have no desire to bring the claim agents into this debate. I only state that these laborers and mechanics, with as just a claim upon the Government as the bonds of the United States, are being induced to take up with a proposition to sue the United States in the Court of Claims rather than to take the enactment of the Congress of the United States commanding the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay them out of an appropriation what is their due under the law of the land. They insist upon it; and there is no possibility of getting any direct legislation commanding that justice be done. Twice or three times have I introduced this bill and had it referred to the committee, and I never heard of it afterwards, and the only reason I have ever heard given is that these people prefer the other method, and I am informed more through letters on letter-heads of claim agents here than in any other way.

I shall record my vote for the substitute to be proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire for the reasons I have stated. I know the difficulties that surround the committee; I know how difficult it is to legislate upon this subject; but with some experience in connection with it, I regret exceedingly the form in which the measure is presented. I never could understand why the accounting officers of the Government, whether of the Treasury or of the other Departments, felt at liberty in the face of the law to adjust the accounts of these laborers and mechanics upon any other basis than that eight of the hours that they worked constituted a day's labor, and I am surprised also that these honest, hard-working men have been so far drawn into the plan, which it appears to me there can be no mistake has originated here round about this city, to take up with and be content with the mere pittance of a permission to sue the Government in the Court of Claims.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I regret the necessity of legislating to compel officers of the Government to carry into execution plain, positive law. I do not understand why there can be an excuse for the Government officers refusing to allow men to work eight hours a day and pay them for it as required by the statute. I voted for the original law. I believed then and believe now that eight hours is long enough for a laboring man to work. I believe that that is best for society. The time has passed when it is to the interest of society for laboring men to be mere beasts of burden.

The labor of the country can be better performed by some indulgence, and a much higher grade of laborers can be secured by efficient and ambitious men in eight hours than in a longer period of labor. Certainly the laborer can accomplish much more in his lifetime than he would if he exhausts himself day by day so that he has no time for study; no time to devise means whereby he can facilitate labor, but is a mere drudge. He can not under those circumstances accomplish anything like he can with proper hours and more time for improvement and more time for studying how labor can be economized.

For the advance in labor-saving machines in this country we are indebted to the laborers. The laborers of this country are the inventors, and their inventions have multiplied vastly, beyond all comprehension, the power the people have over the resources of nature to supply the wants of man. What we want is a higher grade of labor. In almost any department intelligence of labor is an advantage.

You say that if you will give them the time they will spend it foolishly, that they will spend it in idleness or in drink, and all that kind of thing, and that you must keep them at work to keep them out of mischief. There may be some who will do it, but the great mass of the intelligent laborers of this country are investigating the question. When you see the steam-engine and all the machinery that is moving this world, and reflect that that is the result of free labor and free men and intelligent men, you must see the good effect of relieving them from the burden of working more than eight hours a day. Make that rule and you will continue to improve the condition of the laboring men. I believe the time will come when they will not have to work eight hours a day. I believe the development of machinery will be such that that will not be required. There are certainly laborers enough in this country to perform all the work that can be provided for them under existing circumstances working only eight hours a day. There are plenty of them.

When the law was passed I voted for it with the idea that it would be an example, that it would be an illustration, and that the Government of the United States could set the example without any detriment to the country. It has worked well so far as it has gone. It has called the attention of the people to the fact that a limitation of the time was not injurious. I have seen men work in the mines; I have been the employer of men, and conversant with their work in the mines, and eight hours' labor a day is very common where they are performing the most arduous work underground working in the mines. We find that in eight hours a day they accomplish as much ordinarily—that a man will do as much, taking the year round, in eight hours a day as he would in ten, and that the men thus engaged are brighter men and more efficient. I should like to see this experiment tried throughout the whole country. There is nothing revolutionary in it. There is nothing in it against reason. The Government having undertaken to set the example, to make the experiment, so to speak, the officers should carry out that determination in good faith. It seems to me incomprehensible that there should have been any hesitation in carrying it out.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that we ought to turn these accounts over to the accounting officers and settle them speedily and without delay. It is one of those obligations that the Government should execute at once, without question. The time will soon come, however those who have not investigated the subject may think now, the time is not far distant when the whole country will concede that eight hours' labor is sufficient.

Twelve and fourteen hours a day used to be a day's work when I was a young man. Fourteen hours was a day's work a good deal of the time. That made a mere drudge of a man. It deprived him of all the privileges of education. It made it impossible for him to invent new ways of doing things; he had no time for study or reflection.

Eight hours' work is sufficient for any man, although there are many engaged in intellectual pursuits or professional pursuits who have to work more hours than that. Many of us here work twice that amount, from sixteen to eighteen hours frequently, but I believe if we could economize time and work regularly eight hours a day it would be better for intellectual pursuits and that eight hours would be sufficiently exhaustive, and if we would rest then and commence work fresh the next day I believe our public men would live longer, be brighter men, and accomplish more; and I should like to see that done.

I believe the whole country is coming to the conviction that eight hours is sufficient for a day's labor. It certainly is sufficient to accomplish all the labor that is necessary to be performed in the United States. There are thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands of people without employment because the enterprises of the country do not furnish sufficient employment. Why should they not, if there is an abundance of labor at eight hours a day and the laboring men desire it, be limited to that number of hours?

But when the Government of the United States has undertaken to set this example, which I believe is a wise example, I think we ought in the most direct manner to right this wrong and show the accounting officers that we did not pass the law in jest, to be violated because the men with whom they deal have no power to right their wrongs except through Congress. I think we ought to teach them a lesson and set them to work immediately to pay these just obligations and give the law complete effect where the United States has direct jurisdiction to do it.

I shall vote for this bill, but it is not all that I desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for a division.

There were, on a division—ayes 13, noes 2; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no quorum, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Reagan,
Allison,	Davis,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Barbour,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Sherman,
Bate,	Dixon,	Ingalls,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Blair,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Butler,	Frye,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Wilson of Iowa,
Carlisle,	Gray,	Pasco,	Wilson of Md.
Casey,	Hale,	Platt,	Wolcott,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Pugh,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the question may now be taken on the amendment reported by the committee, which is to strike out the proviso.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays upon it.
Mr. BLAIR. The yeas and nays have been called for, and I hope the question will be taken.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PLATT. Let the amendment be reported.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the amendment may be reported once more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 46, after the word "attorney," it is proposed to strike out the following proviso:

Provided further, That this act shall not be operative whenever the court shall find that such laborer, workman, or mechanic performed such labor or service under any contract express or implied, and has been paid therefor for the amount agreed upon.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], but under an arrangement with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] that pair has been transferred, so that the Senator from Tennessee and myself are at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I have already voted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. VEST] has been called home, and probably will not be able to be present during the remainder of this session. He is paired generally with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I do not know how my colleague would vote on this question if he were present.

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired ordinarily with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], but I know his sentiments upon this labor bill and feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GIBSON (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. I withdraw my vote on this question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 13; as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum has voted. The roll of the Senate will be called.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Dixon,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Bate,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Reagan,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Carlisle,	Gibson,	Moody,	Spooner,

Coke,	Hale,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Hampson,	Pierce,	Wilson of Iowa,
Davis,	Harris,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.
Dawes,	Hawley,	Power,	Wolcott.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present, and the roll will be again called on the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and called the name of Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask if Senate bill 2648, granting the right of way to the Junction City—

Mr. BLAIR. Is anything in order but the roll-call now?

Mr. COCKRELL. Has anybody answered?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No response has been made.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does that stop anything else on earth?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think so.

Mr. BLAIR. The roll-call is in order, I suppose.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that the only thing on earth that is in order?

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Missouri, I venture to say, is out of order, and I appeal to the Chair.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nobody has answered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No Senator has responded to his name.

Mr. COCKRELL. Am I recognized as in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri is in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Notwithstanding the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. President, this is a very important question as to striking out this clause, and the best way I can discuss is—

Mr. BLAIR. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. BLAIR. Is there a quorum present? I understood the roll-call had revealed the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

Mr. BLAIR. Is not then the roll-call on the amendment in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that a Senator has the right to occupy the attention of the Senate until a response has been made on the roll-call.

Mr. BLAIR. I thought I heard a response.

Mr. COCKRELL. Well, Mr. President, I am very sorry that the Senator from New Hampshire did not hear a response. I admire his impatience on certain occasions; and the patience which he exhibits on certain other occasions is one of the most admirable characteristics I have ever seen in him.

In the early part of this session we beheld him for three mortal days having the Job-like patience to discuss one measure continuously, and we did not hear any complaint then about whether it was in order for him to exercise his patience in that discussion or not, but now a Senator can scarcely address the Chair when a measure that the Senator from New Hampshire has in charge is pending. I respectfully and with all kindness and fraternal love say to my good brother BLAIR, be patient.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator—

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I meant to say "the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire." I ought not to have been unparliamentary.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me—

Mr. COCKRELL. With pleasure.

Mr. BLAIR. My suggestion that the Senator was out of order was for the reason that he addressed me personally before. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, in connection with my few remarks upon the pending business, I should like to ask the Chair a question, and that is whether the bill (S. 2648) granting right of way to the Junction City and Fort Riley Street Railway Company into and upon the Fort Riley military reservation in the State of Kansas, and for other purposes, has been received back from the House of Representatives with a request for a conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will respond to the Senator as soon as he can ascertain the fact.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that, pending this measure, the bill to which I refer may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that a conference has been agreed to by both Houses on the bill referred to by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I desired to know, if a conference had been agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. COCKRELL. Have the conferees been appointed upon the part of the House?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They have been.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe that now leaves the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Education and Labor striking out the proviso at the end of section 2, on which the yeas and nays will now be taken.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], but I am allowed to vote to make a quorum, and as there was no quorum on the last call I will vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GIBSON (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—27.
Allen,	Frye,	Manderson,	Power,
Allison,	Gorman,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Gray,	Moody,	Sherman,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No quorum having voted, the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen, Allison, Barbour, Bate, Blackburn, Blair, Carlisle, Casey, Colquitt, Cullom,	Dixon, Dolph, Frye, Gibson, Gray, Hale, Hampton, Harris, Hearst, Hoar,	Ingalls, Manderson, Mitchell, Moody, Morgan, Paddock, Pasco, Pierce, Platt, Power,	Pugh, Reagan, Sponer, Stewart, Stockbridge, Walthall, Wilson of Iowa, Wolcott.
--	---	---	---

Mr. BLAIR. May I inquire if the roll-call discloses the presence of a quorum?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Thirty-eight Senators have responded to their names—less than a quorum.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. As it is obvious that there is no voting quorum here and the last roll-call discloses that there is no quorum here at all, voting or non-voting, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. Until 12 o'clock on Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate do now adjourn until 12 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. INGALLS. That motion can not be made when there is not a quorum present. That would change the regular hour of meeting, and less than a quorum can not do that.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BLAIR. Allow me to say that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] desired to have an executive session if the Senate appeared to be in the condition of having a quorum.

Mr. HARRIS. In the absence of a quorum we can not have an executive session or do any other business. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 17, noes 25.

Mr. BLAIR. I renew my motion that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the presence of absent Senators.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it in order to have a roll-call?

Mr. HOAR. It is on that motion, of course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. INGALLS and Mr. STEWART. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 32, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—32.
Allen, Allison, Blackburn, Blair, Casey, Cockrell, Coke, Cullom,	Dawes, Dixon, Dolph, Everts, Frye, Gibson, Hale, Harris, Hawley,	Hearst, Hoar, Ingalls, Manderson, Mitchell, Moody, Pierce, Platt,	Power, Pugh, Sawyer, Sherman, Sponer, Stewart, Stockbridge, Wilson of Iowa.
NAYS—12.
Barbour, Bate, Carlisle,	Colquitt, Gorman,	Hampton, Pasco,	Reagan, Walthall, Wolcott.
ABSENT—40.
Aldrich, Berry, Blodgett, Brown, Butler, Call, Cameron, Chandler, Daniel, Davis,	Edmunds, Eustis, Farwell, Faulkner, George, Gray, Higgins, Hiscock, Jones of Arkansas,	Kenna, McMillan, McPherson, Morrill, Paddock, Payne, Pettigrew, Plumb, Quay, Ransom,	Sanders, Equire, Stanford, Teller, Turpie, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Washburn, Wilson of Md.

So the motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the total number of votes?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-four on the last roll-call.

Mr. INGALLS. Then a quorum is here.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, as the last vote shows that there is a quorum present.

Mr. SHERMAN. Pending that question, there being a quorum present, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection to that motion, but I wish to say—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first put the question on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I will submit my motion for an executive session.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, before that motion is submitted, I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that we shall probably have but one or two more legislative days, and they will be undoubtedly occupied in the consideration of graver matters, and it is important that, before we adjourn, the House pension bills on the Calendar should be disposed of, in order that they may be enrolled and stand some chance of becoming laws at this session. Therefore I ask unanimous consent, if the Senator from Ohio will permit me, waiving his motion for that purpose, that the House private pension bills on the Calendar be now taken up for consideration, subject to objection, and that, at the conclusion of their consideration, the Senate proceed, under the motion of the Senator from Ohio, to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly shall not stand in the way of such a proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAIR. Before the question is taken I wish to ask consent that the report on the pending bill, which is the unfinished business, may be printed in the RECORD, it not having been read, so that Senators may see what the bill is which they are acting upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be ordered to be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Education and Labor, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 175):

The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 175) entitled "A bill providing for the adjustment of the accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law," have examined the same and report it favorably, with an amendment, and, as amended, recommend its passage.

This bill only gives to the parties the right to present their cases to the Court of Claims, and your committee urgently press the passage of the bill as one step in the direction of justice to a large class of laboring men, from whom the Government has withheld the wages due for extorted toil for many years. The report made by the chairman in the Fiftieth Congress is added hereto, as it gives a general statement of the entire case.

[Senate Report No. 593, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1853) providing for the adjustment of the accounts of laborers and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law, having considered the same, report the bill back favorably.

The eight-hour law was enacted on the 25th day of June, 1893, and is in the following words:

"Eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics who may be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States." (Section 3738, Revised Statutes.)

Great difficulty has been found in securing compliance with this statute on the part of some of the executive officers of the Government, and in the War and Navy Departments especially claims have from time to time arisen on the part of wage-workers employed by the Government for labor rendered in excess of the daily eight hours which by law constituted a full day's work.

Some of these claims have been paid, while others remain outstanding, and from time to time they are pressed for payment.

The object of this bill is to refer the whole matter to the Court of Claims for adjudication upon the basis that eight hours constitute a day's work, and that each eight hours' labor performed shall entitle the worker to receive pay for a full day's work.

It seems to a majority of your committee that the real question involved is whether the supremacy of the law shall be maintained and its manifest intent carried out by the subordinate officers charged with its execution. But it is proper to say that in many instances the excess of labor was performed with knowledge of the law, and the question has been raised whether the acceptance of the opportunity to labor for a longer period than eight hours and the reception of the ordinary pay for a day's work does not constitute a payment in full for all the labor performed, including the excess of the eight hours required by law.

The claimants allege that the excess of labor was performed under compulsion, and that they at the time protested, and have from time to time demanded of the Departments concerned and of the Congress compensation for the excess of work exacted from them under threat of deprivation of any employment whatever, which to them and their families was, in effect, deprivation of the necessities of life, since only with work could they avoid starvation.

This subject has been before Congress a long time with favorable action by both Houses, and your committee insert, as a part of this, the report of the committee in favor of these claims made in the last Congress, which recites most of the legislation and the substantial facts pertinent to the subject.

[Senate Report No. 450, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom were referred sundry petitions and memorials of workmen, laborers, and mechanics of Philadelphia,

New York, and Brooklyn, also the bill (S. 1884) relating to the eight-hour law, beg leave respectfully to report:

On the 25th day of June, 1868, Congress passed an act, commonly known as the eight-hour law, fixing the number of hours which should thereafter constitute a day's work for certain classes of Government employes.

The act is in the following words:

"Eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics now employed or who may hereafter be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States." (See 15 Stat. at Large, page 77, now Revised Statutes, section 3738.)

Your committee have made careful investigation into the conduct of the officers of the Government who have had charge of the employment of the men who are entitled to the benefits intended to be conferred by the passage of this act, from its passage to the present time, and find that from the beginning the law has been by many of the officers of the Government disregarded, evaded, and violated. As early as the beginning of the year 1869 complaint was made to the President of the United States that the law was not enforced or regarded by the officers of the Government having charge of the employment of these men. These complaints called forth from the President, on the 19th day of May, 1869, the following proclamation:

"Whereas the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, constituted on and after that date eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States and repealed all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith:

"Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby direct that from and after this date no reduction shall be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such workmen, laborers, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

"In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Washington this 19th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1869 and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-third.

U. S. GRANT,

"By the President:

"HAMILTON FISH,
"Secretary of State."

This, however, had little or no effect, and the matter went on with little or no attention being paid to the law, the men either being required to work ten hours to earn their daily wages, or suffer a reduction of wages to correspond with the reduction of the hours of labor, until May, 1872, when the President issued a second proclamation, calling attention to the first, forbidding any reduction of wages in consequence of the reduction of the hours of labor. The proclamation is in the following words:

"Whereas the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, constituted on and after that date eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States; and whereas, on the 19th of May, 1872, by Executive proclamation, it was directed that from and after that date no reduction should be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor; and whereas it is now represented to me that the act of Congress and the proclamation aforesaid have not been strictly observed by all officers of the Government having charge of such workmen, laborers, and mechanics:

"Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby again call attention to the act of Congress aforesaid, and direct all officers of the Executive Departments of the Government having charge of the employment of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, to make no reduction in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor." (United States Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 955.)

Meantime petitions and memorials had been sent to Congress praying for relief and for the enforcement of the law; and on the 18th day of May, 1872, Congress passed an act requiring the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle with and pay to their employes all sums withheld from them by reason of the reduction of the wages in consequence of the reduction of the hours of labor for the time intervening between the passage of the act constituting eight hours a day's work and the 19th of May, 1869, the date of the President's first proclamation, which act is in the following language:

"SEC. 2. That the proper accounting officers be, and are hereby, authorized and required, in the settlement of all accounts for the services of workmen, laborers, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, between the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work for all such laborers, workmen, and mechanics, and the 19th day of May, 1869, the date of the proclamation of the President concerning such pay, to settle and pay for the same without reduction on account of the reduction of the hours of labor by said act, when it shall be made to appear that such was the sole cause of the reduction of wages, and a sufficient sum for said purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Under this act many of the parties were paid, while a considerable number of the claims for the above-named period, which were filed with the accounting officers, were not paid, but still remain on file in the Department. Your committee find that notwithstanding the Executive had, in the two instances above cited, by his proclamation declared what the spirit and intent of the law was, and the further fact that Congress had by the act above referred to given a legislative construction to the act, still many of the officers of the Government whose duty it was to execute the law adopted various measures to avoid it, and to get from the men in the employ of the Government, under their control, ten hours' work for each calendar day. One of these means was to require these men to enter into special contracts to work ten hours per day; another was to employ them by the hour, and still another was, in cases where it was practicable, to have the work done by the piece.

Another was what is known as the 15 per cent. contracts, under which nearly all the granite for the public buildings throughout the United States was cut. Under these contracts the men were employed by the day, under the control and superintendence of the Government, and paid on Government pay-rolls, and the contractors were paid 15 per cent. on the cost of cutting the stone. The men employed on this work claimed that it was Government work, and that they were employed on behalf of the Government, and entitled to the benefit of the eight-hour law. To settle the question a suit was brought in the Court of Claims, which went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and was decided against the claimant on the ground that there was no privity between the claimant and the Government; that the contractor was alone responsible to the claimant for his wages. This was the case of Driscoll vs. The United States, reported in 6 Otto, page 434.

The only other case decided by the Supreme Court under this law is that of Martinez vs. The United States, reported in 4 Otto, page 400. In this case the claimant was at work under a special contract to work twelve hours per day from the 1st of October to the 1st of June for $2.50 per day, and ten hours per day from the 1st of June to the 1st of October at $2.25 per day. The court held that the act of June 25, 1868, constituting a day's work, was a direction by Congress to the officers and agents of the Government, prescribing the length of time which should constitute a day where no special agreement was made on the subject, but as claimant had made a special agreement he must be bound by it. These embrace all the decisions of the Supreme Court under this law, and it will readily be seen that neither of them affect the rights of the claimants included in this bill.

None of these measures for evading the law, however, were uniformly adopted, nor was the law uniformly ignored. In some departments the law was enforced, and notably so under the Administration of President Grant, in many if not all of the navy-yards and arsenals, and also on the new State, War, and Navy Department building here in Washington the men were only required to work eight hours to earn their daily wages. But under the Administration of President Hayes the law was practically ignored, and the men were required to work ten hours to earn the same pay that they had received under the Administration of President Grant for eight hours' work.

Thus the matter has run on until the present time, some Departments ignoring the law and others enforcing it. The result, therefore, is, that the Government has been requiring of a portion of its employes, laborers, workmen, and mechanics ten hours' work to earn the same amount of money that it has paid to others of the same class of labor for eight hours' work. This, your committee think, is an unfair and unjust discrimination which should not have been made. Whatever construction may be put upon the law, certainly no one will claim that it justifies such a discrimination. These men are either entitled to a full price of a day's work for eight hours' labor or they are not. If the act contemplated a reduction of the wages of labor to correspond with the reduction of the hours of labor, those who have been paid the full price of a day's work for eight hours' of labor have been overpaid, if such was not the intention of Congress in passing the act; if not, then the Government honestly owes these men for the difference between the value of eight and the value of ten hours' work, to be determined by the standard adopted by the Government in fixing the rate of wages paid to its employes of the class hereinbefore named.

In determining the question as to whether, under the act of June 25, 1868, these men are entitled to a full day's pay for eight hours' work, we have recourse not only to the proclamations of the President of the United States above quoted, and the act of May 18, 1872, directly requiring the accounting officers of the Government to give the law this construction, but we are further enlightened by the debates in the Senate upon this act when the bill was before the Senate. (Page 3424, vol. 68, Globe, second session Fortieth Congress.) During this debate Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, offered an amendment to the effect that the wages should be reduced to correspond with the reduction of the hours of labor. This debate was participated in by Senators Morton, Wilson, Thurman, STEWART, and others. We quote from the remarks made by Senator Morton, as follows:

"MR. MORTON. * * * As I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, I am not in favor of it. I think it will virtually defeat the object of the bill.

"MR. CONNESS. Of course it does.

"MR. MORTON. It proposes to adjust the rate of wages according to the length of time during which labor is performed. The effect of it would be to bring down the rate of wages, because the time for labor is shortened that much."

The amendment was rejected by a vote of 21 to 16. We also quote from the debates in the Senate on the adoption of the House resolution, No. 47, which was incorporated in section 2 of the sundry civil bill, passed May 18, 1872, and referred to above. (Page 124, volume 87, Globe, second session Forty-second Congress.)

"MR. MORTON. Mr. President, I desire to make one suggestion in reply to the Senator from Connecticut, as to what was the understanding here when the eight-hour law passed. My recollection is that the Senator from Ohio, behind me [Mr. SHERMAN], offered an amendment to that bill for the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate as to whether there should be a full day's wages paid for eight hours' work or only eight hours' labor paid for. My recollection is that the question was distinctly presented in that amendment, which was voted down by a very decided majority."

"MR. SUMNER, on the same resolution:

"It is unquestionably an act of justice; these workmen are out of their money, some of them are dead and are represented by their families, and to them this small allowance is of very great importance. I do not think it is advisable for us to take more time. I think we fairly owe the money, and, therefore, the sooner we pay it the better."

In the light of the legislation upon this subject, your committee have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that Congress, in passing the act of June 25, 1868, intended to lessen the hours of labor without in any degree reducing the rate of wages, and they are consequently of the opinion that in all cases where the class of employes named in the act have been required to work more than eight hours to earn their daily wages, or where the wages have been reduced on account of the reduction of the hours of labor, the Government is justly indebted to the men for the deficiency.

No appropriation is asked for in this bill; the claimants only ask to be allowed to go to a court of competent jurisdiction, where they can have an opportunity to establish their claims upon the basis that they shall be paid the full price of a day's work for eight hours' labor. And this your committee think but a reasonable request and ought to be granted, and therefore report the bill back without amendment and recommend that it do pass.

(As to the custom of the Government in fixing the rate of wages and the order and construction of the Secretary of War, and as to the report of committee appointed to investigate the 15 per cent. contracts being made to evade the eight-hour law and extracts from Senate debates, see appendix.)

APPENDIX A.

(Court of Claims. No. 8009. Eight-hour case. James Driscoll vs. The United States. Evidence for claimant.)

Deposition of William T. Dewdney, for plaintiff, taken in Washington, D. C., on the 3d day of March, 1877.

Q. 1. State your name, age, occupation, your place of residence the past year and whether you have any, and, if any, what, interest, direct or indirect, in the claim which is the subject of inquiry; and whether you are related, and in what degree, to the claimant.

A. W. T. Dewdney; forty-two years; carpenter; No. 1414 Seventeenth street, Washington, D. C.; I have no interest in this claim, and I am not related.

Q. 2. How are you at present employed?

A. I am assistant superintendent of the new War, State, and Navy Department building.

Q. 3. How long have you been so employed?

A. Since June, 1872.

Q. 4. State, if you know, what the Government paid stone-cutters and granite-cutters on the work here in Washington during the years 1871 and 1872.

A. In 1872 we paid granite-cutters $4.50 per day for eight hours' work.

Q. 5. Did the Government observe the eight-hour law here in Washington?

A. They did.

Q. 6. By what rule, if any, did the Government establish the scale of prices paid for labor?

A. The price paid to the mechanics and laborers employed on the Government building is established by the market price paid by parties outside.

Q. 7. Do you mean to be understood that the Government pays the same price for eight hours' labor that private parties pay for ten? If not, state what you mean to be understood by it.

(Objected to as leading.)

A. I mean that they do pay the same.

Q. & Do you know of any other matter relative to the claim in question? If you do, state it.

A. I do not.

WM. T. DEWDNEY.

APPENDIX B.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW—SECRETARY LINCOLN'S LETTER OF INSTRUCTIONS THAT IT SHOULD BE ENFORCED.

Inquiry having been made at the War Department as to the truth of the repeated allegations that the eight-hour law has been disregarded by the Department, it is learned from the Acting Secretary of War, General Benét, that the charge was unfounded, as is shown by the following copy of a letter of instructions sent to him as Chief of Ordnance by Secretary Lincoln:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, December 26, 1868.

"SIR: I transmit herewith separate petitions purporting to be signed by employees of the arsenal at Benicia, the arsenal at Rock Island, and the arsenal at Frankford, representing that the provisions of the 'eight-hour law' (section 3733 of the Revised Statutes) are not complied with at those arsenals, and praying that they be enforced. The law referred to does not prohibit Government officers, for good reasons based on the peculiar character of the duty of the employé or upon the exigency of the public service, from making the agreement with an employé of the character named in the act, that he shall render his services for an agreed price during more or less than eight hours in a day, and it may be that some or all of the petitioners are employed under such an engagement. It is, however, my opinion that in the absence of a public exigency the continuance of active work at Government manufacturing establishments for more than eight hours a day is in violation of the intent of the statute, and you will please to instruct the commanding officers of the above-named arsenals accordingly.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"ROBERT T. LINCOLN,

"Secretary of War.

"To the CHIEF OF ORDNANCE."

APPENDIX C.

[House Report No. 93, second session, Forty-second Congress, Seneca sandstone investigation, page 4.]

That by employing stone-cutters through contractor ten hours' labor are obtained per day, instead of eight, a saving of 20 per cent., which more than covers on his contract the 15 per cent. allowed the contractor.

Extracts from speeches delivered in the Senate of the United States, June 24, 1868, on H. R. bill No. 395, constituting eight hours a day's work for Government employés.
Senator CONNESS. Now, sir, I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 395. (Page 3424, volume 68, Globe, second session, Fortieth Congress.)

Senator SHERMAN. I wish to offer an amendment:

"And unless otherwise provided by law, the rate of wages paid by the United States shall be the current rate for the same labor for the same time at the place of employment" (page 3424, volume 68, Globe, second session Fortieth Congress).

Senator CONNESS. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. The passage of the bill with this amendment would amount to nothing. It would simply be a reduction of two hours' labor.

[SHERMAN'S speech on his amendment.]

All I desire is if the United States Government chooses to take the lead in making eight hours a day's work, that it shall not be compelled to pay for that eight hours' work more than any private individual would pay.

I have no objection to the bill (with this amendment), for then the same amount of work done for the United States will bear the same price as if done for an individual, no more and no less.

[Mr. Morton in reply.]

Mr. President, as I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, I am not in favor of it. I think it will virtually defeat the object of this bill.

Mr. CONNESS. Of course it does.

Mr. MORTON. It proposes to adjust the rate of wages according to the length of time during which labor is performed. The effect of it would be to bring down the rate of wages because the time for labor is shortened that much.

Upon the question that this law is to be an experiment to determine whether as much work would be performed in eight hours as in ten, Mr. Morton said: "It can not be settled and the experiment can not be made if the wages in the very beginning are reduced 20 per cent., which would be the practical effect of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, because, as I understand his amendment, it proposes that the wages shall be reduced as the hours are in point of time."

[Remarks of Senator STEWART.]

The amendment of the Senator from Ohio certainly on no theory would be right, and, I think, on a moment's reflection, the Senator himself will see that, because I believe that it is admitted on all hands that men will do more work per hour if they work eight hours than they will if they work ten hours a day. If not admitted, I think it is a self-evident proposition. I think it is one of those axioms that require very little demonstration. I say a man will do more per hour who is only required to work eight hours per day than will a man who is required to work ten hours. The less number of hours a man works, the more he can do in the hours that he does work. That, I believe, will be taken as true. This being so, it would not be fair to say that when we reduce the number of hours of work from ten hours to eight hours per day, the wages shall be reduced pro rata. Certainly, if a man only works a single hour a day, he can do more in that hour—make greater exertions—than if he had to work every hour of the day. So, to adjust the wages pro rata according to the number of hours would not be fair.

[Remarks of Mr. Wilson.]

In this matter of manual labor I look only to the rights and interests of labor. In this country and in this age, as in other countries and in other ages, capital needs no champion. It will take care of itself, and will secure, if not the lion's share, at least its full share of profits in all departments of industry. Whatever tends to dignify manual labor or to lighten its burdens, to increase its rewards, or enlarge its knowledge, should receive our sympathies and command our support. Animated by these sentiments, I shall vote against the amendment and for the bill as it came from the representatives of the people.

[Senator BUCKALEW on the Sherman amendment.]

The operation of his (SHERMAN'S) amendment, therefore, when it comes to be applied practically, may be found to nullify the proposed law, or to embarrass the Government in the transaction of public business.

Upon these considerations, in my judgment, it is perfectly clear that if we pass this bill at all we ought not to encumber and embarrass it with the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

[Actions had upon the bill.]

Amendment rejected. (See Congressional Globe, volume 68, June 21, 1868, pages 3424 and 3429, inclusive.)

The bill passed the Senate as it came from the House—yeas 26, nays 11.

On July 1, 1868, five days after the passage of the bill in the Senate, Mr. Conness submitted the following resolution in the Senate; which was unanimously adopted, to wit:

Resolved, That the President be requested to direct the heads of the several Departments of the Government to promulgate the law limiting the hours of labor, recently enacted, with such regulations as will lead to an immediate compliance with the law.

Extracts from the debates in the Senate on the question of the adoption of House resolution No. 47, which was incorporated in section 3 of the sundry civil bill, passed on the 18th of May, 1872.

(See volume 87, Congressional Globe, second session, Forty-second Congress, page 124. See section 2, page 2, report.)

[Remarks of Mr. Morton.]

Mr. President, I desire to make one suggestion in reply to the Senator from Connecticut, as to what was the understanding here when the eight-hour law passed.

My recollection is that the Senator from Ohio sitting behind me [Mr. SHERMAN] offered an amendment to that bill for the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate as to whether there should be a full day's wages paid for eight hours' work or only eight hours' labor paid for. My recollection is that the question was distinctly presented in that amendment, which was voted down by a very decided majority.

[Mr. Sumner, on the same resolution.]

It is unquestionably an act of justice. These workmen are out of their money. Some of them are dead and are represented by their families, and to them this small allowance is of very great importance. I do not think it advisable for us to take more time. I think we fairly owe the money, and therefore the sooner we pay it the better.

HOUSE.

[Remarks of Mr. Robeson.]

Mr. Speaker, I favor this law because it is only the enforcement of a statute which is written upon the statute-book of this country, and has been there for many years, and which, when it was passed with a full understanding of all its scope and meaning, was a full notice to the country and all the Departments of the Government, and to everybody that was employed under it; therefore, sir, I am in favor, as long as it stands upon the statute-book, of executing it by all the powers of the Government.

[Remarks of Mr. Wright, of Pennsylvania.]

I did not introduce this bill, but I am its advocate, and I will stand by it from the beginning to the end, according to the law. In plain language, the law is written in these words:

"Eight hours shall constitute a day's work by all laborers, workmen, and mechanics who may be employed by, or in behalf of, the Government of the United States."

Is there any difficulty in putting a construction upon that language? It is written as plainly as the English language can express an idea, and it does me good when the ex-Secretary of the Navy rises in his place on this floor and states that while he had charge of that Department he carried out the law. Ordinarily we do not give men credit for carrying out the law, but here there has been an attempt to evade the law; and it has been wantonly done. Gentlemen must not tell me that the Supreme Court have decided that this law does not mean eight hours for a day's work. All that the court has said is that a man who does the labor may make a special contract and is bound by it; that is what the court has decided.

With regard to the character of this law, if it be not the law of the land, strike it from your statute-book, but do not evade it, do not attempt to get around it because it favors a class of men who have not the means to defend themselves in courts of justice or have not the money to come here and lobby this House for the purpose of protecting their own rights. Let the law stand or let the law be repealed. It has been here for a period of some twelve years, for I think the law was passed in 1868. It has been regarded as almost a dead letter upon the statute-book. I tell you that a construction against labor and laboring men, in the manner in which this thing is done, is wrong; and I tell you so before God and in the sight of all men that that law should be carried out and enforced.

[Resolution as follows.]

Resolved, That according to the true intent and meaning of section 3733 of the Revised Statutes, all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government shall hereafter receive a full day's pay for eight hours' work; and all heads of Departments, officers, and agents of the Government are hereby directed to enforce said law as herein interpreted.

Your committee, in view of the importance of this bill, insert the following additional matter:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners respectfully represent that they are laborers, workmen, and mechanics who now are or who have been employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States subsequent to the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work; that from the 1st of July, 1877, to December, 1883, they were compelled in all the navy-yards in the United States to work ten hours to earn their daily wages, or to earn what they were paid up to and since that time for eight hours' labor, or submit to a reduction of 25 per cent. in their wages. This we regard as a direct violation of the eight-hour law above referred to and in direct conflict with the construction put upon the law by the United States Senate at the time of the passage of the law; also with the two several proclamations of President Grant, which were in the following words:

"Whereas the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, constituted on and after that date eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, and repealed all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith:

"Now therefore I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby direct that from and after this date no reduction shall be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of such reduction of the hours of labor." (16 Statutes at Large, 1127.)

"Whereas the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, constituted on and after that date eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States;

"And whereas on the 19th day of May, in the year 1869, by Executive proclamation it was directed that from and after that date no reduction should be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of such reduction of the hours of labor;

"And whereas it is now represented to me that the act of Congress and the proclamation aforesaid have not been strictly observed by all the officers of the Government having charge of such laborers, workmen, and mechanics:

"Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby again call attention to the act of Congress aforesaid, and direct all officers of the executive department of the Government having charge of the employment and payment of laborers, workmen, or mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States to make no reduction in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on the reduction of the hours of labor." (17 Statutes at Large, 965.)

"It is also in direct conflict with the act of 18th of May, 1873, which is in the following words:

"That the proper accounting officers be, and hereby are, authorized and required in the settlement of all accounts for the services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, between the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work for all such laborers, workmen, and mechanics, and the 19th day of May, 1869, the date of the proclamation of the President concerning such pay, to settle and pay for the same, without reduction on account of reduction of hours of labor by said act, when it shall be made to appear that such was the sole cause of the reduction of wages; and a sufficient sum for said purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." (17 Statutes at Large, 134.)

"As well as the joint resolution of the House of Representatives, as follows:

"[In the Senate of the United States. May 10, 1878. Read twice and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. Joint resolution to provide for the enforcement of the eight-hour law.]

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That according to the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, entitled An act constituting eight hours a legal day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, eight hours constitute a day's work for all such laborers, workmen, and mechanics; and while said act remains upon the statute-book no reduction shall be made in the wages paid by the Government, by the day, to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor; and that all heads of departments, officers, and agents of the Government are hereby directed to enforce said law as long as the same is un repealed.

"Passed the House of Representatives May 9, 1878.

"Attest:

"GEO. M. ADAMS, Clerk."

We, your humble petitioners, further respectfully represent that we feel that a great injury has been done us in requiring us to perform one-quarter more work in a calendar day than the law of the land required. We feel that we have been deprived of one-fourth of our wages by the action of the officers of the Government whose duty it was to enforce and obey the law in its letter and spirit, and we come to your honorable body as the only tribunal to which we have access, feeling that your honorable body will grant us simple justice. We do not ask a gratuity; we only ask what is honestly and justly our due, and which is now being withheld from us, as we think and fully believe, in violation of a solemn act of Congress which was intended for our benefit.

If we were to have all that the law allows us it would be but a pittance, and scarcely sufficient to enable us to provide the bare necessities of life for our families; and to deprive us of any part of it, while it would not be felt by those in affluent circumstances, is a serious matter to us. We could not refuse to work; that was to starve; and we preferred to take what we could get, render faithful performance of our services, and trust to your honorable body to do us justice in the future. We therefore do humbly but most earnestly pray that your honorable body will allow us the privilege of presenting our several claims to a competent tribunal to be adjudicated upon the basis that the full price of a day's work shall be paid for eight hours' labor, or that your honorable body will grant us such other relief as in the opinion of your honorable body will secure to your petitioners substantial justice in the premises; and your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

—, —, 188—.

To comply with the requirements of General Orders No. 53, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, D. C., June 1, 1877, a day's work at this arsenal, when the length of the day will permit, is made to consist of ten hours; but to conform more strictly to the ruling custom in this vicinity as is required by law, one-half hour of this time is allowed to the workmen for the longer walk to their work than is necessary in the cities, making the hours of labor nine and one-half hours per day.

In winter, when the hours of daylight will not permit nine and one-half hours of labor, the number of hours fixed by orders from time to time will constitute a full day's work. When a workman is employed only a part of a day, he will be allowed for such part of a day's work the number of hours he works divided by the number of hours that constitute a day's work at the time. Special workmen, such as foremen, guards, firemen, shop attendants, etc., whose duties require their presence more hours than other workmen, will be allowed only one day's labor for the full number of hours of service required of them in each twenty-four hours, and their wages will be fixed accordingly." We, the undersigned, agree to the above.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Rock Island County, ss:

Personally appeared before me, a clerk of the county court in and for the county of Rock Island and State of Illinois aforesaid, Patrick J. Cary, who, being duly sworn, upon his oath doth say that he was employed at the United States arsenal at Rock Island, Ill., during the seven years from A. D. 1877 to A. D. 1884; that he as well as other employes at the said arsenal were required to sign the contract, a copy of which is hereto attached and marked Exhibit A, or get no employment at said arsenal; that he did with other employes sign the said contract under protest, knowing at the time of signing the same as aforesaid that eight hours were a legal day's work in Government employ, and that William Channon, a foreman at said arsenal, gave notice to the affiant, as well as other employes, that his instructions were to retain none of the employes that would not sign the aforesaid contract, and that any refusing so to do would be immediately discharged from the Government employ, and that he did sign the aforesaid contract under protest and continued to work at said arsenal under said contract until the night of April 2, A. D. 1884, believing that the United States Congress would give the benefit of the eight-hour law out of which he and the other employes were wronged.

That he has heretofore joined with other employes, and forwarded to the honorable Secretary of War, in a protest against the action of Col. D. W. Flagler, commandant at said Rock Island arsenal.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Rock Island County, ss:

Personally appeared before me, a clerk of the county and State aforesaid, Robert Bennett, who, being duly sworn, upon his oath does say that he was employed at the United States arsenal at Rock Island, Ill., during the years from A. D. 1877 to A. D. 1884, as well as other employes at the said arsenal, have been required to sign the contract (a copy of which is hereto attached and marked Exhibit A) or get no employment at said arsenal; that said deponent, as well as other employes, did protest against signing the said contract, well knowing that eight hours were a legal day's work in Government employ; and that Robert McFarlane, foreman at said arsenal, gave notice to deponent, as well as other employes, that his instructions were that we, the said employes of said arsenal, must sign the said contract or leave the Government employ at once; and that deponent, as well as other employes, did sign the said contract under protest, and did continue to work at said arsenal, under said contract, until the night of April 2, A. D. 1881, believing that the United States Congress would give the benefit of the eight-hour law, which we were wronged out of; and, further, deponent says that he was elected one of a committee to visit Col. D. W. Flagler, commandant of said arsenal, to protest against the violation of the eight-hour law, which duty he did perform, and was sent to Washington, D. C., in April, A. D. 1884, a delegate, by the employes of said arsenal, and there presented the grievance of said employes, of the violation of the eight-hour law, before the Committee of the House on Labor; also presented the same to Hon. Senator BLAIR, of the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate, and there endeavored to secure the wages which we are entitled to receive for work performed; and further, that deponent, as well as other employes, did forward a protest against the action of Col. D. W. Flagler, of said arsenal, to the honorable Secretary of War.

EXHIBIT B.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 7, 1888.

To all whom it may concern:

This is to certify that at a meeting of the employes of the League Island navy-yard held at Philadelphia, on February 22, 1878, I was duly elected as their representative to proceed to Washington for the purpose of getting Congress to pass a law to enforce the "eight-hour law," which had been violated by the honorable Secretary of the Navy, at that time, and also to claim extra compensation for the two hours worked per day in violation of the eight-hour law.

At that time the Boston, New York, Washington, and Norfolk navy-yards sent representatives to work in conjunction with myself. By proxy I was authorized to act for the employes of the Kittery and Mare Island, Cal., navy-yards, also Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, and the arsenal at Rock Island, Ill., and finally was authorized to represent all the navy-yards.

I would state this committee worked at every session of Congress during the following three years, without obtaining the legislation that they asked for, when all but myself became disheartened and came to the conclusion that Congress passed the eight-hour law for the benefit of Government employes, but would do nothing to make the heads of Departments of the Government enforce the law, after they had violated it.

Finding that Congress would take no action in regard to the enforcement of the law, after a three years' trial I brought the matter to the attention of Presidents Garfield and Arthur and their Secretaries of the Army and Navy, and the great help that I received from the Hon. A. C. Harner, after working for two years more, succeeded in getting Ex-Secretary of the Navy William E. Chandler to enforce the law, which was done on or about March 28, 1883; about ten months afterward succeeded in getting Ex-Secretary of War Robert T. Lincoln to enforce the law. During all this time I, as the representative of these employes, protested against the violation of the law and claimed compensation for the extra hours worked in excess of eight hours per day. I would state that at the navy-yards during the violation of the law the employes were compelled to work six months in the year eight hours per day and six months ten hours per day, and were paid the same rate of wages for eight hours' work per day as they received for ten hours' work per day, and at the navy-yards the employes signed no contracts; they had to work according to orders received or be discharged.

I was informed at the arsenals by the employes that they worked ten hours per day the whole year, during the violation of the law, and were compelled to sign contracts by the officers in charge or be forthwith discharged.

When elected to represent the Government employes I was rated as a laborer on the rolls at navy-yard, League Island, Philadelphia, Pa. Hon. HENRY W. BLAIR, United States Senator, ought to remember me well, as I had to appear before the committee several times on this matter; I also requested him to present in 1884 a resolution to pay Government employes for holidays, which was passed and approved January 6, 1885; also at last session of Congress requested him to present a resolution to pay Government employes for Decoration Day, which was passed and approved.

Hon. A. C. HARNER assisted me in the eight-hour business and can vouch for my statement.

Davis, of Philadelphia, Pa., who represented the League Island yard and other yards, did present the case by way of protest to the Secretary of the Navy, and also presented the matter to Congress; that the House of Representatives did, in 1878, pass a favorable resolution on the subject, but that during the Administration of President Hayes no change of Secretary Thompson's order compelling the said employes to work ten hours per day until the order of Secretary Chandler fixing the time of a day's work at eight hours; further affiants saith not.

[SEAL.] HOWARD O. EMMONS,
Notary Public.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington, ss:

I, Edward H. Rogers, being duly sworn, do depose and say that I am a citizen of the State of Massachusetts, residing in the city of Chelsea, in said State; that I am temporarily in the city of Washington, D. C.; that I am a ship-joiner by trade; that I have worked in the navy-yard at Charlestown, Mass., at intervals for twenty-six years now last past; that I am here as the representative of the workmen of said navy-yard who have claims for overtime under the eight-hour law.

I further state that on or about March 1, 1878, at Charlestown, in the said State, a meeting of the employes of the Government in said yard was held for the purpose of sending a delegate or representative to Washington to protest to the officers of the Government here against the action of the commandant of the yard in requiring the men to work ten hours per calendar day without increase of pay, when, by the act of June 25, 1868, they were only required to work eight hours for a full day's work, and to take such measures as would secure the enforcement of the eight-hour law.

I further state that I was secretary of that meeting; that Mr. Samuel C. Hunt, of Charlestown, Mass., an employe of the yard, was chosen as a delegate to perform that service; that he proceeded to Washington on or about the 9th day of the same month for that purpose, and worked diligently to that end for nearly three months, and that I assisted in raising some $300 to pay his expenses on that business and maintain his family.

I further state that he, in company with delegates from the other yards, had several interviews with the Secretary of the Navy, but that they were unsuccessful, as the increased hours were continued without corresponding payment during the five summer seasons from 1875 to 1882, inclusive. An interview which the delegation had with President Hayes brought no relief, and they finally turned their efforts towards Congress.

It further appears that a joint resolution declaratory of the intention of Congress concerning the eight-hour law passed the House of Representatives through their action on May 9, 1878. It declared that "eight hours should constitute a day's work" and that "no reduction should be made in the wages on account of the reduction of the hours of labor." Pending its consideration by the Senate Mr. Hunt returned to his home, the other delegates doing the same, with the exception of Mr. Jacob M. Davis, the delegate from the League Island yard. Mr. Davis remained in Washington as the authorized agent of naval stations and arsenals of the whole country.

EDWARD H. ROGERS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 10th day of February, 1888.
[SEAL.] FRANK T. RAWLINGS,
Notary Public.

The following matter was also filed before the committee:

"Now as to the amount involved in case this bill should pass. Of course we have no basis upon which we can estimate or base the amount with any positive degree of accuracy. But the act of Congress approved May 8, 1872 (see U. S. Stat. at Large, page 134), provided for the payment of all sums deducted from the pay of laborers, workmen, and mechanics in consequence of the reduction in the hours of labor from the 25th day of June, 1868, until the 19th of May, 1869, a period of eleven months and twenty days; and, according to the estimate of the Third Auditor of the Treasury, it took about $300,000 to pay the men for that period. (See official letter of that officer to Senator Harvey, of Kansas, dated February 25, 1875, in reply to an inquiry as to the amount involved in the passage of a similar bill to this, then pending in the Senate.)

"Taking this sum as the basis for the period of, say, one year (for it is within ten days of that time), and supposing that about the same number of men were employed by the Government during that year as have been on an average for the period since that time in which these parties claim pay, which is six months in each year from July, 1877, to the 1st of January, 1884, a period aggregating four years (see the order of Secretary Thompson, under President Hayes, dated June 30, 1877), and it would require about $1,200,000. But according to the statement of the Auditor there had been but $22,063.75 paid up to the 25th day of July, 1875, a period of nearly three years after the passage of the act authorizing payment as aforesaid; and the strong probability is that not one-half of that sum has ever been paid out on those claims.

"From this we may reasonably say that should this bill pass not half of the claims would be presented within the period named in the bill for presenting these claims. But suppose it takes double or treble that amount, what has the amount to do with it if the claim is a just one? And it must be borne in mind that these claimants are not asking Congress to determine the justness of their claims; they only ask what is almost universally granted to capitalists and corporations, and that is that they may go before a competent tribunal and prove the justness of their claims if they can.

"One other matter as to the facts in the case. The eight-hour law was passed on the 25th of June, 1868, but was entirely ignored by the officers of the Government who had charge of the employment of the men named in the act, either by requiring them to work ten hours to earn their daily wages, or submit to a reduction of their wages to correspond with the reduction in the hours of labor if they only worked eight hours per day. This state of things went on until the 19th of May, 1869, when President Grant issued his proclamation prohibiting any reduction of pay in consequence of the reduction of the hours of labor; and still things went on in the same way until 11th of May, 1872, when the President issued a second proclamation calling attention to the first and repeating it.

"Meantime complaint was made to Congress, petitions were sent in, and bills were introduced with the view of restraining the officers of the Government from violating the law, which finally resulted in the passage of section 2 of the act making appropriations for that current or fiscal year, requiring the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle with the men, and to pay them all sums which had been withheld from them in consequence of the reduction of the hours of labor between the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the passage of the eight-hour bill, and the 19th day of May, 1869, the date of the President's first proclamation, a period, as before stated, of about eleven months and twenty days; but this act made no provision for payment of the sums withheld from the date of the President's proclamation to the passage of the act, to wit, from the 19th day of May, 1869, to the 18th of May, 1872. But during this time General Grant enforced the law in the different navy-yards of the United States, so that from the date of his first proclamation to the end of his administration the employes of the navy-yards were only required to work eight hours to earn their daily wages. But on the coming in of the Administration of President Hayes, Secretary Thompson, Secretary of the Navy, issued the following order, dated, as will be seen, on the 30th day of June, 1877:

[General Order, No. 227.]

"NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 30, 1877.

"The following decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is published for the information of the Navy:

"Under this construction of the law regulating public labor, given by the Supreme Court of the United States, the Department has fixed the rate of labor for mechanics, foremen, leading men, and laborers on the basis of ten hours a day. All workmen electing to labor only eight hours per day will receive a proportionate reduction of their wages.

"R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

"Thus requiring the superintendents of different navy-yards to employ the men on the basis of ten hours for each day's work, and if the men chose to work two hours less they were to receive less wages. Under this order the men were employed until the 21st of March, 1878, when this order was rescinded or revoked, and the following order was issued:

"[Circular No. 8.]

"NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 21, 1878.

"The following is hereby substituted, to take effect from this date, for the circular of October 25, 1877, in relation to the working hours at the several navy-yards and shore stations:

"The working hours will be, from March 21 to September 21, from 7 a. m. to 6 p. m.; from September 22 to March 20, from 7.40 a. m. to 4.30 p. m., with the usual intermission of one hour for dinner.

"The Department will contract for the labor of mechanics, foremen, leading men, and laborers on the basis of eight hours a day. All workmen electing to labor ten hours a day will receive a proportionate increase of their wages.

"The commandants will notify the men employed, or to be employed, of these conditions, and they are at liberty to continue or accept employment under them or not.

"R. W. THOMPSON,
"Secretary of the Navy.

"So that it will be readily seen that under the last-named order the Government hired the men on a basis that eight hours constituted a day's work, and agreed if they worked ten hours per day it would pay them a corresponding increase of wages. Now, the fact is that the men did work ten hours per day until the date of the following order:

"[Circular to the yards.]

"NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 23, 1883.

"The Department confirms its telegram to you of the 20th instant, which was in the following words: 'Continue the present eight hours of labor until otherwise ordered.'

"The hours of labor should be from 8 to 12 m. and from 1 to 5 p. m.

"W. E. CHANDLER,
"Secretary of the Navy.

"And that they have never been paid a single dollar of increase on account of such overwork, and now they ask to go to the Court of Claims and establish their claims. As it has been before stated, those men only worked half of the year under the orders of June 30, 1877, and of March 21, 1878, ten hours a day. They worked from the 21st of September to the 21st of March eight hours per day, and were paid the price of a day's work on the basis named in the order, namely, that of eight hours; but they then worked from the 21st of March to the 21st of September ten hours a day without increase of pay, although the honorable Secretary of the Navy, in the order above named, specifically agreed that they should be paid a corresponding increase whenever they worked ten hours per day. So that it appears that the order of the honorable Secretary was entirely ignored by the officers having the work in charge, and the Government owes these men by special agreement for this overwork in all these cases named."

Mr. INGALLS. It is understood that nothing but private pension bills which are not objected to are to be considered to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. And that immediately after they are concluded we proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas. Is it understood that the pending bill will be the unfinished business?

Mr. INGALLS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to understand a little about this agreement. One bill which has gone over on the Calendar I suppose I shall be at liberty to call up?

Mr. INGALLS. Is it under Rule VIII?

Mr. PLATT. No, it went over under Rule IX.

Mr. INGALLS. Then it must be considered some other day.

Mr. PLATT. Then I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the agreement would give consideration to unobjected pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Connecticut objects, and that disposes of the pension bills.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I renew my motion for an executive session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, September 29, 1890, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 27th day of September, 1890.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

William Wallace Rollins, of North Carolina, to be collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of North Carolina, in place of John B. Eaves, who was commissioned during a recess of the Senate, and to whose appointment the Senate has refused to advise and consent, and whose commission will expire on the adjournment of the Senate.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

John F. Rector, of Illinois, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Cairo, in the State of Illinois. Office created by act of Congress approved September 4, 1890.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Ezra B. Bailey, of Connecticut, to be collector of customs for the district of Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, in place of Charles C. Hubbard, to be removed.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Commander Edwin C. Merriman, to be a captain in the Navy, from the 31st July, 1890, vice Capt. Robert Boyd, deceased.

Lieut. Commander George C. Reiter, to be a commander in the Navy, from the 31st July, 1890, vice Commander E. C. Merriman, promoted.

Lieut. Frederick M. Symonds, to be a lieutenant-commander in the Navy, from the 31st of July, 1890, vice Lieut. Commander George C. Reiter, promoted.

Lieut. Clifford J. Boush, junior grade, to be a lieutenant in the Navy, from the 31st of July, 1890, vice Lieut. F. M. Symonds, promoted.

Ensign Thomas W. Ryan, to be a lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy, from the 31st of July, 1890, vice Lieut. C. J. Boush, junior grade, promoted. (Subject to the examinations required by law.)

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nominations withdrawn by the President September 27, 1890.

Eugene Schnyler, to be agent and consul-general of the United States at Cairo, he having died since his nomination was delivered to the Senate.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 26, 1890.

TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

Francis L. Daggett, of Utah Territory, to be judge of probate in Washington County, in the Territory of Utah.

Henry Shields, of Utah Territory, to be judge of probate in Summit County, in the Territory of Utah.

Thomas S. Watson, of Utah Territory, to be judge of probate in Wasatch County, in the Territory of Utah.

Hector W. Haight, of Utah Territory, to be judge of probate in Davis County, in the Territory of Utah.

Charles A. Herman, of Utah Territory, to be judge of probate in Tooele County, in the Territory of Utah.

Charles Foote, of Utah Territory, to be judge of probate in Juab County, in the Territory of Utah.

Stephen V. Frazier, of Utah Territory, to be judge of probate in Rich County, in the Territory of Utah.

William Goodwin, of Utah Territory, to be judge of probate in Cache County, in the Territory of Utah.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 27, 1890.

ENVOYS EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTERS PLENIPOTENTIARY.

E. Burd Grubb, of New Jersey, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Spain.

Edwin H. Conger, of Iowa, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Brazil.

TERRITORIAL PROBATE JUDGE.

Lewis B. Kinney, of Utah Territory, to be judge of probate in Sevier County, in the Territory of Utah.

INDIAN AGENT.

Isaac A. Beggs, of Arcata, Cal., to be agent for the Indians of the Hoopa Valley agency in California.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

S. Perry Youngs, of Stanton, Mich., to be receiver of public moneys at Grayling, Mich.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Oscar Palmer, of Grayling, Mich., to be register of the land office at Grayling, Mich.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Fremont Wood, of Idaho, to be attorney of the United States for the district of Idaho.

POSTMASTERS.

Albert C. Hotchkiss, to be postmaster at Adel, in the county of Dallas and State of Iowa.

John R. Palmer, to be postmaster at Westport, in the county of Fairfield and State of Connecticut.

Samuel Mullen, to be postmaster at Bessemer, in the county of Jefferson and State of Alabama.

Sidney L. Winter, to be postmaster at Woodbine, in the county of Harrison and State of Iowa.

Alonzo B. Pearsall, to be postmaster at McGregor, in the county of Clayton and State of Iowa.

Valentine S. Nelson, to be postmaster at Lyons, in the county of Clinton and State of Iowa.

Jacob M. Harman, to be postmaster at Shelton, in the county of Buffalo and State of Nebraska.

George P. Huckleby, to be postmaster at Rich Hill, in the county of Bates and State of Missouri.

Louis L. Campbell, to be postmaster at Northampton, in the county of Hampshire and State of Massachusetts.

Mrs. Frances J. M. Sperry, to be postmaster at Georgetown, in the county of Georgetown and State of South Carolina.

Charles B. Woolley, to be postmaster at Long Branch City, in the county of Monmouth and State of New Jersey.

Benjamin A. Lee, to be postmaster at Keyport, in the county of Monmouth and State of New Jersey.

John S. Snook, to be postmaster at Caldwell, in the county of Burleson and State of Texas.

George F. Hannay, to be postmaster at Bastrop, in the county of Bastrop and State of Texas.

Helen A. Conger, to be postmaster at Waco, in the county of McLennan and State of Texas.

Perry C. Wilder, to be postmaster at Evansville, in the county of Rock and State of Wisconsin.

Charles A. Kirkham, to be postmaster at Augusta, in the county of Eau Claire and State of Wisconsin.

Roger W. Halburd, to be postmaster at Hyde Park, in the county of Lamoille and State of Vermont.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, September 27, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will cause the proceedings of the Journal of yesterday to be read.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Journal and that the same may be approved with the understanding that errors, if any, may be corrected hereafter by members. I do that, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of giving more time to-day for the consideration of the conference report on the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal may be dispensed with and that it may be approved, with the right of any gentleman to make correction hereafter if necessary.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I believe that I shall have to object to that request.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will cause the Journal of yesterday's proceedings to be read.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the tariff bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I asked for the reading of the report yesterday evening, in order to get the statement before the House if I could, but in the mean time it has been printed in the RECORD. The statement was not reached in the House yesterday, so I do not wish to compel the House to take up time in the reading of the report, and I will not insist thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] withdraws the objection he made last evening. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The further reading of the report will be dispensed with.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce at this time that upon this side of the House there is no desire to occupy more than one hour in debate, so far as the presentation from our standpoint is concerned; but we desire to accommodate, as far as possible, the other side; and if entirely agreeable to gentlemen, my associate conferees, I will suggest that at half past 5 to-day a vote be had upon this bill. That gives us five hours of debate. I propose to give to the other side three hours out of the five hours, and to reserve two for this side, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, as I stated yesterday, I do not think the time that is proposed by the gentleman from Ohio is sufficient for the discussion of this measure. It was not discussed in Committee of the Whole after it came back from the Senate, and it involves reciprocity and other provisions never discussed in the House. I think that the time proposed is an unreasonable time. Of course the gentleman from Ohio has the power to fix the time and to call the previous question when he desires. If he insists, however, on a vote this evening, I will suggest to him to fix the hour at 6 o'clock in place of half past 5 o'clock, which will give half an hour more time.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I desire to say that to accommodate the gentleman we will extend the hour to 6 o'clock and take the vote at that time.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McMILLIN. And what division will the gentleman propose of that additional time?

Mr. MCKINLEY. Of the five hours and a half we will give to the gentleman three hours and a half.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it right—

Mr. McMILLIN. We do not of course think that a sufficient time. There are a number of gentlemen who want to discuss it who will be cut off; but of course we would prefer that length of time to a shorter time.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave to print on this report.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I have been recognized once. I wish to know why I have been taken off the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. DUNNELL. He has introduced a second subject.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL].

Mr. DUNNELL. I addressed the Chair in my own right. The gentleman from Ohio has said that it was generally understood on this side that we would take less than one-half of the time. I simply rise to object to a new division of time on this bill. I think we should take time enough and that one-half of the time should be given to this side.

Mr. McMILLIN. We will be entirely willing to have that arrangement, Mr. Speaker. I have said all along that I do not think the vote ought to be taken before Monday. I concur in what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] says—that the time is too short.

Mr. MCKINLEY. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] seriously objects to the arrangement I have proposed, we will try and arrange in some way to give the gentleman as much of the two hours and a half as he desires. Some of us will take the floor and yield to him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition to take a vote at 6 o'clock?

Mr. McMILLIN. We do not wish to consent to the taking of the vote then. We think the time is unreasonable and too short, and I think it was never contemplated until yesterday that it should be limited to such a short period. The gentleman, however, can proceed—

The SPEAKER. Unless there is unanimous consent that will involve two votes.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Do I understand that the gentleman does not accede to my proposition? Do I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] to decline to accede to my proposition?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not wish to consent to a limitation of the debate; and this is a limitation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman suggested 6 o'clock. That is his suggestion, as I understand.

Mr. McMILLIN. I stated that while we were unwilling that the vote shall be taken to-day, that if this bill should be forced through to-day we prefer 6 o'clock to half past 5.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Is it understood that 6 o'clock shall be fixed as the time to take the vote on this conference report? I understood that at 6 o'clock we are to take a vote on this conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is that the understanding—that at 6 o'clock the vote be taken?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not consent, Mr. Speaker, to any limitation upon the debate. The gentleman has his remedy, however.

The SPEAKER. His remedy would be to demand the previous question, which would require two votes.

Mr. McMILLIN. We do not think that the limitation placed upon this debate such as ought to be made on a matter involving so much as this bill does, and we do not want to be put in the position of acquiescing in that limitation.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio is that the time which would be occupied in ordering the previous question be given for debate.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Will the gentleman consent that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at 6 o'clock?

Mr. McMILLIN. That is the same as the other, presented in a different form.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Then I give notice that at half past 5 o'clock I shall call for the previous question upon this report.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Will the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means listen to a suggestion?

Mr. MCKINLEY. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. We are to have an election soon, and I suggest that this question be submitted to the people—

Mr. MCKINLEY. I can not yield.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I wish to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that as we are to have a national election soon, that we let this bill go over until after the election; and if the people endorse it I will withdraw my opposition to it. This is a proposition that came from your side two years ago, and your Speaker said it ought to be accepted.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, an agreement was reached by the committee of conference after ten days of most careful and patient consideration. The bill which the House of Representatives passed last May, containing nearly four thousand items, was amended by the Senate in four hundred and fifty-five particulars. More than one hundred of these amendments were purely verbal, a change of the number of a section or the transposition of a paragraph or a word. A number of the amendments were serious and substantial, showing a wide and what seemed to be an almost irreconcilable difference. By far the larger number of amendments, however, were so slight and unimportant that an agreement was quickly reached.

In the first schedule, that of chemicals, the differences were unimportant, and in most instances the House receded from its provisions included in that schedule and accepted the Senate rates. Sulphuric acid for agricultural purposes, which had been put upon the dutiable list by the House, has been transferred to the free-list by the conferees as provided in the Senate amendments.

We come to the next schedule, that of earthenware and glassware. The rates passed by the House and amended by the Senate were retained by the conferees, so that the duty on decorated pottery and decorated china will be 60 per cent., and upon plain earthenware 55 per cent., which will encourage this industry to a higher development and eventuate in giving the home producers a larger share of the home market than they now enjoy and a resultant benefit in lower prices to the consumer.

In the glassware schedule slight reductions were made from the rates fixed by the House and much in advance of those fixed by the Senate, but they are believed to be such as will in no way interfere with this great and valuable industry, and will be found a vast improvement over present rates and classification.

METALS.

The metal schedule, which occupies twenty-five pages of the bill, has received earnest consideration, because of the importance of the great industries it represents. All shades of opinion relating to its details have been carefully considered, and every effort has been made to reconcile the claims of conflicting interests and the conflicting claims of various sections of our country. No tariff bill was ever framed that was not largely made up of compromises, and the present metal schedule is an illustration of this truth. It is confidently believed that upon examination it will be found to be fully protective of every branch of our iron and steel industries. There may be disappointment over some of the rates which have been adopted, but the sober second thought will be one of satisfaction that so much has been done that is good and so little has been done that is likely to produce even temporary inconvenience.

Nothing has been done in the metal schedule that can result in loss of business or prestige, and nothing that can call for a reduction of wages or a diminution of the number of workmen employed. On the contrary, there is every reason to believe, and I do believe, that the new metal schedule will largely increase the demand for all our iron and steel products, and that consequently it will largely increase the demand for labor, and especially for highly skilled labor. I believe further that the metal schedule which is now submitted is the most harmonious and the most surely protective of any metal schedule of this generation.

Looking at the details of this schedule as it has finally been adopted, and without confining our attention exclusively to the amendments proposed by the Senate, it will be found that we have retained iron ore and pig-iron, also scrap-iron and scrap-steel, all of which are sometimes erroneously called raw materials, at the same rates which are found in the present tariff. To have reduced the duties on iron ore and pig-iron would have encouraged the importation of foreign ore and foreign pig-iron, for which there would have been no excuse, as we need to encourage the development of new iron-ore fields, and can now produce and are producing all the pig-iron we need, except a small quantity of spiegeleisen, and our production of this kind of pig-iron is constantly increasing. If we had reduced the duty on scrap-iron and scrap-steel we would have interfered with the prosperity of our pig-iron industry, scrap-iron and scrap-steel being substitutes for pig-iron.

The duties on the various forms of bar iron, which is the product almost exclusively of hand labor, and not of the labor-saving machinery which has worked such wonderful revolutions in other branches of the world's iron and steel industries, have been retained substantially as they are in the present tariff. Such slight reductions as have been made will not in the least encourage the importation of foreign bar iron.

The duty on all forms of structural iron and steel has been reduced from $29 per ton to nine-tenths of 1 cent. per pound, or $20.16 per ton. This is the rate which was embodied in the House bill, and while it is nearly $8 per ton less than the rate in the present law it is $2.24 per ton higher than the rate proposed by the Senate, which reduction we were convinced was too sweeping. The rate which we have adopted will sufficiently protect our manufacturers of structural iron and steel. The production of these articles has become a great national industry, consuming annually large quantities of iron ore and pig-iron and employing directly many workmen. This industry has been built up under the present protective duty, but it is no longer necessary that the whole of this duty should be retained.

The paragraph relating to boiler or other plate iron or steel has been changed in the conference committee by adopting a new classification for all iron and steel plates valued at 2 cents per pound or less. All plates valued at 1 cent per pound or less, and thicker than No. 10 wire gauge, are to be subject to a duty of five-tenths of 1 cent per pound; valued above 1 cent and not above 1.4 cents, the duty is to be sixty-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound; valued above 1.4 cents and not above 2 cents the duty is to be eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound. These are reductions on a uniform rate of 1 cent per pound which was embodied in the House bill, which rate we are convinced was too high upon the lower grades of plates. On all plates valued above 2 cents per pound the House rates have been retained. The new rates taken as a whole will afford much surer protection to our manufacturers of steel plates than the present duty of 45 per cent.

The duty on forgings of iron or steel has been reduced from the present rate two-tenths of 1 cent per pound, but a proviso has been added that no forgings shall pay a lower rate of duty than 45 per cent.

In the paragraph relating to hoop-iron we have included a proviso covering hoops for barrels and hoops and ties for baling purposes which will encourage the home production of these articles and check importations which have in recent years been so great as to seriously injure a worthy domestic industry, one which could not compete under a low duty with the cheap labor of women and children across the Atlantic. This proviso has been inserted partly in the hope that the South will now make at least a large part of its own cotton-ties, for the production of which it has abundant natural resources.

The duty on rails has been made to apply uniformly to all sizes and shapes of iron and steel rails. The rate adopted is $12.44 per ton, which is a reduction on light rails of $7 per ton, and on those of ordinary use of $3.56 per ton. This reduction will not, however, impair the effectiveness for protection of the duty which is retained. Originally the duty on steel rails of standard sizes was $28 per ton; but when the tariff of 1883 was framed this duty was reduced to $17 per ton, the higher duty having accomplished the work for which it was designed, the building up of a great steel-rail industry, the first in the world. It has now been thought safe to still further reduce the duty on steel rails, in obedience to a wise policy which will not impose any higher duty than is needed to prevent injurious foreign competition.

With the march of invention and the increase of skill in the production of domestic steel rails it has been possible to reduce their cost since the passage of the tariff of 1883, although their manufacture is still burdened with heavy freight charges on the materials from which they are made, and on the rails themselves when shipped to points where they meet the competition of foreign rails which can be cheaply transported by ocean vessels. A lower rate of duty on steel rails than is now proposed would not encourage the erection of additional rail mills, which it is believed the proposed duty will do. The hope is indulged that, at least, we may soon see steel rails made on the shores of Lake Superior and on the Pacific coast.

The duty on steel sheets has been made specific, instead of ad valorem as in the present tariff. The new duty will be found to be more protective than the present duty, under which the importations of steel sheets have been very heavy. The duty on galvanized iron and steel sheets has been retained as it reads in the present tariff.

One of the best features of the metal schedule is the new rate which has been imposed on tin-plates. The present duty of 1 cent per pound has been found to be a revenue duty only, no tin-plate industry existing in our country to-day. The new rate of 2.2 cents per pound is absolutely necessary if we would have a tin-plate industry of our own, and that we should have such an industry will not be denied when the large sums of money we annually send abroad for tin-plates, and which might be kept in circulation among our own people, are considered. We can make our own tin-plates if given a chance. The new duty will not materially advance the cost of tin-plates to consumers after we make a beginning in their manufacture, while it is entirely certain that the quality of all the tin-plates used by our own people will be improved when foreign and domestic competitors meet in our markets. The new duty is not to go into effect until July 1, 1891, and it is provided that if the tin-plate industry shall not be established in this country by 1897 tin-plates shall then go on the free-list. On taggers iron an adequately protective duty is also provided, which the present tariff does not contain.

That feature of the bill which will provoke criticism, and it is the only one which will do this, is the paragraph relating to steel ingots, blooms, slabs, billets, etc. The rates agreed upon are lower than the rates provided in the House bill, and for which the House conferees earnestly insisted. Various propositions of compromise were submitted, but all were rejected by a majority of the Senate conferees. Unsatisfactory as the new rates are to the House conferees and to the manufacturers, they will nevertheless in the main afford better protection to these manufacturers than the present very unsatisfactory and injurious duty of 45 per cent, the new rates being specific throughout. Improved processes now everywhere employed in the manufacture of steel billets, slabs, etc., will, it is hoped, enable our manufacturers to compete successfully with foreign makers in our own markets.

The duty on wire rods has been left as it is in the present law, with the exception that it is made to cover smaller sizes than are now specifically provided for. The duties on wire have also been retained substantially as they read in the present law.

The duty on anvils has been slightly increased to enable our people to make their own anvils, which are now largely imported. The duty on anchors has been slightly reduced. The duty on axles has been reduced half a cent per pound. Many other reductions have been made in minor iron and steel products when this could be done without injury to home industries. The duties on cutlery have been increased to meet the continually increasing undervaluations and other frauds of foreign manufacturers. The duty on nickel has been reduced, and nickel ore and nickel matte have been placed on the free-list, because after a long period of protection it has been found that we need to go abroad for a large part of our supply of this useful metal. Aluminum, a new metal, is provided for at rates which it is believed will afford ample protection to those who may engage in its manufacture.

The duties on copper are reduced, while those on lead and zinc are retained as in the present law with slight change.

It is not necessary to examine the metal schedule further. It will be found, on full examination, to embody features of great value to our iron and steel manufacturers, while carefully respecting the interests of consumers.

THE WOOD SCHEDULE.

In the wood schedule, Mr. Speaker, the Senate rates were lower than the House rates on all kinds of lumber. The House conferees consented to a reduction of from $2 to $1 per thousand on white-pine boards and a proportionate reduction on white-pine clapboards and shingles, also to a duty of 20 per cent. on telegraph and telephone poles and railroad ties.

WOOL, WOOLENS, AND AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

The woolen schedule as it left the House was amended in only two or three particulars by the Senate, and these two or three particulars were necessary to make the bill in all of its provisions logical. It will be remembered that we lost in the House two amendments that were offered by the Committee on Ways and Means as to worsted yarns and worsted cloths. They were lost by a very small vote. That side of the House voting solidly against the amendments, with a few on this side, gave, when the House was not full, a majority against the committee amendments.

As I stated then, the rates proposed by the committee were necessary, and the Senate, when the bill passed to its consideration, immediately accepted those rates. With these exceptions the wool and woolen schedules are precisely as they passed the House of Representatives.

I beg to say in passing that the rates given upon wool and woollens are assuredly protective. They correct the wrong against these industries inadvertently committed in the tariff of 1893. They will help every farmer of the country who owns sheep, and will enable the manufacturers of woolen goods to better compete with their foreign rivals. This schedule has the hearty approval of the National Wool-Growers' Association and of the several State associations throughout the country.

And, Mr. Speaker, that is entirely true also of the tobacco schedule. In the cotton schedule there were some few changes, none of them, however, very important. They will be noticed by gentlemen who have the bill before them. With these exceptions the rates which passed the House have been maintained by the conferees, and are so reported.

As to agricultural products, to which the Committee on Ways and Means and this House gave very careful attention, this bill has given for the first time to agriculture distinctively a place in the tariff. All of the rates, I believe with one single exception, that were fixed by the House were either adopted by the Senate, or, if not adopted by the Senate, the Senate conferees yielded to the House rates.

The duties on agricultural products have been increased, and the same meed of protection has been afforded the farm as the factory. These rates were fixed after the fullest consultation with the representatives of the farming interests of the country, whose voice almost for the first time in the history of tariff legislation has been heard and heeded in the House of Representatives.

On manufactures of flax there was a very wide difference between the Senate and the House. The House, as gentlemen will remember, increased the duties upon flax and flax products to the end that we might inaugurate and establish a great industry in this country which would use our own fibers as well as foreign fibers, and we made the duties high enough, as we believed, to protect our people while they were engaged in establishing that industry. The Senate cut down the House rates in every particular, from the raw material up to the finished product. In conference a compromise agreement was reached very considerably above the Senate rates, although somewhat below the House rates, but sufficient, it is believed by the committee of conference, to enable our people at an early day to successfully and profitably manufacture all the coarser articles of flax that are so largely consumed in this country, and at no distant day manufacture the finer ones, which are now exclusively imported. This industry will require larger capital, and when established will furnish a larger demand for skilled and unskilled labor.

On silk, which is the next schedule, the rates of duty were made specific in the House bill, about equivalent to the ad valorem rate under existing law. The Senate struck out the provision fixing specific rates and substituted the old rate of 50 per cent. To that amendment the House conferees yielded concurrence.

The paper schedule is the next in order, and it is practically the same as passed by the House. Not a single important change, I believe, was made in that schedule except that we dissented from the provision of the Senate bill and gave to albumenized and sensitized paper a duty of 35 per cent., and also laid a duty on tissue paper.

SUGAR FREE.

On the sugar schedule, which is the one over which there was the most serious contention, the conferees, after a long struggle, finally reached an agreement. The House bill provided that all sugars up to and including No. 16 Dutch standard in color, of which I hold a sample in this bottle in my hand—that all sugars up to that line should be admitted free of duty, and provided also that all sugars above No. 16 should pay a duty of four-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

That was to compensate for the difference in the labor-cost of refining in this country and the labor-cost of refining in competing countries. It was in that shape that our bill went to the Senate. The Senate struck out No. 16 as the line of free sugar and inserted No. 13, which is the color of the sugar in the bottle which I now hold in my hand. The difference between these two sugars, No. 16 Dutch standard and No. 13, will be noticed by every gentleman present. The former is a yellow sugar fit for use, and the latter wholly without any domestic use. The Senate made No. 13 free, and provided that sugar above No. 13 up to No. 16 should be dutiable at three-tenths of a cent per pound, and all above No. 16 at six-tenths of a cent per pound.

The first great struggle was over this dividing line; the Senate insisting that free sugar should be limited to this color (No. 13), a sugar which could not be used for domestic purposes, and which is so impure that it never would go into anybody's family. The House, on the other hand, insisted that sugar should be free up to No. 16 Dutch standard, which is the sugar that we used in our boyhood, and which, in case of excessive prices for refined sugar, would serve as a regulator to keep down the price, and if necessary be freely used for domestic purposes. It was on this line that the greatest controversy arose. Finally the Senate conferees yielded and agreed that sugar up to and including No. 16 Dutch standard should be free. As I have already said, the House rate of duty upon sugar above No. 16 was four-tenths of a cent per pound. The Senate rate was six-tenths of a cent per pound, and we finally made a compromise rate fixing it at five-tenths of 1 cent per pound upon all sugars above No. 16, and an additional rate of one-tenth of 1 cent per pound upon all sugars coming from countries where an export bounty is paid to the domestic producer. That, Mr. Speaker, is the agreement that was finally reached between the conferees of the House and the conferees of the Senate on sugar.

I beg to call the attention of the House for a moment to the present law in relation to sugar. All sugar not above No. 13 Dutch standard, testing by the polariscope not above 75 degrees, pays a duty of 1.4 cents per pound under existing law. In the bill which passed the House of Representatives of the Fiftyeth Congress, commonly known as the "Mills bill," the duty upon all sugar not above No. 13 Dutch standard was fixed at 1.15 cents per pound. The duty under existing law upon all sugars above No. 13 and not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color is 2½ cents per pound. In the Mills bill it was made 2.2 cents per pound. All sugar above No. 16 and not above No. 20 Dutch standard in color is dutiable under existing law at 3 cents per pound. Under the Mills bill it was dutiable at 2.4 cents per pound. All sugar above No. 20 Dutch standard is dutiable under existing law at 3.5 cents per pound, and under the Mills bill it was dutiable at 2.8 cents per pound.

So, Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that up to and including No. 16 Dutch standard the report of the committee makes sugar absolutely free, and above that grade the conferees report a duty of five-tenths of 1 cent per pound, and one-tenth additional upon sugars of that grade from countries paying an export bounty. It is proper I should state as to countries paying an export bounty, that only 16 per cent. of that kind of sugar was imported last year. This leaves all the sugar of Great Britain and the British possessions, all the sugar of Cuba, above 16 Dutch standard, dutiable at five-tenths of 1 cent per pound. The sugars of France and Germany, Austria, Hungary, and Belgium would pay the additional one-tenth. It is believed that the burden put upon bounty-paid sugar imported here will influence the countries paying it to remove the export bounty, to the end that they may on equal terms compete with all other countries for this market.

PAINTINGS AND STATUARY.

Now, Mr. Speaker, upon the subject of art, the House placed paintings and statuary upon the free-list. The Senate restored the old duty of 30 per cent. and the conferees of the House and Senate have made art productions dutiable at 15 per cent.

BINDERS' TWINE.

One of the points of controversy between the House and the Senate was with reference to the article of binding-twine. The present duty upon binding-twine is 2½ cents per pound; the House bill made it 1½ cents a pound. The Finance Committee of the Senate raised our duty from $1\frac{1}{2}$ to $1\frac{1}{4}$ cents a pound and thus reported the bill to the Senate. The Senate after debate put binding-twine upon the free-list.

Therefore when we met in conference the Senate conferees insisted upon binding-twine being free, and the House conferees insisted upon the rate fixed by the House, a cent and a quarter a pound. After very long, patient, and full consideration of the whole subject, the conferees finally agreed to fix the duty at seven-tenths of 1 cent a pound.

Mr. GEAR. Is not that eighth-tenths of a cent less than the duty proposed by the Mills bill?

Mr. McKINLEY. I will state in this connection that the Mills bill made twine dutiable at 15 per cent. ad valorem, equivalent to $1\frac{1}{4}$ or $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound. I wish to say further that in my judgment the duty fixed in this report is wholly inadequate; the duty ought not to have been made so low as seven-tenths of 1 cent. The great cordage interests of this country that have been built up and are being built up have cheapened twine to the consumer, and they would continue to do so if not broken down by foreign competition. But it was necessary, Mr. Speaker, in order to reach an agreement, that mutual concessions should be made; concessions had to be made on both sides.

In every other respect the bill was reasonably satisfactory; and we felt that we could not afford to come back to this House with a disagreement upon this one item, when everything else was agreed upon in deference to the demand from one end of this country to the other for a revision of the tariff upon the lines of protection and in accordance with the declaration of the Republican party. So we finally agreed upon a duty of seven-tenths of 1 cent per pound on binding-twine. I indulge the hope, however, that a future Congress, having discovered that this duty has been fixed altogether too low, will give a duty which will at least compensate for the difference between the labor-cost in the competing countries and the labor-cost in the United States. This at least should be done, if for no other reason than to protect and defend our own labor, and to this the Republican party is unalterably pledged.

We concurred in the adoption of the provision as to reciprocity, passed by the Senate, known as the "Aldrich amendment," which empowers the President, in the event equal and reciprocal advantages are not accorded to us by those countries producing sugar and coffee and hides, to proclaim the fact, and it is made his duty to do so, in which event the duties proposed in the bill as to these several articles are to be the duties thereafter to be collected against such countries. That is to say, coffee and hides have been on the free-list by our laws for many years, and now it is proposed to make sugar free in the interest of our people and by way of encouraging reciprocal trade relations on the part of the countries producing these articles. If these countries give nothing in return for this, then the President shall proclaim the fact, and upon such proclamation the duties herein provided for sugar, coffee, and hides will be put in operation.

We show by this bill our disposition to admit sugar free into the United States. We have already shown by the legislation of the past our disposition to admit coffee and hides free, from which, so far as reciprocal advantages are concerned, there has been no equality. This provision is added to the bill in the expectation that it will induce sugar-growing countries, coffee-producing countries, in return for this concession to admit our agricultural products free. It is believed by distinguished leaders of our party, to whose judgment and statesmanship we have always given the greatest weight, that large advantages will come from this provision, and all of us indulge the hope that the fullest expectation in this direction will be realized.

INTERNAL-REVENUE REDUCTIONS.

As to the internal-revenue sections I only wish to say that the provisions of the House bill have in substance been maintained by the conference committee. It will be remembered that we reduced the tax upon tobacco and snuff from 8 cents, which is the rate under existing law, to 4 cents. The Senate struck out all of our internal-revenue provisions—every paragraph and every line. But we have been enabled, Mr. Speaker, to secure a reduction of the tax from 8 cents to 6 cents a pound—a reduction of 25 per cent.—upon tobacco and snuff. We yielded the 4-cent reduction and agreed to fix the tax at 6 cents, and have provided for a rebate upon all unbroken packages.

So far as concerns special licenses to dealers, special taxes, and all those vexatious and annoying restraints which have been put upon the tobacco-grower, the tobacco-dealer, and the tobacco-trader, we wipe them all out; and over 650,000 citizens of the United States who have been paying these vexatious little taxes will, after the passage of this bill, be relieved from their payment.

We have also provided, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers, the growers of tobacco, in every part of this country shall be immediately relieved from all taxation and all burdens. This provision goes into effect at once, so that hereafter if this bill should become a law the farmers of the United States will be as free to sell their tobacco unrestrained by internal-revenue provisions as they are free to sell their wheat or their cotton or any other product of the farm.

The bill is protective in every paragraph, and American on every page. It recognizes in its fullness the great economic principle which the Republican party has advocated so long, and which it holds so dear, and which has secured to this country an unexampled prosperity. This legislation is not an experiment; it has the approval of experience. Our present prosperity, our advance since 1860 in all that goes to make a nation strong and great and its people happy, contented, and progressive, bear testimony to the wisdom and patriotism of the great principle which underlies this bill.

So much has been said in the course of this debate here and elsewhere about export prices, claiming that the American manufacturer sells cheaper to the foreign trade than he does to the domestic trade, that I am induced to append hereto a statement prepared by the American Protective Tariff League which entirely disposes of the charge.

EXPORT DISCOUNTS—CHARGES AGAINST AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS REFUTED—FREE-TRADE JUGGLING EXPOSED.

The Australasian and South American, a leading export journal, says:

"An attempt has been made to sow seeds of discord and dissension between American manufacturers and the domestic purchaser. Certain newspapers, the foundation of whose inflated popularity lies in an unhealthy sensationalism, and who deal at wholesale in rumor and error, have been endeavoring to persuade American buyers of all kinds of goods that they pay more for them than the manufacturers are willing to sell them for abroad. To accomplish this result a juggling with figures was, doubtless, regarded as entirely legitimate, but we have good reason to believe that it will prove fruitless. American buyers know perfectly well that they are far and away the best customers the American manufacturer possesses, and that if any one is given an advantage they will benefit equally by it. Before they allow themselves to be led away into hasty condemnation of the manufacturing interests, they will, probably, inquire more closely into the matter and it will not take them long to discover that the entire sensation is founded on error and falsehood or a combination of both."

One of the stock arguments of free trade maintains that the markets of the world are essential to the prosperity of American industry, and that we can not have those markets so long as American labor and industries continue to be defended from foreign competition by a protective tariff.

The advocates of protection for American labor and industries have always maintained that by protection alone could it ever be possible for our manufactures to attain such magnitude and success as to permit their export to foreign countries in competition with the productions of foreign systems of labor.

The efforts now making by our manufacturers to force their way into foreign markets with their hardware and farm implements, and a great variety of other products, furnish complete proof of the validity of this argument for protection. They show conclusively that we are gaining rapidly in our power to compete with the low-paid labor of Europe without sacrificing the welfare of our working classes.

But it is alleged that the prices at which our American productions are offered to foreign buyers are lower than the prices at which they are quoted to buyers at home. The figures given in free-trade journals and speeches for comparison show that the prices advertised to foreign buyers are 5 to 50 per cent. below prices to American buyers. Inquiries among the manufacturers do not sustain this showing, but indicate that the home buyer gets in one way or another the same or greater advantages as the foreign buyer. Similar testimony is furnished by the exporters.

It may, however, be conceded that at times and under special conditions the foreign merchant may secure a special discount to offset some part of the cost of getting merchandise into foreign countries. The case of the Elgin Watch Company, quoted later on, shows how this may be done. But in this, as in other similar cases, the discount is not important and is for the merchant. The evidence is conclusive that the consumer abroad, in paying the original cost to the merchant, with profits and expenses added, uniformly pays a higher price than the American consumer.

The Engineering and Mining Journal explains how special export discounts may be made, not only without detriment to the domestic purchaser, but even to his pecuniary advantage:

"It would be unfair to say that our manufacturers should never make any difference between export and home prices, for it is evident they could afford to sell a surplus for export, even without profit, if they could get from the home market a living price, and by increasing production, which the foreign sales would permit, would reduce the cost of output. The home consumer is then interested in our manufacturers having a foreign outlet for their goods."

The American thus convincingly puts another case:

"If we offered the World a small fraction of a cent per copy above cost for 100,000 copies in excess of its usual issue, and satisfied it that we would so dispose of these copies by exportation as not to spoil its home market, it would embrace the offer eagerly, although it might be ruinous to sell its whole issue at that price. Nor would it admit that it was acting unfairly by its regular customers at home in making the bargain."

In a speech delivered in the House of Representatives, on May 9, the Hon. Geo. W. FITHIAN referred to a free-trade tract called Tariff Reform, published by the Reform Club, of New York, on April 15, containing lists of various manufactures, with prices attached thereto for "home market" and to "foreigners." The pamphlet in question is full of gross errors. Without exception, so far as investigations have gone, not one quotation of discount for "export" is greater than any respectable merchant can have for domestic trade. And in many instances the prices and discounts given are those at which the goods are freely offered for sale to small jobbers and large retailers throughout the United States. On page 65 of the tract is the following:

"The figures have been in every case obtained from the manufacturers themselves, and in most cases are based upon a comparison of three documents, the regular 'price-list,' the 'domestic discount sheet' to the trade, and the 'export discount sheet,' as furnished by each manufacturer."

Inquiry proves that the majority of the manufacturers of the goods in question have never been approached.

Said one of the most extensive New York dealers in all the articles mentioned after perusing the speech of Mr. FITHIAN, and an examination of Tariff Reform:

"I can only say that when I am unable to buy at less prices than stated in that list I shall have to give up shop. Why, there is not an article mentioned that I can not sell cheaper than they are priced there. The list is too long to go through entirely. I am not a manufacturer. I buy for cash every article, both for this and our other stores. I handle as much stuff in a month as any ten of the biggest exporters combined handle in a year. Does it stand to reason that these little fellows can buy at the price I do? No, and they can not buy any better than I sell to my customers, and in most instances I can and do sell cheaper than those export commission men ever bought at. Take that cutlery list. I tell you there is no manufacturer of that name in the country. That firm, put down as a manufacturer, is a small commission house down-town. They send out catalogues all over South America, soliciting orders, and they get some, too. Yet the trade papers publish them as manufacturers, and this is one of the firms that this lying pamphlet says it got its information from."

"I know who make every one of those knives, carry them all in stock, and sell them from 5 to 20 per cent. less than is quoted by this so-called manufacturer. Commence with the first on the list. That is the regular iron handle table-knife. They quote $10.70 per gross pair, 25 per cent. discount. The next is the best known table-knife in the country. It is numbered 1878 by everybody. This is listed at the same price. I am selling both of these now at $4.25 per single gross, 5 per cent. discount, and 2 per cent. ten days; 1 per cent. twenty days, and forty days, net. They are sold retail at 50 cents per dozen. Go into any retail store and you can buy them at that price. These are the closest cut knives of the lot. I am selling all these others at much less prices than those quoted by this imaginary manufacturer. And it is the same with all other goods. Of course small buyers and retailers can not do as well as I can. Neither can they in any other country. But if there is an exporter who can go in and buy the same quantity lots as I do, he can buy just as cheap, but he can not do any better. Come in next week and I will go through the whole business and show what these free-traders are telling is wholly untrue."

The above is the verbatim statement of one who knows whereof he speaks, and whose veracity is unquestioned.

Acting on the advice given above, a boy was sent into a city hardware store and instructed to purchase one dozen table-knives, 1878. On application the clerk, without remark, handed the goods, with bill for 50 cents. They, and recompiled invoice, can be seen at any time on application at the office of the Economist.

The Miller Brothers' Cutlery Company, Meriden, Conn., are the largest pocket-cutlery and steel-pen manufacturers in the United States. In an interview with Mr. William F. Rockwell, treasurer and manager, he states that he is prepared to permit a thorough examination of the books and accounts of his company, which will prove that, so far as they are concerned, the statements made are false in every respect. He supplemented his verbal remarks with the following communication:

"MILLER BROTHERS' CUTLERY COMPANY,
Meriden, Conn., June 12, 1890.

"DEAR SIR: I beg to say that this company has never sold cutlery or pens for export at a lower price, or given a greater discount, than for home trade. All statements to the contrary are unqualifiedly false.

"WM. F. ROCKWELL,
Treasurer and Manager."

The principal manufacturers of table cutlery, located in the States of New York, Connecticut, and Massachusetts, positively confirm the statements made above, and prove their truth by the daily entries in their books. They state that not only do they not give extra discount for export, but that prices have been brought down to so low a point, by foreign and domestic competition, that although they are desirous to foster and build up an export trade, they are utterly unable to quote lower than for the home market, and never do so.

When a member of Congress, assuming the truth of the false statements of Tariff Reform and the New York World, says: "Forty-five per cent. is put upon agricultural implements for the purpose of protecting the manufacturer, and I say that it has protected the manufacturer so effectively that he is now able to go into the unprotected markets of the world and sell for one-half to the foreign consumer or user of agricultural implements that he sells to the American farmer," he must know that he is doing an injustice to his fellow-citizens.

He has undoubtedly read the statement of the Mail and Export Journal—the best authority on the subject:

"The truth of the matter is just this: The quotations named, as taken from the foreign price-current, are for the wholesale or jobbing trade, and not for the foreign consumer, the latter being required to pay as much for the goods which he buys from the dealer in his own country as the latter deems sufficient to reimburse him for the cost of importation, with his profit added."

The World copied from the American Mail and Export Journal the pictorial advertisement of the Ann Arbor Agricultural Company's machinery, with the trade prices of the several items. The World also printed on the same page pictures of the same machinery with prices taken from the Prices Current, a separate publication designed for foreign dealers. The former was represented as an advertisement for American farmers and the latter for foreign farmers. Neither the Journal nor the Prices Current is intended for farmers and neither circulates in this country. They are both printed expressly for foreign circulation. Proof of this may be found in Tariff Reform's "Protection's home market," page 63, and in the journals themselves.

That the prices advertised in the prices-current of these trade journals are wholesale prices is evident from the fact that the articles are quoted by the dozen, gross, etc., always in quantities not purchased by retail buyers, except in the case of large machines or implements always quoted and sold single. The Australasian and South American and the American Mail and Export Journal both affirm that the prices they quote are for the wholesale trade. The correspondence of the Engineering and Mining Journal with S. L. Allen & Co. shows that the prices given in its prices-current are also for wholesale trade.

The methods of the World, and others who have led this attack on our manufacturers, will be clearly seen in the correspondence produced in the Senate on September 10, between the Engineering and Mining Journal and S. L. Allen & Co., whereby the former solicited their advertisement. Frans W. Elkington, manager of the export edition of the Engineering and Mining Journal, wrote to S. L. Allen & Co. on November 12, 1888:

"We take a personal interest in every advertiser, and by keeping ourselves fully posted by letter with the requirements of the importing houses we are enabled to put advertisers in direct and immediate correspondence with houses who may become large buyers."

Later this letter came:

"27 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK, November 26, 1888.

"GENTLEMEN: Would you kindly let us have the use of your smallest cuts of plows and cultivators, etc., together with list prices and discounts? We want them to use in our illustrated price-lists for the benefit of importing houses abroad, and at no expense to you.

"Yours, very truly,

"THE ENGINEERING AND MINING JOURNAL (EXPORT EDITION),
FRANS W. ELKINGTON.

"Messrs. S. L. ALLEN & Co.,
127 Catharine street Philadelphia, Pa."

After the Reform Club's expert and the World had published their slanderous "revelations," Messrs. Allen & Co. sent the following letter:

["S. L. Allen & Co., patentees and manufacturers of agricultural implements.]

"PHILADELPHIA, June 10, 1890.

"GENTLEMEN: As you have doubtless seen the article in the New York World in which they claim that the prices which you quote on our goods in your Engineering and Mining Journal are retail, if you continue to quote our goods, will you please change the heading in such a way that there can be no misunderstanding as to the fact that the prices named are to the trade only? We do not think there has been any misunderstanding on this point, but the World has seen fit to raise the issue, and we do not feel that there should be the slightest chance for doubt in the matter.

"Yours very truly,

"S. L. ALLEN & CO.

"SCIENTIFIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Post-office box 1833, New York, N. Y."

To which they received this reply:

"THE ENGINEERING AND MINING JOURNAL,
27 Park Place, New York, June 12, 1890.

"GENTLEMEN: In answer to yours of 10th, the prices I name of yours are correct. The New York World, of course, used what they considered helped their article. At the head of the 'prices-current' we print 'Discounts are for export only,' in large type, as you will notice, thus showing that the prices are not retail prices."

"Yours very truly,

"FRANS W. ELKINGTON.

"Messrs. S. L. ALLEN & Co.,
Philadelphia, Pa."

Even with this the firm was not satisfied, and wrote again:

["S. L. Allen & Co., patentees and manufacturers of agricultural implements.]
PHILADELPHIA, June 17, 1890.

"GENTLEMEN: Replying to your favor of the 12th, would say we are aware of all you state, and that it is your intention as well as ours that the discounts named are for export trade abroad, but it is not so stated in so many words, and we do not want to have any possible chance for misunderstanding, and would therefore ask that you modify the heading in such a way as to leave no possible room for doubt that the prices named are not export retail prices, but prices to the export wholesale trade.

"ENGINEERING AND MINING JOURNAL,
27 Park Place, New York, N. Y."

The above correspondence satisfactorily explains the studied ambiguity of the Engineering and Mining Journal's letter to the World, wherein it tried to confirm the latter's contention that the prices quoted were retail. The Journal did not care to risk its reputation for common honesty by declaring that the prices were retail, but betrayed its desire to do so when it said:

"Prices quoted by us are, as you will notice, at the head of the first column 'for export only,' and the prices therein given are the prices at which every foreign subscriber can buy in this market. It stands to reason that orders for farm implements are frequently for one only. If to buy one machine is retail trade then these foreign prices are retail prices."

"For export only" the Journal had defined as "showing that the prices are not retail prices" (letter June 12 above), and according to its letter of November 12, 1888, its foreign subscribers are "houses who may become large buyers." Nor is "to buy one machine retail trade" necessarily. Thousands of single articles are ordered by wholesale dealers in emergencies or as samples, but the transactions are not, therefore, retail sales.

The following letter should remove any doubts that may exist as to the real facts in the controversy over the much-quoted prices of S. L. Allen & Co.'s goods at home and abroad:

["S. L. Allen & Co., patentees and manufacturers of agricultural implements.]
PHILADELPHIA, May 24, 1890.

"DEAR SIR: We are to-day in receipt of copy of your issue of May 14, calling attention to your article headed 'War on the farmers.' Prominent mention is made in this article of our goods, and as the statements are either willfully or through ignorance so entirely false, we ask that as a matter of simple justice to ourselves you publish in your next issue this letter, in order that the misstatements may be corrected, although we are well aware that this will not repair the injury done to us.

"1. We deny in toto that our prices to the domestic trade for the same quantity of goods are higher than to the export trade.

"2. We deny in toto that we sell single machines at retail to the foreign purchaser as low as we sell at wholesale to the domestic buyer, or any lower than we do to the domestic customer under similar circumstances.

"3. We pronounce as absolutely false the statements that the discounts which you quote on our goods are quoted to the retail buyer abroad. They are trade prices, and are never knowingly quoted to anybody not in the trade.

"4. We deny that our seed drill is ever quoted at $0.30 to the retail trade abroad.

"5. We deny that our combined drill, rake, and plow is ever knowingly quoted to the foreign retail trade at $0.30.

"6. We deny that our Fire Fly wheel hoe and plow is ever quoted at $3.50 to the retail buyer abroad.

"7. We deny that our Fire Fly hand plow is ever quoted at $1.75 to the retail trade abroad.

"8. We deny that we are now advertising to sell abroad at retail cheaper than we sell at home at wholesale, or as cheap.

"9. Under the heading 'Cultivators protected 45 per cent.' you give two columns of prices, one purporting to be price in the home market for a large lot at wholesale, and one column purporting to give retail prices abroad. We pronounce both figures absolutely incorrect. Instead of quoting the domestic wholesale price, you quote domestic retail prices, and compare them, not with foreign retail prices, but with foreign trade prices. The injustice is so flagrant that we do not think it needs any argument on our part to substantiate it, and we trust you will place these facts before your readers in order to disabuse them of the false impressions which your article may have created.

"Yours very truly,

"EDITOR NEW YORK WEEKLY WORLD,
New York City."

This proof of the unscrupulous methods of the free-traders is confirmed by the following candid statement from the American Mail and Export Journal:

"Some of the newspapers of the United States, notably the New York World, allege that certain American manufacturers and advertisers in the American Mail and Export Journal have been quoting prices for machinery and other goods for export at figures which are from 25 to 50 per cent. under the prices quoted to the domestic trade. The statement made by the World is disingenuous and misleading, particularly in the case of the Ann Arbor Agricultural Company, which is specially referred to.

"The truth of the matter is just this: The quotations named, as taken from the foreign price-current, are for the wholesale or jobbing trade and not for the foreign consumer, the latter being required to pay as much for the goods which he buys from the dealer in his own country as the latter deems sufficient to reimburse him for the cost of importation, with his profit added. It can be readily seen that when the goods delivered f. o. b. at New York, the prices must be considerably advanced when the articles reach the foreign buyer. It is on such misleading statements and evasions of the truth that free-trade journals base their arguments against protection and attempt to show conditions of trade which do not, in fact, exist."

The following letters and statements will explain themselves:

"RICHMOND, IND., September 2, 1890.

"DEAR SIR: In reply to your favor of August 29, we have to say that we make precisely the same figures to the foreign trade in our line of goods that we do to the domestic trade. We have never quoted any different discounts for cash to an inquirer from seaboard cities for export, than we do to other dealers all over the country for the supply of the domestic trade. There is, therefore, absolutely no foundation, as far as we are concerned, in the representation made by some that manufacturers make a different price for the export trade from that which is given to the domestic trade.

"Our Mr. Scott, while in England a few years ago, found the price of a complete steam outfit, without self-stacker, at an English manufactory to be $400, or about $2,000, and this price was actually paid by the owner of one visited by him. The same outfit could be sold in America for $1,600. The capacity of the English outfit was found to be about 300 bushels per day, on an average. The American outfit, sold at the price above named, could thrash 1,000 or 1,200 bushels per day, and would easily average 900 bushels per day. This comparison very clearly indicates that the American farmer buys his thrashing machinery cheaper than the English farmer, or the farmer on the Continent that buys the English machine, while the American machine will average three times as much as the English machine.

Yours truly,

"MOLINE, ILL., September 1, 1890.

"DEAR SIR: We have your letter of August 23, and advise you that we have already given the subject some consideration.

"We hand you herewith copy of our letter to the Farm Implement News in regard to this question, which that paper published, and which sets forth fully our position and ideas in regard to the controversy brought up by the free-traders on this subject of foreign prices.

"So far as our own knowledge and business go, their assertions are utterly without foundation, and we will cordially second any attempt to disabuse the minds of the farmers in regard to such fallacies.

"Trusting that this will give you the information desired, we remain, yours truly,

"DEERE & COMPANY,
"Per C. H. POPE, Assistant Secretary."

[Extract from letter above referred to.]

It is true of several of the countries named that the implements we manufacture are peculiar and do not themselves compare with the implements we make for this country. In cases of special implements the price is always higher, of course, than on our regular lines. In some cases, also, our foreign prices on regular goods are higher than our domestic prices. We can not recall an instance where they are lower.

We also believe that as a universal rule the retail prices in foreign countries are considerably in advance of the corresponding retail prices in our own country. This is of necessity so, for the reason that freights to foreign countries and duties where implements are taxed in this way increase the wholesale price, and the consumer must pay proportionately.

The fact that our foreign trade is increasing is good evidence that foreign merchants are not selling our goods at less than cost with freight added.

Some people in this country seem to be exerting themselves to convey false representations to our farmers, and giving them to understand that present prices are high, unjust, and exorbitant, when, as a matter of fact, never in the history of the world could agricultural implements, especially plows and cultivators such as we manufacture, be bought so cheaply as to-day. Never would the produce of the farmer bring him so much in plows and cultivating implements as to-day, even with the low price of produce considered.

Mr. A. B. Cohn, of the A. B. Cohn Company, manufacturers of agricultural implements, 197 Water street, New York, made the following unreserved statements as to discounts in the agricultural implement trade:

"We have been twenty years in the business, and our experience has been that goods are sold in this country as low if not lower than they are sold for export, with this exception, export buyers pay cash or give a letter of credit on London which we sell here on the day the goods are delivered on board, and get cash for it. This gives them a slight discount, but domestic buyers at all times can obtain the same discount by buying on the same terms, that is by paying spot cash.

"Domestic dealers at all times can obtain as good terms in the agricultural implement trade as can be obtained by buyers for export."

When asked whether agricultural implements were supplied to retail purchasers in foreign countries at wholesale rates, Mr. Cohn said:

"There is no such thing as a retail trade, in foreign countries, which we know anything about. We do not sell $100 worth of goods abroad at retail in a year. No manufacturer does that kind of business. The foreign consumer buys of the dealer abroad just as the consumer in this country does.

"A single plow ordered by a South American farmer would cost more than half a dozen plows obtained in the ordinary way."

Mr. Cohn declared that he stood ready to prove the above general statements by reference to a hundred invoices of domestic and foreign sales as they are recorded on his books.

During the recent discussion in the Senate regarding export discounts, the following letter was submitted by Senator ALDRICH:

[Chattanooga Plow Company, manufacturers chilled plows, plow repairs, cane-mills, evaporators and furnaces. Newell Saunders, president; C. D. Mitchell, secretary and treasurer.]

"CHATTANOOGA, TENN., August 23, 1890.

"DEAR SIR: Your inquiry of the 21st received. Our foreign trade is with Mexico. Prices on implements in the United States are governed by cost and competition between manufacturers. Foreign prices are our home prices plus the difference in freight and cost of conducting business. Our net prices on plows, cane-mills, and everything we make, free on board cars at our factory, are precisely the same to home and foreign customers. But the prices to farmers abroad are always higher than to farmers in the United States.

"Chattanooga cane-mills, which we sell here for $24, $36, and $48, cost delivered in the city of Mexico $72, $96, and $144, and are retailed there at $100, $150, and $200.

"Chattanooga plows, on which the proportion of freight to cost is not so great, we price retail as follows:

Number—	United States.	Mexico.
32.....	$4.00	$5.00
33.....	6.00	12.00
34.....	8.00	16.00
35.....	9.00	18.00

"After deducting the discount on Mexican money this leaves the Mexican farmers paying an average of 75 per cent. more for their implements than our home farmers pay.

"NEWELL SAUNDERS,
"President Chattanooga Plow Company.

"NEW YORK, June 26, 1890.

"DEAR SIR: Is it or not true that Messrs. George A. Clark & Bro., of this city, are selling their spool cotton cheaper for export to South America or elsewhere than it can be bought for even in the largest quantities for home consumption? I ask this question for the reason that an acquaintance of mine had an order for South America filled by them at a price some 10 per cent. less than is quoted to home buyers. A reply through the columns of your valuable journal will settle a question about which there has been some dispute.

"Yours truly,

"J. T. WOOLSEN."

"NEW YORK, June 30, 1890.

"In reply to letter signed J. T. Woolsen, we have only to say that we have only one price for our 'O. N. T.' spool cotton, and that we have never sold one spool of our thread for export for less than we sell our American customers.

"Yours truly,

"To the Editor of the World:

"Having sold quite a number of plows within the last few years, your article in the Weekly World a short time since, comparing prices, domestic and foreign, attracted my attention and caused me to compare notes with the most successful agent for agricultural implements in this country, and we agree from our actual experience that your statements in regard to prices are absolutely false in every particular.

"The Advance plow, for instance, has never retailed here for more than $12.50. No mower sells for more than $50—most of them for $40.

"The Fire Fly is furnished wholesale for $1.50 to $2.

"And so on through the whole list, as far as we are acquainted with the goods.

"Now, as I suppose a great newspaper like the New York World would not want to injure honest manufacturers and dealers by publishing downright falsehoods, would it not be the proper thing to explain the fact that you have been duped for political purposes? You simply do not understand the business of buying and selling machinery.

Under the above heading the World publishes a postal card informing that enterprising publication of a purchase made by the writer thereof of a "hay tedder" at much less than the price the World says the article is sold to foreigners, and but a little more than half the price the World says the American farmer is forced by the "protective ring" to pay. The card reads as follows:

"68 BRIDGE STREET, AMSTERDAM.

"War on the farmer. Just bought a hay tedder the past week for $25 which you represent as selling to farmers at $45, while the foreigner could buy it for $30.

"Now, if all the reading matter in the World is as correct as about the hay tedder, the less we farmers have to do with your paper the better it will be for us.

"DEAR SIR: If the tariff is for the benefit of the laborer and not the manufacturer, why is it that Elgin watches can be purchased cheaper in Canada and other countries than at home?

"N. H. FAIRBANKS."

The above was sent to the Elgin Watch Company. We append their reply:

"CHICAGO, August 15, 1890.

"DEAR SIR: We are manufacturers only of watch movements, not watch cases or the complete watch, as would be inferred from the reference made by the correspondent from Kansas City. The jobber in Canada pays 5 per cent. more for our merchandise than the jobber in this country. These are the conditions: There being 10 per cent. duty on American-made movements, we allow the Canada jobber an extra 5 per cent. for the purpose of placing our goods there upon such a basis that they can meet competition with movements of foreign manufacture.

"As to the prices of our movements in other foreign countries, as in case of Australia, they are sold there to the jobber and retailer at the same prices they are in this country, with carrying charges, insurance, and duties added.

"We should like to hear the correspondent from Kansas City state why the Elgin watch is cheaper in foreign countries than at home. He simply makes the assertion without the explanation.

"DEAR SIR: Our trade with foreign countries is limited to Manitoba and the Argentine Republic, and from both of those countries we obtain a higher price than we do from our home customers; and when the purchaser in the Argentine has paid his dealer for customs, freight handling, and commission or profit, his threshing outfit costs him over twice as much as a similar rig would cost a farmer in the United States.

"We do not know of a single manufacturer of farm implements who does not get more money out of the goods shipped to foreign countries than he does out of an equal amount sold in the United States.

The Farm Implement News, of Chicago, says on this subject:

"It is surprising that a prominent American newspaper should betray such dense ignorance; for it is well known that American implements are sold to foreign farmers at much higher prices than to American farmers. We have frequently called the attention of our readers to this fact; but, in order to show more clearly the difference, we will quote the retail prices on the following machinery and implements, giving highest figures for all sections east of the Missouri River:

"Twine binders, standard size, retail, United States, about $145; England, $225; France, $240; in Italy and other countries at still higher prices.

"Mowers, standard size, retail, United States, about $50; in England, $70 to $80; in France, $80 to $90.

"Sulky hay-rakes, retail, United States, $18 to $25, according to size and quality; same hay-rakes in France, $40 to $50; nearly as high in England.

"Hay presses, steam power, retail, United States, $450; in England, $750; in France, $800.

"Hay presses, horse power, standard reversible style, retail, United States, $285; in France, $500; in Argentine Republic, about $560.

"No. 40 Oliver plow, with wheel and jointer, retail, United States, $14; in England, $16 to $18; in other foreign countries still higher. Other plows and other makes of plows are sold abroad at proportionate advances over home prices.

"Grain drills, nine-hoe, retail, United States, about $60; in France and Italy, $140.

"In this way we might go through the whole list of agricultural implements exported to foreign countries. In every case the exported implement brings higher prices abroad."

"DEAR SIR: We receive from 10 to 20 per cent. larger prices for machines we send out of the country than we receive for those we sell here, which is the fact, though our machines for our foreign trade are some heavier than for the home market.

"There is no country in the world that buys any kind of agricultural machinery as cheaply as the Americans buy such machinery, and it is against a member of Congress's intelligence and integrity to get up in Congress and make a statement in conflict with this fact; he ought to be sent home and to school or to the work-house for doing it.

WALTER A. WOOD,
President Walter A. Wood Mowing and Reaping Machine Company.

HOOSIC FALLS, N. Y."

The Cleveland Leader of May 14, referring to an article in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, said:

"A more false and contemptible attack on American manufacturers was never published. It is absolutely atrocious in its abominable perversion of the truth. The only possible apology for such misstatements that can be offered is to plead a degree of ignorance that absolutely unfits the author for discussing any public matter.

"The Engineering and Mining Journal of May 3 did contain nineteen columns of matter, not advertisements, descriptive of manufactured articles suitable for export, with the list of prices thereof and the 'discounts for export only.' It was a little scheme of the Journal to promote foreign trade, and manufacturers were invited to make use of the Journal's columns for that purpose free of charge.

"On the basis of the statement that the discounts are 'for export only,' the Plain Dealer recklessly and wickedly—for ignorance is not justification where the facts were so easily ascertainable—asserts that it is proposed to sell these goods to foreigners at prices 25 to 70 per cent. less than they are sold to Americans; in other words, that American farmers and other home consumers are charged this difference above what foreigners are asked to pay with the retailers' profits and percentages on the excess added. It is amazing that any one should believe such a thing possible, much more so to publish it without careful investigation. How plain a tale shall put that free-trade falsehood down our readers may now see.

"A representative of the Leader yesterday called upon one of the most prominent hardware and agricultural implement dealers in the city, and showing him the article in the Journal, asked him to state what discounts were allowed to him by the manufacturers of the identical articles described. This merchant is a Democrat and a 'tariff reformer,' and the Plain Dealer can have his name, but not for publication, if it desires to investigate the accuracy of the statements to follow. The figures to be given may also be verified by calling on any local dealers in the articles mentioned. The list of articles compared was very large, but we shall confine the comparisons here made mainly to those named in the Plain Dealer.

"In the Journal a manufacturer of steel and malleable iron garden rakes offers them at a discount of 70 per cent. 'for export only.' The same manufacturer sells them to the Cleveland dealer at a discount of '70 and 5,' equivalent to 7½ per cent. off. He offers scythes 'for export only' at '40 and 10 off,' equivalent to a discount of 40 per cent., and to the Cleveland dealer the same goods at '50 and 5 off,' equal to a discount of 52½ per cent. The same manufacturer offers the 'Chieftain' horse rake No. 1 at 40 off 'for export only,' while to the Cleveland merchant he allows '50, 10, and 2½ off,' a discount of 56½ per cent. from the list price. The discount on hatchets 'for export only' is 50 per cent., and to the American dealer '50, 10, and 5,' equal to 57½ per cent.

"On table-knives and shears the discounts offered are the same 'for export only' and to the home merchant. A manufacturer of feed cutters offers his 'No. 1,' with two 6½-inch knives at $18, 30 per cent. off 'for export only' and the Cleveland merchant buys the same cutter for $10 net. The manufacturer of grinding mills allows the home dealer 10 per cent. more discount than the foreign dealer. Barn door sheaves and hangers are offered 50 off 'for export only,' and 60 off to the home trade. The discounts on wrenches and vices are the same in both cases, and on lawn mowers also. 'For export only,' scoll saws are offered at 20 to 25 off, while the Cleveland merchant is allowed 25 to 30. The discount on nails and tacks is 10 per cent. more to the home than to the foreign dealer. But there is no need of further extending the comparisons. In not a single case in the whole list is a larger discount offered 'for export only' than to the American dealer, and in most cases the latter is allowed a larger discount than the foreigners."

Having demonstrated the falsity of the charge that American manufacturers sell agricultural implements abroad more cheaply than to our own people, it is proposed to go further and show that there is neither inducement nor necessity for them to do so. United States Consul H. J. Dunalp, in his latest report from Breslau, Germany, says he attended the annual exhibition of agricultural machinery held in Breslau last June. Five American firms were represented on this occasion whose retail prices on their implements plainly prove that they are higher abroad than at home.

Every farmer will see the moment his eye falls upon them that they are from 25 to 100 per cent. higher than the prices of similar articles in this country:

Prices of American machines in Germany at retail.

McCormick's reaper and binder, complete	$288.00
McCormick's self-raker, complete	144.00
McCormick's mower, 5-foot cut	115.00
Wood's reaper and binder, complete	276.00
Wood's self-raking reaper, complete	144.00
Wood's self-raking reaper, light	132.00
Wood's mower	96.00
D. M. Osborne & Co., self-raking reaper	144.00
Deere & Co., 12-inch plow, with rolling cutter	16.25
H. Deere & Co., riding plow	62.40
Acme harrow	40.08
Philadelphia lawn mower, 14-inch cut, 8 inches high	16.80
Philadelphia lawn mower, 16-inch cut, 8 inches high	19.20
Philadelphia lawn mower, 16-inch cut, 4 inches high	14.40

The report shows that American farm machinery commands a higher price abroad than that of England or Germany. Both the latter are much higher than our own at home prices, but the superior quality of American implements secures to them their commanding place in the markets of the world. Similar testimony will be found in the consular reports from other countries.

During the recent Senate debate Senator Hisecock, of New York said: "Mr. President, I have examined with great care the charges that have been so confidently made by Democratic newspapers, and reiterated on the floor of the Senate, that American manufacturers were selling their goods to foreign dealers and consumers, offering them freely at the large discounts given from the prices at which the same goods were offered to the same class of American dealers and consumers. The misunderstanding, if it is that, and not an attempt to falsify and deceive the public, is occasioned by the fact that the retail price-lists, less the discounts, are given as the cost of the goods to foreign jobbers (there is no foreign retail trade) and the retail price-lists without discounts as the cost to the American jobbers, when the most casual investigation would have satisfied Senators on the other side that equal or greater discounts were given from those retail prices to the American trade. It has been made a very material question.

"The charge, if true, would prove either that the manufacturers do not require the protection they have, or that on account of a combination among them they sold their goods in the domestic market at the enormous profits indicated by the large discounts to the foreign trade; for it is fair to assume that only in exceptional cases, where the manufacturer finds on his hands a surplus that he can not dispose of at remunerative rates, or through bankruptcy, goods are forced upon the market, would they be sold abroad except at a profit, and I concede that the charges made, if true, would be as trenchant against many customs rates now existing as they are vicious and even criminal. In debate, Senators upon the other side have hovered around and concentrated their forces around this point to launch their eloquent vituperations against the tariff question more than any other.

"It is a remarkable fact in this connection that in many individual instances, manufacturers charged with this great crime against American consumers—for if the charges were true it is a crime—have written to newspapers and gentlemen making charges explaining their methods of business and refuting the charges, and in no instance that I can recall have the writers received the benefit of their denials, but on the contrary they seem to call forth louder and more constant and specific assertions of their truth. I confess to surprise that Senators who should discuss this great economic question, basing their arguments upon facts and the logic of facts, have consented, as it seems to me, to descend to gross misstatements and to misrepresent honorable men in their efforts to excite prejudice and hostility to a great economic policy.

"In this discussion, sir, we can not be too careful—either side—in guarding against calling to our aid in support of our theories any matter that will not stand the highest crucial test in respect to its verity. I, sir, have nothing but commendation for a party leader in this debate who finds it necessary to supply his constituency with erroneous or incomplete statements to hold them in party lines upon this great issue that now divides the two great political organizations."

The charge that American farmers pay more for their implements than foreign farmers do has been shown to be false. Precisely the reverse is the case. They pay less; and this is the result of protection, which has encouraged and developed the production of such articles on a large scale at low prices in the United States. But protective legislation has gone still further, and now by the tariff bill of 1890 has completely defended American farm products against competition from the cheap lands and labor of foreign nations. The following comparison will be found interesting and conclusive:

Flax.	$20 per ton.	Free.	1 ct. per lb.
Plums and prunes.	1 ct. per lb.	Free.	2 cts. per lb.

This direct legislation in behalf of farmers has been supplemented by the silver bill, the protective effect of which is already seen in the advance of the prices of the great American staples—nearly 20 cents per bushel on wheat and 15 cents per bushel on corn, amounting in the aggregate to more than $250,000,000 on these two articles alone.

In conclusion, the American farmers, constituting nearly one-half of our population, have at last received the consideration they deserve. Under protective laws they are guaranteed against foreign competition. They are enabled to sell their crops at fair prices and to buy their implements and tools cheaper than they can be bought in any other country in the world.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Before the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] resumes his seat, I wish to make an appeal to him in behalf of gentlemen who represent on this floor the State of Louisiana. They have great and important interests involved in the result of this bill; and I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he would subserve a very liberal and just purpose if in his announcement to the House in reference to the order of this discussion he would provide that these gentlemen should have some part of the time.

Mr. McKINLEY. I understand the gentleman from Georgia to make that proposition with the idea that we are to divide the time equally.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Under the arrangement of which the gentleman has given notice there would be, of course, according to the usage, an equal division of time between the two sides of the House. But I want to suggest to the gentleman that such an arrangement would be unfair to this side, because we feel in honor bound to accord some of our time to these gentlemen who represent the sugar interest.

Mr. McKINLEY. But the gentleman from Georgia will remember that when I proposed to give his side three hours and a half the gentleman from Tennessee, as I understood, declined my offer.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. My friend from Ohio will remember that three of us on this side, who are members of the Committee on Ways and Means, were members with him of the conference committee; and if he holds us to the notice he has already given, and if each of us should occupy the hour which would be allotted to us, these gentlemen who represent the local interest chiefly involved in this bill would have no time at all.

And our reason for objecting in the outset was because of the fact that no adequate arrangement or provision, such as in our judgment ought to have been made, was made to hear those gentlemen before their interests were sacrificed.

Mr. McKINLEY. I do not understand the gentleman to mean that we should yield to those gentlemen in opposition to the bill?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will not the gentleman and his side of the House hear these parties or their representatives before they are subjected to this sacrifice?

Mr. McKINLEY. The gentleman has time to yield if he desires to do so. We have agreed to give you the larger proportion of the time. The gentleman from Georgia can yield.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The "gentleman from Georgia" is not in charge of the bill, while the gentleman from Ohio is and represents the majority side of the House. He controls the entire time. Is there not sufficient magnanimity at least on that side of the House to allow these gentlemen to be heard before their interests are destroyed?

Mr. McKINLEY. Why, Mr. Speaker, the Louisiana interests were heard the other day fully through the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PRICE], when he presented the whole case in the strongest possible manner. They were heard fully before the committee.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. At what time did that hearing take place to which the gentleman now refers?

Mr. McKINLEY. I refer to the hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. But the gentleman will remember that the gentleman from Louisiana had only five minutes or the floor.

Mr. McKINLEY. But it was all the time he asked for.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. And they ask now to be heard on the floor. This bill has come back in a shape to be acted upon, and before their interests are destroyed they ask to be heard.

Mr. McKINLEY. Very well; I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that I proposed to give that side of the House three and a half hours, provided the previous question was ordered at 6 o'clock. Gentlemen on that side objected. You could have given the gentleman the extra half hour which I agreed to give you.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. In justice to myself, I hope the gentleman from Ohio will permit me to say that the limited time occupied by Mr. PRICE, the five minutes, was made short in order that the bill might be facilitated for the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. McKINLEY. Now, if the gentleman from Georgia and his side of the House will consent that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at 6 o'clock we will give the extra half hour to gentlemen to present their claims. It is all in your own hands to determine the question.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. But the gentleman will give nothing if we do not surrender, as I understand it?

Mr. HAUGEN. Is there to be no reciprocity on that side at all? [Laughter.]

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. We are just trying to reach an agreement.

Mr. McKINLEY. Then will not the gentleman from Georgia give something to get time for his friends?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more to say. I simply appealed to the magnanimity of the gentleman. If he declines to entertain the appeal I can not do more.

Mr. McKINLEY. Why, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the gentleman from Georgia to say if I have not made an exceedingly fair proposition to him.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I want to tell the gentleman from Ohio that if he will not consent to a more just distribution of the time, in view of the interest involved, and to which I have referred, then I myself will accord, of the limited time at my disposal, an opportunity to these gentlemen to be heard.

Mr. McKINLEY. That is a matter entirely under the control of the gentleman.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. It is due to them to be heard, and the time ought to be given by consent of the House.

Mr. McKINLEY. I have asked that time should be given to them; I have asked that the order of business for this day by which the previous question shall be ordered at 6 o'clock may be so arranged as to give these gentlemen time. The gentleman from Tennessee has objected. Will not gentlemen now consent that the previous question be ordered at 6 o'clock? That will save an unnecessary waste of time; and the time thus saved can be used in the debate. I asked unanimous consent this morning that the reading of the Journal might be omitted, which would have saved a half hour more, which could have been accorded to the debate, but the gentleman from Georgia objected.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. But the gentleman from Ohio will pardon me. He knows all the time is at his command.

Mr. McKINLEY. Not at all.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman controls all the time for the balance of the session. He can do as he pleases with it. I have not a minute except what I get by his grace and consent. He ought not, therefore, to expect me to give the limited time which I may be able to control to gentlemen who will suffer by the adoption of this proposition. Why, even a criminal ought at least to be heard before he is condemned.

Mr. McKINLEY. We have heard these gentlemen, however, and I will remind the gentleman from Georgia again that when I asked unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Journal this morning objection was made by himself, and time was thus unnecessarily consumed. I propose to give thirty minutes if you will consent that the previous question be ordered at 6 o'clock. Nothing can be fairer.

Mr. WILKINSON. Will the gentleman from Ohio have the courtesy to answer one question? I would like to know by what authority—

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I want it understood that this does not come out of my time.

The SPEAKER. It comes out of somebody's time. [Laughter.]

Mr. COLEMAN. I hope it will not come out of mine.

Mr. McKINLEY. I do not want it taken out of mine.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. FLOWER], who is next entitled to the floor.

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Speaker, it is probably unnecessary to say, for the minority of this committee, that we non-concur in this cyclone stone-wall bill.

The reason why I call it a cyclone stone-wall revision is because out West they build their walls 4 feet high and 6 feet thick, so when the cyclone strikes them and they blow over they are taller than ever. So they have revised this tariff, in every schedule save one or two, higher than it is under the present law. They have attempted by it to restrict trade, to fix it so that the coast States can not trade with any foreign country; so that we can not get what we want from abroad which we do not produce and pay for in our agricultural products and manufactures; so that in the future we will need no shipping and have no flag upon the seas. The theory of the majority of the committee has been to so arrange the bill that between the thirty different nations with which this country trades there shall be no trade at all if they can possibly help it. That is their position in nearly every item of the bill.

In the limited time that has been given us to consider this and the hurry in which comparisons must be prepared, I have had only time to go through the several schedules and pick out perhaps one or two hundred items, not differing much in any particular in the raising of the rate from the three thousand and odd different articles taxed in the bill.

I have partly arranged a statement by which you can see, from a comparison of the present law with this proposed law how much increase there will be in the tariff duty, an increase of from 30 to 150 per cent. above the present law. I will print the table in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

 454. Jewelry, now 25 per cent., to 50 per cent.
 458. Leather for pianos, now 20 per cent., to 35 per cent.
 461 to 465. Manufactures of various articles increased in many cases over present rates.
 465. Masks, now 15 per cent., to 35 per cent.
 466. Matting, now 20 per cent., to specific rates.
 469. Slate-pencils, now 50 per cent., to 4 cents per gross, is believed to be a very decided increase.
 472. Umbrellas: Silk, etc., now 50 per cent., to 55 per cent.; other, now 40 per cent., to 45 percent.

In the foregoing tables the manufacturing schedules are all of them raised to a point which allows the manufacturers, or most of them, to make combines and fleece the people. It was the intention to place the rate so high that no combine between manufacturers could be defeated by the regulation of prices from foreign importation.

I have also examined the agricultural schedule, largely increasing the duty on wheat, cabbages, and all along the line; and the thought occurs to me, after hearing from the agriculturists in the committee, and the manufacturers also, and hearing it claimed by the majority of this House that raising these various schedules for the manufacturing industries would certainly cheapen the articles to the consumer—the thought occurred to me whether they did not want by these schedules to make the farmer poorer than he is. It was claimed by some of the farmers who appeared before our committee that work the best they could, cut their corners as only a farmer has to do, that at the end of the year all he could clear was a six-rail fence with the sheriff after him. [Laughter.]

It occurred to me, "Do they want to make the farmer poorer than he is now?" If their theory is right, that by raising the duty on these articles they cheapen them to the consumer, why will not the increased duty on barley, on wheat, on cabbages cheapen those articles for the farmer as well? If the theory is correct in one case it is right in the other. If it makes the farmer poor now it will make him poorer when he gets the full benefit of this protection that you give him.

Look this bill all over from one end of it to the other. I have given you a fair sample of it, as you will see; and the farmer will fail to find much relief in all these various schedules.

My honored friend, the chairman of this committee, expatiated largely on the question of free sugar below 16 Dutch standard. But that has a string on it. By the 1st of January, 1892, if the revenues are not sufficient to meet the demands of the Government—and there is not a sane man on the other side of the House who will deny that our revenues are all gone, and that if we had appropriated what we ought you would have had a deficit of $47,000,000 to-day—I say by the 1st of January, 1892, if it is thought necessary, the President may retaliate on those countries from which we get free coffee, tea, and hides by pulling the string and raising the duty to where it is now, nearly, on sugar; and tea, coffee, and hides, which are now free, may be placed on the dutiable list again.

But there is one bright spot in this bill for the Western Republican farmers. The majority have labored and brought forth binding-twine. They expected to label it on the start "free" binding-twine. What a boon that would have been to the Western Republican farmer. What a peroration the statesmen could have made in those Western States on free binding-twine! Why, you would have had these Republican farmers lifting up their eyes to heaven saying, "We thank God we are not as other people are. We believe in protection. We believe that all these different duties cheapen articles to the consumer; but as for binding-twine, we are a little in doubt, if you do not put that on the free-list we will down all you gentlemen in Minnesota and Iowa, and we will have our way about it whether or no."

On the other hand they whirl around to the South and they say, "Cotton-ties, 35 per cent.; now put them up to one-half cent a pound or to about 130 per cent. Double them up; give them the benefit of it in the South; try it on them. This duty on these cotton-ties will certainly cheapen them to you in time; but we have got tired of this Republican idea that it is going to cheapen binding-twine, and we do not want it, but we are willing it should be tried on the farmers of the South."

I can hear them singing:

From Greenland's icy mountains, from India's coral strand,
 Flow down those Southern rivers, light up their golden sands.
 Down in that Southern country let high protection come,
 But not out in the Western States, for that's to close to hom'.

[Laughter and applause.]

Now, I have searched through this bill for the relief promised, and I say that the Western men will expatiate upon this particular point of seven-tenths of a cent a pound on binding-twine, though it ruins 200,000 workmen and drives them out of employment in New York State and in New England.

The raw material of which binding-twine is made is taxed by this bill $33.50 a ton, and they leave them seven-tenths of a cent a pound duty to pay the difference in the wages between here and Europe, pauper Europe. They have fixed it in that shape. They know it is going to ruin them, but they do not care. They will ruin an industry by making even free binding-twine, for their constituents demand that the tax be put upon somebody else; and they put it on somebody else and take the benefit home to themselves. This seven-tenths of a cent a pound on binder-twine is just exactly like a diamond in a bushel of charcoal, the only relief from taxation the Western farmer has in the whole bill. It will serve for them to have something to talk about, and it will be talked about till their representatives are talked out of this Congress.

I do not feel prepared to-day (but others will follow me who are) to go into a detailed discussion of this bill all along the line. It deserves it and will probably get it; not so full as it deserves and not so full as it will get before the country. Permit me to make one allusion not connected with the bill: I saw the other day a speech blotted out of the RECORD, and the gentleman raised his hands almost to heaven and said that, while other of his speeches had sunk into the RECORD as rain-drops into the ocean, this one had sprung up and brought forth an hundred-fold. He said that twenty Southern districts were robbed of representation by this side of the House, and that he could not stand it, even if he had to "butcher" the Senate. He did not say that one of these was obtained by corruption. Mark that. Neither did the Speaker of this House in Maine, when he claimed that there were twenty seats stolen in the South, or thirty, as he said in Philadelphia—and I suppose it will be fifty before the end of this campaign—he did not charge corruption on one of them. He might have added that forty seats on their side of the House, if it were not for money, might be vacant to-day. He might have said that, but did not. They are holier than we.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied fifteen minutes.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire any one on his side to proceed now?

Mr. McKINLEY. No.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The gentleman who has just taken his seat has made a statement that I do not think ought to go unchallenged on the record: that forty seats on this side were purchased by money, or words to that effect. I think we owe it to this House not to allow such a statement as that to go in the RECORD unchallenged; and I would like the gentleman to specify what he means by that.

Mr. FLOWER. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the RECORD will show that I did not state what the gentleman from Iowa has said I did. I did say that if it were not for the use of money forty seats on the other side might be vacant. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. How many on your side? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOREY. How much did yours cost? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Iowa desire?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I move that the words of the gentleman be taken down. [Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. And that a committee be appointed to investigate and see how much seats did cost. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Words that the gentleman has uttered in debate?

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point that it comes too late; and I hope this does not come out of our time.

The SPEAKER. It comes out of somebody's time. The Chair would repeat that time can not be wasted without being lost.

Mr. FLOWER. How much time have I occupied?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied seventeen minutes, including this colloquy.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, at this stage of the bill now under consideration it may not be amiss, at the risk of some repetition, to remind the House that after a discussion of three or four days in the House it was passed under a special order, after six days more of debate, and was then sent to the Senate. In the Senate, which, under the Constitution, can not originate revenue bills, after proper consideration by the Committee on Finance, it was reported to the Senate and in due time underwent discussion for eight weeks. The result of the deliberation upon the bill by that body was embodied in over four hundred amendments. Those amendments contained various distinct propositions, some of which were favored even on the Republican side of this hall; but under another resolution, which the gentleman from Ohio, the honorable chairman of the committee [Mr. McKINLEY] proposed, the House was compelled to vote in solido upon the entire number of amendments proposed by the Senate after a discussion of two hours, one hour on each side. Under the vote taken on that resolution those amendments went into a conference between the two Houses. For ten days those amendments were under consideration in that committee of conference, although the House itself had been denied the opportunity for more than two hours' consideration of them before the bill was sent to conference.

The country knows nothing of what transpired between the conferees of the two Houses. Although a member of the conference committee, I scarcely know anything myself except that which is embodied in the report. I am not complaining of this. These Republican gentlemen had the right to confer among themselves before submitting their action to us and the country, but what I do complain of is that propositions which required for their discussion in the Senate eight weeks, and for their consideration in the conference between the two Houses ten days, we were allowed on this side only one hour to consider, and now, when the result of the conference is reported, we are notified that we are to be allowed only three hours for discussion. Of course, we can only protest. The process may commend itself to those who are the beneficiaries of the policy of protection, but to those who are its victims it looks more like the famous process of "addition, division, and silence."

I arraign this bill, Mr. Speaker, as a sectional measure, and in this connection I propose to speak of some of the aspects of the bill which affect my constituents.

Our constituents at the South, Mr. Speaker, are engaged in the production of that great staple which furnishes the bulk of our foreign commerce. The people who till the soil there and make the cotton do more days' labor in a year than the people who live in any other section of the Union. Their labors begin with the New Year and end only with Christmas, and they are engaged in a most useful employment, the production of that crop which is the basis for the reiment of all mankind. The price of that commodity is regulated not by the operation of any tariff laws or by any domestic influence or condition, but it is fixed on the basis of free trade in Liverpool and in competition with the labor of India, Egypt, and other countries. In return for that cotton which goes abroad, we receive those importations of merchandise from the duties on which is derived the chief portion of our revenue.

It would seem that those who are engaged in this industry are entitled, from those who lay the taxes at least, to some forbearance. Under the existing duty and a conspiracy which took advantage of it, the bagging in which the farmers of the South inclose their cotton before sending it to market cost them two years ago 12 to 14 cents a yard. The cotton itself they sold for less per pound than they paid for this coarse stuff, with which all are familiar. If our people could buy this bagging where they sell their cotton, without having it taxed at our custom-houses, they could procure it at less than 6 cents per yard. This bill takes off the duty on jute butts from which the bagging is made, and gives in addition to the manufacturers a duty of 1.6 cents per yard.

Binding-twine, which under the present law is dutiable at 2½ cents per pound, is taxed by this conference scheme only seven-tenths of a cent, with free raw material, although it is a far more expensive manufacture than cotton bagging. The lower tax is for the West and the higher tax is for the South. Both articles ought to be on the free-list.

Now, although the bill provides a drawback of 99 per cent. to the Standard Oil Company and others on all tin-plate imported and again exported in the form of cans and boxes, whether empty or filled, no such favor is allowed the farmer on the bagging which he might import from abroad.

Although I know that my friend from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] has hitherto differed with me on this subject, it may be nevertheless assumed that the cost of the bagging and ties is a tax on the planter, and that it is not, as it was once contended, sold at the same price at which the cotton itself is sold in the markets of the world.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR], chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and a colleague of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, made that concession during the last Congress, in a discussion between him and myself on this floor.

Now, let us advance, Mr. Speaker, to the question of cotton-ties. When the present tariff law was framed by a Republican Congress in 1882 or 1883 the gentleman from Ohio himself, then as now a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and, I believe, then as now a member of the committee of conference, passed on the subject of cotton-ties and assisted in fixing the law as it now is, which puts upon cotton-ties a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem. Why was that duty fixed at 35 per cent. ad valorem or, as I understand, about one-third of a cent a pound on this article of commerce? The gentleman acquiesced in it then; his party voted for it as a measure of justice to Southern planters; but now, when the conditions have changed so as rather to increase than diminish the necessity for justice to the farmers, he proposes to make that duty on cotton-ties three times as much as it is under existing law.

And it is to be remarked, Mr. Speaker, that these ties, even with the duty at 35 per cent., are still produced in this country, though they are worth on the other side but little over a cent a pound. The American manufacturers can, under the present conditions, still contribute a large proportion of these ties to the trade; it is an enormous bounty to them to give them three times the protection which they have been enjoying.

Mr. McCOMAS. If that cotton bagging is imported and put around cotton and the cotton is then sent abroad, can not 99 per cent. drawback be recovered on such imported bagging, if it can be shown to have been imported?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. No, sir.

Mr. McCOMAS. Why not?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Because there is no provision which allows it. The gentleman has an incorrect idea, derived, no doubt, from a paragraph of the bill which provides that on articles manufactured in this country the materials of which are imported and on which a duty has been paid there shall be a drawback of 99 per cent. of the duties paid on the materials. But the gentleman, on reflection, will of course see that provision will not apply to this cotton bagging under this bill.

Mr. HERBERT. The drawback is only paid to the manufacturer at any rate—not to the farmer in any case.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. It does not apply to this item; and the same thing is true of imported cotton-ties.

Now, in all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, I put it to the fair-minded men on the other side whether it is right to inflict this burden on a commodity which adds so much to our commerce and returns so much in the way of revenue to the Government on the traffic which comes back to this country in exchange.

Mr. ARNOLD. Is not every pound of bagging and of iron used in packing cotton paid for at the price of the cotton?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Oh, no.

Mr. ARNOLD. In the case of every bale of cotton sold in this country the bagging and the iron are paid for at the price of the cotton; there is no tare allowed in this country.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I regret that my friend has not hitherto studied the subject to which his inquiries relate.

Mr. ARNOLD. I have bought cotton, and have paid the same price for the bagging that I paid for the cotton.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I will ask my friend where is the price of cotton fixed?

Mr. ARNOLD. In New York; it fixes the price for the entire world.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. It is fixed in Liverpool.

Mr. ARNOLD. The price of the cotton of the world is fixed in New York.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I can not enter into a discussion with a gentleman who takes that position.

Mr. ARNOLD. What was the quotation of cotton yesterday in Liverpool and New York?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the price of cotton in New York is always fixed in this way: those who make the market there learn by cablegram what the price is in Liverpool at a given time; and they fix the price in New York by taking into consideration, first, the freight which must be paid in order to lay this cotton down in Liverpool and, secondly, the other regulations which enter into the price on the other side, and among those regulations is a provision which has become a usage there, that 6 per cent. is deducted for tare, imposed on account of the bagging and ties chiefly.

Mr. ARNOLD. How much higher is cotton in Liverpool than in New York to-day?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. If the gentleman [Mr. ARNOLD], who says he buys cotton, will consult his broker, he will find that the price in New York is always made on the basis I have stated. In every cotton market in the world the prices are fixed by the Liverpool quotations. There cotton from all the countries that produce it is offered for sale. There the bulk of our own cotton is sold. Even the grades by which the different styles of cotton are designated originated in that city.

Mr. ARNOLD. Where are "futures" sold—contracts for the future delivery of cotton? In Liverpool or in New York?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. We are considering actual transactions now, not "futures."

Mr. ARNOLD. They fix the price of future deliveries always, and those prices are fixed in New York.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Let me ask my friend a question or two before he departs.

Mr. ARNOLD. Certainly.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Do I understand the gentleman to insist that the price of cotton throughout the world is fixed by the price of cotton in New York?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is my understanding, sir.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. How long has the gentleman been engaged in cotton manufacturing?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, sir, I have been engaged in that sort of trade for a good many years.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. And that is the gentleman's opinion, after all his experience?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have always understood that the price was fixed in New York. The price of futures in cotton is fixed there, which governs the price of cotton throughout the world, as I understand.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Where is the price of wheat fixed?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am not familiar with wheat.

Mr. FORNEY. Nor with cotton, either, evidently.

Mr. ARNOLD. I think I am, so far as cotton is concerned.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. My friend may put duties on imported goods and in that way fix the price on this side of like American commodities. He may even, under the protection of this Committee on Ways and Means, put the price up on this side of the cotton manufactures which he produces himself. When it comes to fixing the price of the cotton which he procures from the farmers of the South, this Government is powerless; but the price of bagging and ties, and of everything else the farmers consume, including goods made out of the cotton which they produce, is enhanced by our laws. The gentleman [Mr. ARNOLD] is a manufacturer and is protected; the producers of cotton are only injured by your laws.

Mr. ARNOLD. Does the gentleman from Georgia mean to say that the cotton-grower pays for the bagging and ties himself?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I do.

Mr. ARNOLD. Is it not paid for by the cotton-packer?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I say it is paid for by the farmer—by the producer of the lint.

Mr. ARNOLD. The packer buys the lint and puts up the cotton.

Mr. FORNEY. The gentleman evidently knows nothing about the subject.

Mr. ARNOLD. The farmer does not have anything to do with it unless he is a packer himself, unless he packs his own cotton.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Why, there is a packing establishment on almost every large plantation.

Mr. FORNEY. Nearly every one of them has it. They pack their own cotton on the plantation and it is a part of the business of raising cotton.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. My friend from Rhode Island I know is ignorant of the subject of which he speaks. He knows nothing about this branch of cotton production at all, although he has for years been engaged in manufacturing the article.

Mr. ARNOLD. I beg pardon; perhaps I know as much as the gentleman himself.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman says that the cotton-planter has nothing to do with furnishing the bagging and ties; that the bagging and ties are furnished by an individual that he calls the "packer." Who is the packer?

Mr. ARNOLD. I mean those great concerns that buy the lint and bag the cotton and send it to market, and when they sell that cotton in the market to the world they sell the cotton-ties, bagging and all, at 1-4 or 12-4 cents per pound.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Does my friend know of a packer who does that? He says that he is in the trade and knows what he is talking about. Will he tell me the name of any such establishment? Will he give the name of a single "packer" who furnishes bagging and ties to the planter in that way? Give one name.

Mr. ARNOLD. Does the farmer carry his bagging and ties to the packer?

Mr. FORNEY. Why, he packs his own cotton.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The farmer buys the bagging and ties and packs the cotton on the farm, and then the cotton is sold to the gentleman from Rhode Island and other manufacturers.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; and at 10-4 cents and 12-4 cents a pound for the wrappings.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Then, will the gentleman abandon his error as to what he calls "packers?"

Mr. ARNOLD. Whoever packs it, I know that the price of cotton, which is 10-4 cents per pound to-day, is paid also for the bagging and ties.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. If the gentleman from Rhode Island knew anything of the business he and I could carry on a more intelligent discussion. But, frankly, I do not think my friend knows anything of the subject. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ARNOLD. The fact is the gentleman wants to get more for his bagging and ties than for the lint.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I hope my friend from Rhode Island will stand there for a few moments while I endeavor to make this matter plain to him. He no doubt desires to be fair, and I propose to treat him with perfect courtesy.

A bale of cotton contains about 500 pounds of lint and requires about six yards of bagging and five or six iron ties. Now, I want to ask the gentleman, suppose I go to his mill and offer him 500 pounds of lint without the bagging and ties, would he not give more for the lint naked and free from the incumbrances than for a bale of 500 pounds including the bagging, ties, and all?

Mr. ARNOLD. Certainly.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. As it is now plain that bagging and ties are not worth as much as cotton pound for pound, can not the gentleman understand the demonstration?

Mr. ARNOLD. I pay for the bagging and ties every time.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. But the gentleman has just admitted in effect that he regards the bagging and ties as mere incumbrances, and the result is that there is a sacrifice upon the farmer, which the gentleman himself has inflicted, and he does not seem to comprehend the operation.

Mr. ARNOLD. But I pay for these things.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I believe the gentleman does not even yet see it. But, Mr. Speaker, I have spent more time on this subject than I intended. I want to speak of another matter which my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ARNOLD] may better understand.

I desire now to consider the subject of sulphuric acid. The Committee on Ways and Means proposed to take that item from the free-list, although it is the acid by means of which all our commercial fertilizers are made. I had the honor to submit some remarks on the subject here when the bill was first under consideration, but no entreaties of mine could avail to induce our Republican friends to change their purpose. A large proportion of the cotton grown in Georgia is produced by the addition of fertilizers to our soil. The proposition of the bill as it passed the House was to put a tax of a quarter of a cent on this acid, of which 1,000 pounds are necessary to make a ton of fertilizer, and if the duty increased the price to its full extent, it would amount to $2.50 on every ton. It went to the Senate in that shape in spite of every argument that could be made.

The Senate seemed to have a better appreciation of the arguments against a tax on fertilizers and offered an amendment which provides that sulphuric acid which, at the temperature of 60° Fahrenheit, is of the specific gravity of 1.380, and when used for agricultural purposes, shall be free. But I wondered why this long and technical designation of the sulphuric acid which is made free for agricultural purposes should be put into the bill. As the inquiry went on I found that the manufacturers were complaining and saying that that grade of sulphuric acid would be unfit for their business. In order that I might not be misled by an interested party and that I might not assume to understand a matter of which I am ignorant, I applied to the Department of Agriculture for information on the subject. I called the attention of the Secretary to this phraseology in the bill and stated that the manufacturers said this form of sulphuric acid was useless for their purposes. I asked the opinion of the Department, and this is the answer:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, OFFICE OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY.
Washington, D. C., September 26, 1890.

Sir: In reply to your inquiry concerning sulphuric acid used in the manufacture of fertilizers, I would make the following statement:

The authorities on manures all coincide in recommending acids above a specific gravity of 1.625. In England brown oil of vitriol having a specific gravity of 1.7 is usually employed. From the above statement you will see that the manufacturers are probably right in their claims that the acid, as stated in the bill, is too weak for their uses.

Respectfully,

S. S. ROCKWOOD,
Chief Clerk, for Acting Secretary.

Hon. H. G. TURNER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

It is sufficiently apparent that the privilege which the manufacturers have hitherto had of free sulphuric acid and the consequent benefit which the Southern planters have had in the way of cheap fertilizers are at least to be placed somewhat at the mercy of the producers of sulphuric acid.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Is the sulphuric acid used in the preparation of the Southern phosphates made in the South?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. No, sir.

Mr. COLEMAN. Yes; I beg the gentleman's pardon. It is made in New Orleans.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I did not understand. Do you mean the fertilizer or the sulphuric acid?

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. I mean the acid with which they treat their phosphate to make the fertilizer.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The acid is manufactured at one or two remote points in the South, and I trust that the ores from which it can be produced can be found in our section as abundantly as our phosphate rock. This condition may modify the proposed hardship. This acid is a very cheap commodity and has always been free; but I want to tell the gentleman the secret of this business. Some enterprising countryman of his in New York has found somewhere over the Canadian border some advantageous conditions under which he can produce sulphuric acid cheaper than his competitors, and thereby afford to our people a still cheaper fertilizer; and for that reason his competitors have asked a duty to be put on this Canadian sulphuric acid.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to make a little further explanation?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I do not want to yield to the gentleman for an explanation, but if I can give the gentleman any information—

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. I wish to give you some information.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Then I hope my friend will get some one on his own side to give him the time for that purpose.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the House understand the real merits of the case.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will the gentleman co-operate with me in securing more time in order that I may oblige him?

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. That I can not do.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Then I hope my friend will excuse me.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. I presume the gentleman desires to give correct information to the House, and I can give him some information that perhaps may enable him to do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. Will you allow me one minute?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Evidently I can not do anything else than yield. The shortest way out is to let the gentleman give the information. I yield to him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair insists upon the rules of the House being complied with. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] is entitled to the floor. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I do yield.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the reason that the duty was asked for by the manufacturers of sulphuric acid in New England was because this enterprising New Yorker, to whom the gentleman refers, could manufacture it, having cheaper coal and cheaper labor, at a little less in Canada than we could in New England, and he told the Canadians that as acid was free in the United States—

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I can not yield to the gentleman farther.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. If they would put a duty of one-half cent per pound on acid from the United States, he would take from us the Canadian trade and ship his surplus to the United States.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I must resume the floor.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. They gave him this one-half cent of discriminating duty against this country, as it is free here, and we asked only one-fourth cent on acid used by manufacturers, leaving the acid for all agricultural purposes free.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts resume his seat?

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. If the gentleman from Massachusetts had heard what I endeavored to say and which he has said so much better, he would have been saved the trouble of this interruption.

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. You did not.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I hope my friend will forbear. I ask, if some enterprising manufacturer in New York has found some means by which he could cheapen the cost of fertilizers to my constituents, why should the gentleman come here and ask Congress to interpose to protect his constituents at the expense of mine?

Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts. I say it does not do so.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Then there is an issue which the gentleman and I will try when we get down to another jury. [Laughter.] But when I meet him here in December next we will talk it over again.

I would like to ask the gentleman, if the duty is not intended to afford protection to the gentleman's constituents, why he asked it to be put on at all. But I must hurry along, sir.

Tin-plate is an article of as universal consumption in this country as sugar. It is used in the palaces of the rich and in the hovels of the poor; it is of prime interest everywhere in this country, and, although the present duty of 1 cent a pound has not enabled any enterprising man in this country to make a pound of it, the price has nevertheless gone down on the other side of the Atlantic until even without American competition it has become so cheap here that even the poor man can use tin for the roof that shelters his family. But it is a competitor just now with iron roofing, lately the product of Ohio and Pennsylvania, and it must go. Whatever the pretext, it is proposed to increase the duty to 2.2 cents a pound. Under the existing duty of 1 cent a pound there has not been produced here a single pound of this necessary article. Why treat tin differently from the policy proposed for the sugar of Louisiana? They say that a protective duty has failed to develop the sugar interest to an extent sufficient to supply the domestic demand. They therefore propose to take the duty off sugar and give a temporary bounty in its stead. Tin is in exactly the same situation. The duty has encouraged nobody to produce it; and yet instead of coming to the logical result suggested by the treatment of the sugar interest by putting it upon the free-list, they have more than doubled the duty.

Now, let us see what the exaction will cost us. The duty on tin-plate now amounts annually to over $7,000,000. If you put this additional burden upon it that tax will aggregate more than $14,000,000, which will fall as a burden upon the poor people of this country.

I want to call attention now to the subject of tobacco. When we had the responsibility for tariff legislation in the House, two years ago, we proposed to take off not only the special taxes, but to make tobacco free in the Mills bill, and our friends on the other side, who were so eager for such a consummation as free tobacco, reproached us on every occasion because we did not make a distinct and separate proposition to make tobacco free; and yet now, when they have the responsibility and have the opportunity, they propose to strike off the pitiful sum of 2 cents a pound on tobacco, which according to all experience will inure, not to the benefit of the farmer, not to the benefit of the consumer, but will be so much added to the profits of the tobacco manufacturer.

I wish to call attention to the treatment of shipping and the ship-building interest of this country in this bill. I see my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], who is an expert in matters relating to that interest and who no doubt feels a profound interest in the subject, and I am glad that he can hear what I have to say.

This bill proposes to make free all the materials that enter into ship-building for the purpose of building ships for foreign owners as well as for American ships engaged in the foreign trade. There is one qualification to that statement. The ships built with these free materials are, by the terms of the bill, to be restricted to the foreign trade, except that those which are of American ownership may engage in the coastwise trade for two months in the year. Now, I ask the gentleman's attention to the unfairness of that proposition. On this Atlantic coast, from Savannah to New York, as well as from Boston to Charleston, and all along that coast from the Northern cities to points on the Gulf of Mexico, there are magnificent ships profitably employed in this coastwise traffic. Although the owners of these ships have to pay a price for their vessels which is augmented by the protective duties which are put on the materials of which they are built and have to pay enormous prices for their ships, it is proposed that for two months of the business season of the year, the time when cotton is offered for market, they shall have these "tramp" steamers built with free raw materials in New England going down there to compete with them in the coastwise traffic which has become so important an element in our internal commerce. Our people can not buy or build their ships which are engaged in the coastwise traffic so as to compete with these tramp steamers on the high seas, because they have to pay too high a price, but these ships that are to be built under this bill are to be allowed free raw materials and, as a result, a diminished cost, and then are to be permitted to come in and compete with these coastwise steamers for at least two months in the year.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is not the gentleman aware that that has been the law since 1872?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I am not, sir. It has not been the law.

Mr. DINGLEY. It has been the law as to wooden vessels. This is merely an extension of the law as to certain other materials.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman knows very well that the present law is very different.

Mr. DINGLEY. Except that this bill extends the existing law to material for iron vessels.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. But that is a very important difference. Iron and steel and such things are very important elements in the making of ships.

Now I wish to say a word or two on the subject of sugar as it is treated in this bill. The domestic production amounts, I believe, to about one-eighth of the total amount of sugar consumed in this country.

It is proposed by this bill to put all sugar of less grades than No. 16 according to the color test on the free-list. Now, under the standard of No. 16 color test nearly all the sugar produced in this country can be classified. Then, as a compensation to those who have been encouraged to make immense investments in the production of sugar and who are to be sacrificed here almost without a hearing, there is proposed a bounty of 1½ cents, up to 2 cents a pound for the higher grades going to 90 degrees polariscope test. Let me state here that this proposition offers this bounty only to those who produce annually at least 500 pounds of sugar. It will be seen at once that every small farmer and every freedman who does not produce more than that quantity per annum is excluded.

Although the region in which I live has never been regarded as a sugar-producing country, we can make with open kettles sugar ranking as high as 85 or 90 degrees, sugar which we have been hitherto making for our own use. This bounty of 2 cents will inure to the benefit of some of my constituents, although I have no doubt this beneficence was chiefly intended for the beet-sugar industry. For it must be remembered that the bill offers free machinery to manufacturers of beet sugar and denies it to those who make sugar from cane in the South. Now very many farmers in my section produce as much as two or three barrels of sugar for their own use every year, and also several barrels of sirup, the best made in this country. But under the operation of this bill there will not be a gallon of sirup made. Everything will be turned into sugar, because if they want sirup they can reconvert the sugar into sirup without much trouble. The result will be that the people of the United States will be paying to my constituents 2 cents a pound for the sugar which they make for their own consumption.

Mr. FUNSTON. That is all right.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. That may be all right, but will afford the country a very instructive object-lesson. The American production of sugar will amount to three hundred or three hundred and fifty million pounds this year, and the State of Louisiana will get out of the Treasury of the United States, from moneys paid by the tax-payers of the country at large, over $6,000,000.

There will be in that State a single planter, or a single plantation, that will get from the Treasury of the United States $160,000 in the way of bounty. In the fifteen years proposed for the duration of this bounty system, even if there is no increase of the production, there will be disbursed from the public Treasury over a hundred millions to growers of sugar. If protection, when converted into a bounty, reaches this immense sum on a single item of the tariff, the people of this country will soon begin to ask what they are paying in the way of protection to the manufacturers of the three or four thousand other articles on the tariff list.

And let it be remembered that the taxes taken off of sugar to the annual amount of nearly $60,000,000 are replaced upon other articles of necessity, chiefly produced at the North. Is this reciprocity you propose to your own countrymen?

Mr. DINGLEY. I thought the gentleman was complaining that Louisiana was crippled. [Laughter.]

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman will possess his soul in patience. [Laughter.] I was about to anticipate what the gentleman has intimated. The gentleman knows very well, for he is an astute Representative as well as very learned in matters relating to the tariff—he knows that he proposes that this bounty shall last only fifteen years and then wear itself out.

Now, on the point of discrimination, I ask him this question: Will he agree to take off all the protection which is placed upon the matters in which he is interested after fifteen years? And I tell the gentleman further that this object-lesson to which I have adverted will make the bounty system so infamous that it will go out of existence long before the proposed period of fifteen years has expired. Yet now the gentleman turns on me and says that in this bounty he proposes a piece of very great beneficence to my constituents. And this liberality, be it remembered, Mr. Speaker, is to be exercised with the money which the people of this country—my constituents, as well as others—have paid or will pay into the Treasury.

And I would like to ask my honorable friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] if it is not true that these great ships in which he is interested, and which his constituents have been trying to build for the last forty years, but which they have been unable to place on the high seas—if it is not true that that business of ship-building has gone down even under the protective duties which have been given to it until our flag has almost disappeared from the ocean? Yet the gentleman does not propose to the American people that ships shall be put on the free-list, although that is exactly the kind of treatment he proposes for the sugar of Louisiana, which is in simili casu.

I have not time to devote to any discussion of the constitutional bearings of this bounty system, which is only the equivalent at last of protective duties. My honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] says that it is "to be hoped" that some beneficent results will follow from the inauguration of the reciprocity proposed in this bill. I would like to know whether my friend is very sanguine about it. [A pause.] The gentleman does not answer. My opinion is that it is brutum fulmen so far as any result to the country is concerned in the way of freeing our traffic abroad.

But I object to this reciprocity, because it inaugurates a principle in our Government that is contrary to the Constitution. This bill proposes to invest the President of the United States with the power to enact law, not simply to execute it. It gives him the power when he thinks that these countries with which he desires reciprocal trade relations have been unfair to us—when he thinks that they have not offered commerce reciprocally fair he is to put certain rates prescribed in the bill on sugar, on hides, on coffee, and on tea. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to giving the President any such power; in the first place, because the Constitution devolves that duty on Congress; in the next place, because Congress is nearly always in session and can attend to its own business; and, in the last place, I am opposed to this reciprocity because, while the bill is itself a universal boycott against all other nations, it proposes to give the President a roving commission of marque and reprisal and to make him a buccaneer among our neighbors!

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after a pause). The present occupant of the chair is not advised as to any arrangement which may have been made in regard to the occupation of the time.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I presumed that gentlemen on the other side would indicate something they might wish to be done at this stage. We have already occupied more than an hour on this side. If gentlemen on the other side do not wish to go on, I would be very glad that some time might be yielded to our friends from Louisiana.

Mr. McKINLEY. I suggest that gentlemen on that side proceed now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hour and fifteen minutes have been occupied on that side.

Mr. FLOWER. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I shall address myself within the time allotted me to the "reciprocity" amendment tacked on to this bill by the Senate and reported back here favorably by the conference committee. I shall endeavor to show that the amendment is not the step towards reciprocity recommended by Mr. Blaine; that it is a mere political makeshift, intended as a "good enough Morgan until after the election," and absolutely worthless for any other purpose whatever.

What is reciprocity? It is an agreement between two nations for equal advantages as to customs duties and charges. It contemplates an extension of trade relations. It means traffic, that the people of both contracting nations shall have the right to buy as well as to sell. Now, reciprocity of that kind can have no place whatever in such a scheme as this McKinley bill. How could anybody look for such a thing? Who can expect these modern statesmen who control this Congress to go back to the exploded doctrines of Thomas Jefferson? Jefferson said ninety years ago, "Encourage agriculture, and commerce as its handmaid." Agriculture he put first. Agriculture was the mistress; commerce its handmaid, its servant to go abroad and bring back the good things from every quarter of the earth to the farmer.

All that has been changed. Agriculture herself is now a handmaid, the bond-servant of manufactures. She can not tell commerce to bring back to her from foreign countries the things which minister to her wants. The very purpose of this bill is to prevent that—in the language of the gentleman from Ohio in his report, "to check," to prevent imports. The farmer nowadays must be content to pick up what he can around home; to sit down at the home table, eating such things as are put before him by those whom he serves, "asking no questions for conscience' sake."

That is what this bill means. It means to exclude the farmer more thoroughly than ever from the foreign market. How? By raising duties all along the line—on hardware, on crockeryware, on glassware, on clothing, on everything except sugar. The Committee of Ways and Means when they were framing this bill saw its injustice; and they saw, too, that, while the manufacturers were growing richer and richer everywhere, the farmers remained poor and many of them were growing poorer. They saw also that the farmers had begun to combine for self-protection. The farmers must be appeased somehow.

How did this committee undertake to do it? First, by granting an increased duty on wool; but to compensate for that they have raised away up yonder the tariff still higher on clothing. Next, the farmer demanded free cotton-ties; the manufacturer demurred, and the duty was raised. The farmer demanded free bagging; the manufacturer demurred, and the duty remains. The Western farmers combined to have at least free twine; but the bagging trust demurred, and twine is put back upon the dutiable-list.

Mr. Blaine saw from the newspapers how this bill was being constructed, and on the 10th of February last he went before the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means and protested. But we heard nothing at that time of his visit or his protest. Never was a secret better kept. Not a whisper of it got abroad. It must have been a remarkable sight, that Eastern statesman there protesting, before these representatives of the Western farmer, that the farmer was maltreated in that bill. But the committee was sitting in secret conclave; the Republican members were there; there was no Democratic member present; there was no reporter there; the doors were closed.

Nobody knew anything about Mr. Blaine's protest. Doubtless the Ways and Means Committee hoped that that protest might pass away and nobody ever hear of it again. But Mr. Blaine, to use his own language, or language in the authorized statement put forth by Mr. Curtis, was determined that the Republicans "should not fall into the pit unwarned;" and so he went before the Senate committee in July last, the committee sitting with open doors, the Democratic members present; and he created a sensation.

What did he do there? What did he demand? In this authorized statement it is said: "Mr. Blaine, in the impetuous manner that is characteristic of him, declared that if sugar was placed on the free-list the greatest results sought for and expected by the International Conference would be sacrificed." What he wanted to prevent was the placing of sugar on the free-list; that is to say, he was willing that sugar should be made free, but what he demanded was that corresponding concessions should be made by other nations at the same time.

I hold in my hand a pamphlet, Mr. Speaker, which I got, and which I suppose any gentleman can get on application, from the State Department, relating to the duty on sugar, and on the title page is the language of Mr. Blaine:

Free sugar in the United States should be accompanied by—accompanied by free breadstuffs and provisions in Spanish America.

Mark this—

Here you do just what he protested against. You free sugar in this bill, but it is not accompanied by any corresponding concessions on the part of any other nation.

But this statement of Mr. Curtis goes on to show what Mr. Blaine said to the Committee on Ways and Means on the 10th day of February:

He begged the committee not to throw away the greatest opportunity ever offered for the extension of the trade of the United States, an opportunity that never would come again, if sugar was placed on the free-list—

Mark this—

If sugar was placed on the free-list without securing corresponding concessions from the sugar-growing nations which comprise 40,000,000 of people.

But—

Says this statement—

the committee were obstinate; they had decided to put sugar on the free-list and would not reconsider their determination.

What Mr. Blaine wanted was that the committee should reconsider their determination to put sugar on the free-list, and hold it in the hands of the Government as a price to be used in the negotiations which he contemplated. "But the committee * * * had decided to put sugar on the free-list and would not reconsider their determination. The tariff on other articles was increased, and, to sweeten that bitter pill to the farmers, free sugar was provided," says this statement.

That is why they did it. Now, after Mr. Blaine went before the committee the Senate undertook to tack on to the bill an amendment which you gentlemen, I suppose, propose to tell the people is to carry out Mr. Blaine's idea. If you do, you can not sustain the proposition. The Hale amendment was Mr. Blaine's idea. The statement by Mr. Curtis shows that Mr. Blaine exhibited an amendment similar to that which Mr. HALE, his friend, subsequently offered in the Senate, which I now hold in my hand. That Hale amendment is drawn on the idea that the ports of the United States should still be kept closed to the sugar-producing countries of the world by the present tariff until they should make corresponding concessions. The Senate rejected the amendment and put on an amendment that means—what? I have the amendment in my hand. It is—

Sec. 3. That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the 1st day of July, 1891, whenever and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the Government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw and uncured, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which, in view of the free introduction of such sugar, he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the production of such country, for such time as he shall deem just.

Now that amendment, every lawyer knows, is worth absolutely nothing, because it does not propose a law to go into effect upon the happening of some specific, definite event about which there can be no dispute. Oh, no. That sort of law, though it is only to go into effect in the future, is valid. That is what the Hale amendment did. It was to become effective upon proclamation by the President, based upon certain definite concessions first to be enacted into law by the countries with which we were to negotiate. But this Senate amendment leaves the President to judge whether or not the tariff laws of other countries, in view of our free sugar, are "unreasonable or unequal." It vests in the President authority which can be exercised only by Congress, the power to judge whether a law imposing duties on imports ought or ought not to be enacted. It is worthless for that reason. Congress has, and the President has not, the power to legislate.

But I will not dwell longer on that point. I pass on.

Even if the President had the power which you propose to vest in him by this same amendment, it would be worthless because Congress has thrown away the prize with which the President could negotiate. You can not expect something for nothing. You can not expect nations to release the duties upon which their Governments subsist unless you yourselves have something of value to give.

When the President goes to one of these nations and says, "You have certain tariff laws which are unequal and unreasonable, and I demand that you allow to be introduced free certain of our products," what will be the reply of such nation, say a sugar-producing country of South America? Such nation will say, "Your demand itself is unreasonable, Mr. President, and if I may use such an expression, it is an unequal demand, sir, for you do not make it on all nations, yet your sugar is free equally to all."

"Why, you did not reduce the duty on sugar for my benefit. You reduced it, as Mr. Blaine said, to meet a 'political exigency' at home. You did not trade with us. You were in such a hurry, as Mr. Blaine says, that you did not have time to make a trade. The elections were approaching, and you made sugar free for the benefit of your people, but you gave it to everybody. You gave it to Germany, that interdicts your pork, as you did to me, and you gave it to all nations, and so it is of no value to me whatever."

"When the ship with my sugar and the ship with German sugar come side by side into the port of New York they compete with each other there in a free market just exactly as they competed with each other in the taxed market before, and when the sugar gets in there competition regulates the price at which it is offered, and the taking off of the tax inures to the benefit of the people of the United States, and not to my benefit. Therefore you have offered me nothing. You can not increase my price. You can not put me in a better condition than you put other people."

The President will be bound as an honest man, as he is, to say, "I admit that. I can not do anything that would specifically benefit you; but I can do this: We have commenced reciprocity upon a new idea. We have put behind us all those ideas about 'peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations.' That was an old idea of Thomas Jefferson. We have put that away. We have raised the flag, a new flag, of tariff war against all nations. I can not put you in any better position than I put the other nations of the world, because I have already given to them free sugar just as I have given it to you, but I can put you in a worse condition, and I will do it. I will discriminate against you if you do not abolish your tariff duties and allow the products of my country to come in free."

What will be the response of that nation? "I will seek a market elsewhere for my sugar. The world is broad enough for me to find it." And, gentlemen, think for a moment. The whole product of sugar of the world amounts to about 5,876,000 tons. All of these 5,800,000 tons are used somewhere in the world. We import from Latin America less than 800,000 tons. Will you tell me that in a world consuming 5,800,000 tons there is not room enough for these South American countries to find a market for the sugar they now sell us? Why, of this world's supply 3,630,000 tons are beet sugar. Sir, a Republican President would never dare to ask reciprocity under this amendment with the beet sugar producing countries of Europe. That is just what you do not want. You are seeking continually to prevent reciprocity with them; by this bill you are barring out their products because you do not intend that our people shall have these cheap goods.

What is to prevent the countries of Europe from sending us their beet sugar, and then taking in return for their cheap goods the sugar that Latin America sends us? We get $1,600,000 worth of beet sugar now from Germany. This would be the result if we should wage a tariff war on our neighbors. We would drive all their trade to these European countries, with which they prefer to trade now. Great Britain sends to these countries now merchandise to the value of $152,584,000, although she only buys of them $97,542,000. We buy from those countries $199,960,000, and we export to them only $82,043,000.

These countries get their goods in England and elsewhere in Europe 40 or 50 per cent. cheaper than they can get them from us. I mean manufactured goods; and as for breadstuffs and provisions, the Argentine Republic and Uruguay are already dangerous competitors of ours even in Europe. Gentlemen are mistaken if they think these countries can not get along without our markets. We are good buyers, but they will not submit to be treated with injustice and inequality. Their trade naturally drifts away from us because our high tariff on raw materials makes high goods. We can compel our own people by law to pay high prices, and unfortunately we do, but we can not compel the South Americans.

Gentlemen may plead for subsidies, as they do here time and again, and say we would have more trade with South America if we had subsidized ship lines. But there never was a greater mistake. There are five regular lines of steamships between the United States and Brazil now. They brought us last year $53,000,000 worth of goods; they took back only $7,000,000, and these largely agricultural products. We must reduce our tariff if we want a profitable exchange of commodities.

Mr. Speaker, when we have made sugar free by this bill we have given away all the capital we had to trade on for reciprocity. We have done precisely what Mr. Blaine warned the committee not to do. Let me quote the words of the authorized statement of what he said to the Ways and Means Committee February 10:

He demonstrated to the committee that the removal of the duty on sugar and the increase of the duty on beans and other farm products which we do not import was not going to relieve the farmer from the depression of prices. But—the committee were obstinate. They had decided to put sugar on the free-list and would not reconsider that determination. The tariff upon many other articles was increased, and to sweeten the pill free sugar was provided.

Says the statement—

What Mr. Blaine wanted and demanded was that they should reconsider and not put sugar on the free-list, but keep it so that free sugar should be accompanied by, that is, come simultaneously and only in company with, "free breadstuffs and provisions in Spanish America." This was what Mr. Blaine said in his letter of June 19 to Mr. Imbs. In his letter to Mr. FRYE he said that we ought to have demanded of Brazil free admission for our products when we made coffee free in this country. And then he said:

To repeat this error with sugar (to an amount three times as large as with coffee) will close all opportunity to establish reciprocity of trade with Latin America.

What free sugar will do is to lower the prices to the American consumer. That it will do this there is no doubt.

That is what it was intended to do, and you will all say it on the stump when you go home, and it will be true; and I do not object to it, but every time you say it there will be the echo of Mr. Blaine's voice coming back from every well-informed man who hears you, "Yes, but it was done to meet this 'political exigency,' it was done to sweeten the pill—this high tariff which you force upon the people; it was done in such a hurry that you did not have time to see if you could make a better trade; it was done in such a way as not to 'open a market for another bushel of wheat or another barrel of corn.'"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] to yield five minutes to me.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would be glad to if I could, but I can not. I have promised all my time.

Mr. McKINLEY. I yield five minutes of our time to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HERBERT. I thank the gentleman from Ohio.
